WHEAT PAYMENT

TO BE 33 CENTS; TOTAL FOR KENTUCKY WILL BE $308,000

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has notified the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture that wheat benefit payments this year will be 33 cents a bushel, and that Kentucky farmers will receive approximately $308,000 for cooperating in the wheat adjustment program.

The first payment will be cents a bushel, and the second 13 cents less local costs or administering the adjustment program. Last year's payment was 29 cents less local costs.

The first payment will be due farmers as soon as their compliance forms have been checked up and approved in Washington. The measuring of wheat acreages has been completed in the state, and compliance forms from many counties have been received at the state office at the Agricultural Experiment Station.

As rapidly as the forms are received they will be checked for accuracy and completeness, and forwarded to Washington, or returned to county committees if found improperly executed.

AAA WHEAT ELECTION

The Boone County wheat growers who have signed AAA wheat contracts will meet at Burlington, Thursday evening, July 25th at 7:30 P. M., to elect officers for the coming year.

DECIDED GAINS OVER CORRESPONDING PERIOD LAST YEAR

Retail trade in the majority of centers throughout the country showed improvement over the previous week, the Louisville district office was advised this week that Department of Commerce reports from 33 cities revealed. With the exception of isolated cases, there were decided gains over the corresponding period last year. While the reports largely epitomized activities for the week ended Wednesday, July 17, they revealed that in many areas a ground work of improved conditions has been taking shape for several weeks. Stocks on retailers' shelves were reported as being low in many instances and wholesalers were enjoying some activity in fill-in orders.

Louisville reported: Retail sales continued on an average 10 per cent to 15 per cent above same week a year ago. Louisville bank clearings off 9.2 per cent same week last year. All crops responded nicely to favorable weather. Hot, sunny days with cool nights and plenty of dew greatly helped tobacco and corn. Considerable additional population expected in Louisville area when the Federal government builds vast gold depository vaults at Fort Knox.

REUBEN HUNTER ONE OF FIFTY TO OFFER BLOOD TESTS RECENTLY TO ACCIDENT VICTIM

Tragedy ended a picnic Sunday when Reuben Hunter, 18 years old, Bedinger Avenue, Elsmere, drowned in a pond on Dudley pike, Kenton county.

Hunter and Richard Feldhaus, Elsmere, one of his companions on the picnic, were rowing about the lake in the afternoon when Hunter lost his balance and fell into the water. He sank before aid could reach him.

Numerous efforts were made to reach him by diving. William Crowell, 17, Garvey Avenue, Elsmere, member of the Erlanger Boy Scout Troop, recovered his body.

Members of the Covington Life Saving Squad made a hurried run to the scene with a pulmotor, but efforts to revive Hunter were futile.

Dr. James P. Riffe, County Coroner, returned a verdict of accidental drowning.

The Hunter youth was one of about 50 persons who offered to submit to blood transfusions last Wednesday to save the life of Robert Carr, 18 years old, Florence, who was dying at St. Elizabeth Hospital, Covington, from the effects of a rifle bullet fired accidentally into his left knee.

A septicemia infection later caused Carr's death. He accidentally shot himself in the knee July 7th, when cleaning a rifle at his home.

Services for the Carr youth were held at the Allison and Rose funeral home, Covington. Burial was in Highland cemetery. Young Hunter was to have been a pal bearer.

Philip Tallafiero had charge of the funeral arrangements.

UTOPIA TOUR

MANY COMPLETE FARM ACCOUNT RECORDS ARE KEPT BY UTOPIANS

People often ask what Utopia Club members do. Those Utopians who attend the regular monthly meetings often wonder what others who are enrolled in Utopia club work do in reference to project work.

Those who attended the annual 4-H tour held last Thursday found the answers to these questions in an interesting form. Many of the most complete farm account records in the county were found kept by Utopians, appetizing vegetables and fruits canned by latest and most approved methods were displayed by members, complete clothing cost account records, beautiful lawns and flowers developed through landscaping projects, small fruit developments that are paying and have paid good cash returns, good purebred dairy herds being developed and other important lines of endeavor toward agricultural and home economics improvement were seen. These were Utopia club projects conducted by Utopia members and represented the work being conducted at home by Utopians during the year.

Inspection of the work leads one to believe not only in this particular line of endeavor but in all educational work. Huge profits in future economic and social returns are sure to be paid.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilford Rouse and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Julius Smith were the Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Bledsoe at the home of Mr. Bledsoe's parents in Warsaw, Ky. Quite a number of friends from various parts of Ky. were present and everyone enjoyed the day.

UNEARNED MONEY

The extreme proof to us of the great goodness and mercy of the Lord is His toleration of the prayers He hears. After the model the Son gave us, we take more latitude with praying than in anything we know. There may be those who could prove that we are exceedingly dumb, but of all the dumb things as we analyze it, the dumbest is the chain letter method of getting rich. Suppose you got some money, whose money would it be? Our idea always has been to earn any money we got, and the farthest thing from our weak little mind would be wanting to get some money at somebody else's expense. We will say that the only successful 5-name chain letter scheme could be worked by the Boone quint. So if Anette, or Yvonne happened to get the five dimes, at least it would still be in the family.

CIVIC PRIDE

A community that makes headway must have a certain amount of civic pride. A stranger that passes through a town will notice a number of things. One of the first things that is noticed is the condition of the public school yard. As a rule the school house is located on the edge of a community and is first seen by anyone entering the town. Such is the case in Burlington. And what a sight our local ground makes at present. It would give an unfavorable impression to anyone. This is due to the fact that the grass and weeds are permitted to grow at random. The school grounds should be kept as nicely as the Court House grounds. These weeds and grass should be mowed and kept in shape. The expense would be a mere trifle and the effect would be very good to our community. Whoever has the authority should certainly attend to the matter.

National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—The fact that Senator Millard E. Tydings of Maryland is so far off the Roosevelt reservation is of far more political significance than most persons not interested in figuring electoral vote tables realize.

The Maryland senator had just been successfully called off his Virginia Islands inquiry, and his law with Secretary of the Interior Ickes a more or less muzzled, but that is not important, not to anyone who knows Tydings, and Maryland. Washington opinion about that particular row is that the people Tydings wanted to protect will be protected from the wrath of Ickes, in return for Tydings' pipit down on his public utterances.

Maryland has only eight electoral votes, but is interesting because the state always goes Democratic in years when the Democrats win, nationally, and is as independent as the proverbial hog on ice at all times.

For example, in a Democratic sweep, in 1934, Maryland elected a Republican governor, the third since the Civil war. And each of the others served only one term. Yet at the same election, the state elected six Democratic members of the house, and a Democratic senator.

To make the situation clear, it should be understood that there were three or four important reasons why Albert C. Ritchie, the Democratic candidate for a fifth term, was not re-elected. He had angered the eastern shore section of the state by trying to prosecute leaders of a lynching mob. He was held responsible for several important banks. And he was a good deal of sentiment about continuing the same man in office so long. No other governor of Maryland had ever been re-elected once. He was seeking a fifth term.

But it is interesting to note that the one man who was sure Ritchie could not be re-elected, and who as a result tried to get him to run for senator—which would seem at least to indicate the opposition was not personal—was Senator Tydings.

He's Top Dog in Maryland

Tydings very early in the game picked George L. Radcliffe for the Democratic nomination for governor. Later, on a compromise, Radcliffe ran for senator and was elected.

All of which means that Tydings is by way of being the top dog in Democratic politics in Maryland at the moment. Moreover, he is not worried about the immediate future, for he does not come up for re-election until 1938, two years after the Presidential election. And Maryland has a habit of always going Democratic in off years.

It so happens that Maryland is almost the most conservative state in the Union. Five of her 13 districts—all except that sixth—always send rather conservative men to the house. She once elected a practically unknown figure, Senator Joseph I. France, to the upper house because she was voting against a man she regarded as a radical—David J. Lewis. The chief charge against Lewis was that he was socialistically inclined—he had fathered the parcel post bill! Maryland, a border state, always went Democratic in national elections until the free silver issue. She voted for McKinley in 1896 and 1900, split her electoral vote in 1904, voted for Wilson in both 1912 and 1916, and then voted for Harding, Coolidge and Hoover.

There is little doubt that the state does not like the New Deal. If the election were held today, and a fairly unobjectionable Republican opposed Roosevelt, there is little doubt he would get Maryland's eight votes.

There is something ultra-conservative about both Maryland and Virginia. It is rather interesting that Carter Glass, Henry F. Byrd, and Tydings are always found voting together. The other Maryland senator, Radcliffe, happens to be a close personal friend of Roosevelt, but, as pointed out, he was put in the senate by Tydings, and has yet to demonstrate either real power in the state or political sagacity.

Brings Up Borah

Talk of William E. Borah for the Republican nomination against Franklin D. Roosevelt next year is one of the most interesting political and economic developments since 1932. Not that there is actually very much of a possibility that the seventy-year-old senator will be nominated, it is because of the various developments and repercussions which started the talk.

What it really means is that for the first time since the Republicans lost all but six states, in 1932, they are beginning to chirp up. They are beginning to think that there may be a possibility of winning in 1936. Until the last few weeks—in fact, right up to the tax message—they had been saying privately that 1936 was too soon to hope for; that 1940 would be their red letter day.

The whole psychology at the present moment is based on taxes. The American people are becoming tax-conscious—federally as well as by counties and townships. When Clemenceau remarked to Woodrow Wilson that the average Frenchman would gladly die for his country, but he would not pay taxes to support it, his very accurate comment appealed to the American sense of humor. But not any more. The average American also is beginning to figure that it may be very glorious to go out and die for one's country, try on the battlefield, but it's tough to have to do without this or that or the other thing he wants, or his wife wants, just because taxes take so much of his total income.

Curiously enough this tax consciousness, though it may have been in incubation for some time past, did not hatch out until the President sent his tax message to congress. It was discussion of the amounts the various levies would raise, on top of all the fuss about processing taxes making the cost of bread and bacon and shirts and underwear and what not higher, that started folks talking out loud. It was the realization that sooner or later it was old John Taxpayer, in the middle walks of life, who would have to foot the bill for all these New Deal experiments.

More About Taxes

You are going to hear a great deal more about taxes, now that critics of the New Deal have realized what is happening. Plenty of oil will be poured on the smoldering fires. Attention will be called to many taxes which most folks pay without realizing they are taxes. For example, the federal levy of six cents a pack on cigarettes. And one cent of each three for a letter is pure tax, levied for tax purposes. Attention will be directed to how much of the cost of a pound of ham or bacon is tax; that the cost of everything is boosted by the fact that the producers and merchants have to pay such high taxes.

Meanwhile Senator Borah is a wonderful bridge between the conservative and progressive Republican wings. He happens to be opposed to most of the New Deal ideas, and no one has hit out more strongly on what the Republicans had been hoping would be the issue—preserving the Constitution.

But talk about Borah serves a very important purpose—it sidetracks speculation about Herbert Hoover. And talk about Hoover is regarded by most Republicans as the high water mark of defeatism.

"You don't re-employ the chauffeur who wrecked your car," as one of them put it.

If the Republicans could be gotten enthusiastic about some one else, and give full vent to their opposition to Roosevelt, some other candidate, against whom there might not be much serious opposition, might easily be nominated—and elected. Some one preferably who would not arouse animosity against himself.

Truth About Roosevelt

All sorts of weird stories are drifting back to Washington about President Roosevelt. Most of them relate to his alleged reactions to certain recent events. Particularly the Supreme court's NRA decision, and the tax message. An interesting point is that apparently all the stories have as their chief basis the way the President is alleged to have acted at press conferences.

The truth is nothing like as spectacular as the stories, but it is rather interesting. Being as the stories seem to center on the way Mr. Roosevelt acted at two press conferences, perhaps a brief summary of those two particular occasions would be worth while.

In the first, and most discussed, though actually less interesting one, the President met the newspaper men on Wednesday morning, following the decision by the high court of the NRA case on the previous Monday. Thus, he had nearly 48 hours in which to make up his mind what to say to the newspapers of the country.

Many stories have been printed, mostly by columnists who were not present, and got their information second-hand at best, though obviously more out of their own mental concoctions of how the President should have felt, that the President was visibly angered, that he was approaching the hysterical, etc.

The truth is that the President very carefully sent up a trial balloon, and planted the seeds of some excellent propaganda looking toward a constitutional amendment which would give congress the power to determine hours of labor and minimum wages in intra-state commerce.

He very obviously took the same pleasure from his talk with the reporters that a crack cabinetmaker takes in putting the finishing touches on a job, or that a lawyer takes when he thinks of just the right touch to give a difficult case, or a golfer when he successfully calculates the precise roll to sink a 20-foot putt.

Did a Good Job

The other, and more interesting, press conference was shortly after his tax message. This was far different, and far more difficult. The President fenced and parried with the newspaper men, because he had decided it was necessary to put over the idea that the White House had not changed its strategy in the middle of the play, but that two senators had entirely misunderstood him.

Roosevelt knew perfectly well, as he talked with more than a hundred fairly sharp newspaper men, that not a man in the room believed what he was saying. Every man there believed the senators had understood him correctly and had expressed the White House views—that the senators were now willing to take the blame as politicians have done from the beginning of time, on the theory that the king is always right.

This destroyed the possibility of the normal Roosevelt approach in handling newspaper men.

Considering the difficulties, Franklin Roosevelt did an excellent job. He forced out to the public what he wanted out, but he was obviously fencing, obviously at high tension. Yet he never lost his temper.

THE GARDEN

CULTIVATION

(By John S. Gardner, Ky. College of Agriculture)

Many gardeners "work" their gardens quite too violently and too much. A common idea is that the ground must be deeply stirred, in fact, to the extent that roots are disturbed. An old-fashioned criterion by which to judge the thoroughness of a "working" was that the more roots that clung to the cultivator teeth the better. The wilting that invariably followed was regarded as part of treatment to toughen the plants. True, it was a test of their fitness to survive.

It is the endeavor of any plant to establish a balance between top and root; in fact, there must be such balance for the plant to continue living. Especially must the roots be and remain adequate to supporting top-growth. If, as in violent "working," part of the root system is destroyed, the plant stops growing until the lost root area has been replaced. In moist seasons the time this root may be short, but in dry weather the setback may become serious, for plants have been known not to recover. From the plant's standpoint, then, deep, close working is wrong, and from that of the gardener, much more so, because of the extra labor that has gone into the operation.

All that cultivation may hope to do is to control weeds. The time to stop weeds is before they have become serious as competitors with the vegetables, for plant food and moisture. That is, while they are still small. Small and shallow-rooted, they can be up-ended by only shallow stirring, in fact, by merely shaving the soil surface. That sort of cultivating breaks up whatever soil crust may have formed, leaving the surface in excellent condition to absorb even light rains. The surface is left level, too, an advantage particularly in dry seasons and in wet times, too.

Skimming level soil surface with a hand hoe or a garden plow is rapid and requires a minimum of labor, as contrasted with deep chopping and hilling or rigging. To do it properly a hand hoe may need to be adjusted. This is done by holding the hoe-blade 15 to 18 inches before the shoe-tip and bending it backward or forward so that it lies flat on the ground. If a garden plow is to be had, the skimming knives, called "beet knives" by commercial gardeners, should be procured. These come ready-adjusted or, at most, it is necessary merely to raise or lower the handles of the plow to the position most comfortable to the user. This is not difficult, requiring merely a small wrench or a pair of pliers.

Any person who makes the change from deep, dangerous culvation to merely a shallow skimming of the soil will not change back, for the well-being of his crops and the ease and speed with which he can cover his garden will have convinced him.

Tadpole Refuses

Henry D. Carter's tadpole has just celebrated its fourth birthday. Four years ago he noticed two of three in his cistern northwest of town, and took them under observation, expecting them to turn into bullfrogs in due time. Instead they continued to grow as tadpoles. Last year, one of them turned into a frog and died, while the other one continues about four inches long, with apparently no thought of changing.—Mayfield Messenger.

He's Not First

Man To Learn This
Maybe this marriage business isn't what it's represented to be after all.

Charlie Lander, the colored boy at the H & H garage who has been married quite a while now, says: "Ah ain't had me no chicken since I left Mammy, no suh, I sho ain't. Seems like all mah wife can cook is white soup beans and I sho is gittin' tired of them beans."—Dawson Springs Progress.

Anything May Happen, It Seems

Almost anything may happen in this strange year 1935. Dust storms and floods have been of about equal frequency. So perhaps there's nothing so very astounding about the behavior of a White Killarney rose in Dr. Louis Bosworth's yard at 117 South Ashland avenue. It's in its third year, and the first two years it bore the white roses it was supposed to bear. Now a pink rose has appeared on the bush, along with the expected white ones. This is probably causing a lot of talk among the other flowers in the garden.—Lexington Leader.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

WHEN a homemaker requires assistance with her work, she has opportunity for preference about what that help shall be. Whatever will relieve her most is what she should choose. It may be that the homemaker is strong and well, but finds more work to do than can be accomplished by one pair of hands. Let us consider that she likes to clean her rooms and has sufficient strength.

What she may need, then, may be to have the washing and ironing done. These are time-consuming jobs. To be released from them allows the homemaker two extra days a week, more or less, according to the amount of laundry work her family needs. Many a homemaker has to be relieved of the work of laundering for a week or even when she can manage to do the rest of the washing and ironing, or at least the rest of the ironing when the clothes require only finishing, having been washed by some one else.

Sewing.

It may be that the homemaker finds sewing, nervous work, and she would rather be relieved of this, even though it is not physically difficult nor tiresome. It is as hard to be nervously tired as physically weary. When the homemaker is one who is sewing a strain, she is wise to have help in this work. Those who find sewing a relief from more strenuous work, can scarcely appreciate the help of help in this work. Help with the harder tasks would seem to be more suitable, but it is for the homemaker to decide what it is that she, herself, craves to be relieved of.

There are homemakers who want above everything else to be relieved of the daily routine of ordinary household tasks. Such women may find laundry work and cleaning they can get done without any difficulty. But the continual round of washing dishes, daily dusting, chamber work and those small tasks which most housewives find not at all hard, these homemakers find irritating. Then, if possible, help should be had for these tasks. There are women who can be had to come in each day and do just such work.

Help Most Needed.

It is what the homemaker wants most that should determine the kind of help she should get. If first she should know whether better planning would not save her the expense of a hired helper. Then she should realize her own strength and appreciate that if this is not great, to save herself she requires aid in physically wearying labor. It is when work is too much for one person that choice is widest in the type to get. Such a homemaker may be in perfect health, but pressed for time. Whatever help releases the most hours and minutes is her special need.

It is a recognized fact that homemakers have different methods of accomplishing the same results. Nor is this confined to those who housework. There are endless sinning methods, accounting methods, bookkeeping methods, etc. Since there are so many different kinds of work in the business of homemaking, and each kind has many good methods of accomplishment, it is a mistake to expect all members of a family to follow any one system.

Willing Workers.

To relieve friction and continue to have willing and helpful hands in a family, it is important that no one insists on a pet method being followed. Even the mother, who has carefully trained her daughters in certain methods, finds, when they are no longer little girls, that their individuality asserts itself in a desire and often a pronounced determination to follow their own methods. This may be because one has noticed other ways of doing things in the homes of her friends and she feels these are better than those she learned. Or it may be that she has thought out her own method and wants to demonstrate their good points. Or it may be a reaction against home rules.

For Very Young Ladies

A clothes closet that grows up along with the "littlest girl" of the household—is a novel idea contained in a recent issue of McCall's. Its features are: a low rod that can be raised as dresses and coats are lengthened; easily reached compartments for shirts, panties, sweaters and sleepers—so that Sister Sue learns to put everything in its place; a section for hats and berets. On one door is a hook for her nightie and a rack for her bedroom slippers. Above them on a painted blue background sails a new moon and silver stars—an indication that the garment below is for slippers. On the door opposite is a tinted rising sun, a reminder that the bathrobe hung beneath is for morning wear. Painted on each compartment are the names of the garments to be found within—to help the littlest girl learn her letters.

Famous Painted Canyon

an Unusual Formation

California is noted for strange things that nature has given it, but among the strangest Painted Canyon deserves a preferred classification, says a writer in the Los Angeles Times. Just a short distance off the main highway in the gray sands, the landscape changes, with sand and mud hills bulging from the earth, and beyond them, just a little way, rise rock formations giving every indication that they were built up over a long period of time by volcanic action.

Each section of Painted Canyon is a panorama of wonder. No two parts bear a semblance in detail. All types of rock, lime and sandstone, and lava formations that may be found in the Southwest are here assembled, yet mixed with a gorgeous freedom and weird artistry that fascinates both the layman and scientist, and lures one up the long washes that time and water have laid in this old sanctuary, set far from the paths of man's common travel and toil.

Other smaller canyons are Wonderland, Labyrinth, Coyote, Hermosa, Ravine, Arch and Wonder. They extend back for miles into the strange-looking mountains, each having an individuality of color, each seeming a little world of its own to excite wonder and urge the sightseer on to other spots. Pinnacles jut upward that defy scaling. There are other formations in miniature which give the visual impression of flying over a fantastic mountain range with thousands of peaks and valleys.

Dead Leaves Decompose, Make Good Top-Dressing

Leaves ferment with a very gentle heat, and provide a mild top-dressing fertilizer, which does not coax tree roots to the surface, as might other soil-enriching substances. But they do keep the soil in sufficiently good tilth, to encourage seed germination and the growth of young trees. And let us not forget, says a writer in the Montreal Herald, that they have done good work! Every leaf has played its part in producing timber growth! From air, sun, rain and wind it has gathered wood making, as well as tree-breathing material.

Along tiny channels not to be seen by the naked eye, it passes its supporting twig, which sends it along from branch to branch, and from branch to tree-trunk, in the process combining with the products of other leaves, and canals, to be digested and transformed into sawwood, enriching the trunk ring by ring. Next year, the succeeding ring will enclose this year's growth, by its embracing pressure hardening it, and adding to the circumference of the trunk, which is the final purpose of the living existence of every single leaf that lives its useful life between winter and winter.

Peace Conference of 1861

In January, 1861, the legislature of Virginia passed a resolution inviting the states to appoint delegates to meet at Washington to consider an adjustment of the national difficulties then pending. This conference met February 4 and adjourned February 27. Twenty-one states were represented. As a result of its deliberations, a constitutional amendment was proposed which prohibited slavery north of the parallel of 36 degrees 30 minutes northern latitude; south of this line it was to exist without restraint. It denied the right of passing laws giving freedom to slaves temporarily in the free states or to fugitive slaves, and forbade congress to control slavery in the southern states, but prohibited the slave trade. The amendment was brought up in the senate, but failed of introduction in the house.—Boston Post.

Armenia

At the close of the Russian revolution following the World war, Armenia established itself as a republic and in 1920 put out its first set of distinctive stamps. Toward the end of the same year it became a federated Soviet republic and in 1921 issued Soviet stamps. In 1922 with Azerbaijan and Georgia it organized the Transcaucasian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic. This country lying south of Caucasus and the Black sea and north of Persia claims to have been the first nation to adopt the Christian religion. Its capital is at Eriwan and the capital of the federation is at Tiflis.

Fake Castle Ruin Famous

Although a fake, Rothley "Castle" at Rothley, England, has become so famous that it is to remain as part of the scenery and any attempt to destroy it will meet with the opposition of Rothley citizens. It stands on a commanding position on a lofty and rugged crag. It has a square tower and a curved wall, embattled and loop-holed, and each wing ends with a bastion. The structure was built by the late Sir Walter Caverly Blackett merely to decorate the landscape.

Machinery in Moth's Head

The head of a butterfly or moth contains the eyes, a pair of antennae or feelers, and a long and delicate apparatus which we call the tongue, the latter often being seen coiled up like a tiny spiral spring at the base of the head. This tongue varies in length with different species. The great death's head hawk moth, the largest British moth, has one five inches in length, while some of the smaller butterflies and moths can extend it to over an inch.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

LIME MAKES BIG CROP

Mr. Chester Aylor, of near Burlington, reports that this year he cut twenty-eight loads of clover and clover and timothy mixed hay from a nine acre field limed in 1929. Twenty-nine loads were cut from this same field the first year after liming in 1929.

Mr. Aylor reports the same field would not hold grass or profitably grow any other crop before it was limed and manured. The ground limestone was crushed by the State Crusher in 1928 and manure was applied with the limestone. Red clover, sweet clover, soy beans and good grasses have been grown each year since.

The above experience is not an exception to the rule according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Those Boone county farmers who have followed out recommendations on the growing of legumes and grasses following limestone and phosphating and where possible manure have secured wonderful results in soils and crops improved.

Farmers through the K. R. R. C. Lime Program now have an opportunity to get limestone crushed at the lowest cost in history. Mr. R. W. Autton will begin crushing stone in Boone county under this program on about August 10th. Farmers who do not use relief labor can have their stone crushed at a cost of 55 1/2 cents per ton or with relief labor at a cost of 77c per ton with all labor supplied. Farmers desiring stone crushed should leave their orders at the County Agent's Office in Burlington.

Union county farmers delivered 3,000 pounds of wool to the Wool Growers' Association at Henderson. Members of the Henry Clay homesteaders club, Pike county, are building a two-room club house.

Old Terrapin Is Found With Date 1912 On Back

Ellis Bailey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Bailey, of near Elizabethtown, found a terrapin in a timothy field on the farm of Samuel Rosenstiel where he was cutting hay, Monday, which had an inscription carved on the bottom shell of the terrapin.

The carving read "W.C.R. April 18, 1912," and are the initials of W. C. Rosenstiel, who carved them on the shell over 23 years ago. The turtle had remained on this farm all these years. It is not known what age the terrapin is, but it is not an unusually large one.

If anyone has a terrapin story to beat this one, bring it in.—Fairmouth Outlook.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Matt Kearney, young American living in London, says good-bye to his sister Eileen, on board the steamer Wallaroo bound for Colombo. The Wallaroo is conveying $2,000,000 in gold to Australia. Eileen has a presentiment of coming evil, which affects her brother. On his way home Kearney meets an old friend, Inspector Dawson Haig, of Scotland Yard, who is very much in love with Eileen. Haig is on the trail of opium, which he is convinced is concealed in Jo Lung's warehouse. Called to other duty, Haig delegates Kearney, with Detective Norwich, to visit the place and find out what he can.

CHAPTER II.—They find the place a veritable treasure house, and Kearney recognizes jewels stolen from his aunt. While in the warehouse he picks up a notebook. Soon after leaving Kearney, Norwich is murdered. Haig is puzzled over cryptic notes in the book, referring to stops to be made by the Wallaroo.

CHAPTER III.—Yu-an Hee See, high-born Chinaman, whom Haig has long been seeking as the leader of a band of international thieves, is at Jo Lung's. Discovering the loss of his notebook, he sends two of his followers after Norwich and Kearney, one of whom he realizes must have picked it up. Norwich's murder follows, but Kearney is not overtaken. While Haig is poring over the book alone in Kearney's room, a monstrous creature enters, seizes it, and escapes.

CHAPTER IV.—Kearney's story of bearing horrible laughter while at Jo Lung's place satisfies Haig his quarry was in hiding there, he recognizing the peculiar malignancy of Yu-an's laugh.

CHAPTER V.—Eileen Kearney, writing to Haig, tells of a joyful fellow passenger, a clever Austrian, Doctor Oestler. At Cairo Yuan confers with his lieutenant, Aswami Pasha, known among the gang as the "Chief," over a mysterious coup they are planning. Haig goes to Marseilles, where he meets Eileen when she goes ashore with Doctor Oestler. The inspector boards the Wallaroo, disguised. From radio messages he decodes, he realizes Oestler, with others on board, are members of Yu-an's gang and that they have recognized him.

CHAPTER VI.—A huge Chinaman tries to throw Haig overboard but goes over himself in a desperate struggle. At Port Said Eileen disappears.

CHAPTER VII.—Haig, trailing Eileen and Doctor Oestler, is lured into a drug-impregnated "bath of feathers." Oestler reports that he left Eileen shopping, and though under suspicion, his story cannot be shaken. Haig escapes from the deadly trap and shoots Joseph, one of the plotters. Eileen, who has been drugged, regains consciousness in an Arabian mansion. Yu-an's headquarters.

CHAPTER VIII.—Haig takes Joseph's papers, and reports Eileen's kidnapping to the British consul, Oestler and Miss Edman, an accomplice, mysteriously disappear from the Wallaroo and appear at Yu-an's headquarters in Arabia. It is evident as Yu-an and Aswami Pasha talk that they intend to capture or sink the Wallaroo. Using Joseph's credentials, Haig makes his way to Kenah, Arabia.

CHAPTER IX.—Yu-an's cut-throat gang gathers for final instructions from Aswami Pasha as to capturing the Wallaroo's cargo of gold the next day in the Red sea. Haig begins to perceive Yu-an's monstrous plot, to seize the gold, but all his thoughts are centered on the rescue of Eileen. Impersonating Joseph, he is assigned to guard duty outside Yu-an's mansion. The girl sees him from a window, and is heartened. Haig also has seen her.

In a long, rectangular room on the first floor of the house on the hill Yu'an Hee See's rogues were gathered.

The Wasp was excitedly arguing with the one-eyed Chinaman and Franz, the Brandenburg. Len Chow was deep in conversation with Jo Lung and a villainous-looking Arab known as Ali. At a table Doctor Oestler sat, apparently pleading with the gloomy, debauched Macles. Uncle Tom and Kid Brown were drinking stout from tankards.

There were a dozen other faces which must have been recognizable by anyone who had been privileged to enter that room in the Restaurant Suleiman Bey in Paris on a certain night when Dawson Haig had sat waiting below. Wine flowed freely.

Remarks were being shouted in many tongues when, suddenly, Doctor Oestler stood up. "Orders!" he cried. The clamor subsided—died away—a curtain was drawn aside, and Aswami Pasha entered. He was greeted with a roar of welcome. He smiled, and nodded his handsome head to right and left. Then he raised both hands—silence fell again.

"My friends," he said, "you speak many tongues, but all of you, I think, a little English, so I will address you in English. Tonight you have been entertained and I trust are very happy. But after one more drink all round, you will go to your quarters, and you will sleep; because tomorrow is the day for which we have been called together again from all over the world."

He paused. The silence was so complete that men could be heard breathing.

"Every man knows his job and what is expected of him," Aswami went on.

"Every man knows also what is coming to him if he fails. You have enjoyed success in the past. You have all been made rich by the man you serve. If you are all poor again tonight, this is your own concern. Another chance is being given to you. And this time the share-out will be enormous."

As he paused again, an excited murmur rose.

"Enormous," he repeated. "I need not tell you what the folly of one man may mean to all of us. Failure is always paid for here in one way, and in one way only. But failure tomorrow would certainly mean death for every man concerned. We shall sail at four o'clock in the afternoon; every man back of us with a noose around his neck—and so every man will watch his neighbor. And a short shrift, say I, to any backsliders."

A great roar, like that of a pack of wolves suddenly aroused, greeted his last words. Aswami waved his hand, and went out, sped by a hoarse cheer. Doctor Oestler followed.

Kid Brown stumbled across the room to the drunken Macles' side. "Is it an English ship, mate?" he whispered.

The Scotsman's bleary eyes fixed themselves upon him. There was an interval, and then "I ken it is. I've worked out a' the position—an' this will be the old Wallaroo, thirteen thousand tons, out fro' London to Brisbane."

Aswami Pasha sat behind a large writing table. Kid Brown, battle-scarred, stood before him. "Am I to regard this interview, Brown," said the Egyptian, "as a piece of private blackmail?"

Kid Brown took a step forward. The Egyptian's hand dropped below the table.

"Listen!" said Brown. "I've been your bodyguard for three years, and I've done well out of it. There's been some bloody dirty work, though I say so, but I've done it! The German steamer was a bit 'ot, but I never liked Germans. The nigger trade don't worry me. The American yacht was fair game. Capitalists and their fancy dreams ought all to go the same way. But this 'ere English liner—I don't want to go tomorrow. . . ."

"Your share?"

"Keep it! Leave me out."

Aswami Pasha was thinking. "This man has been talking to Macles. He must come tomorrow. Otherwise he will be dangerous. Macles must come also—but for the last time."

"It is in orders that you join us, Brown," he said coldly. "Therefore I have no choice but to refer your protest to—"

Kid Brown sprang forward and grasped the outstretched hand.

"Til go!" he whispered hoarsely.

Aswami drew his hand away. "It is the cargo we want, not the ship," he said.

"And now that you have come to your senses, a word of warning: Mac is being watched by Mr. King!"

The Kid drew back, biting his thick underlip.

"Tonight," Aswami continued, "the Armenian, Joseph, from Port Said, joins us, taking the place—at the same pay—of the Portuguese sent to us by Polodos. I knew, when I interviewed him in Paris, that this man from Stamboul would fall us, as he had failed us before. Very well. You have taken a gross liberty tonight. You shall have a chance to make good. I have to go with Mr. King to the sheds. See this fellow Joseph, and instruct him in his duties. Remember—! The Jackal, he will be in sole charge, outside, during our absence. You will be responsible. . . ."

Kid Brown turned and made for the door. "I may collect women, Brown," came the smooth voice, "but I study men."

And in a small room situated in a wing of the rambling mansion, Macles was kneeling beside a neat bed trying to pray. There is no more desperate character than that of a religious man gone wrong. And James Malcolm Macles, ex-chief engineer of a famous liner, was a deeply religious man when an irreligious woman had driven down to hell.

In drink he was a devil incarnate. And he wanted to pray for strength to remain sober long enough to save his poor soul from this last black sin. But never a word would come. . . .

As the motorboat swung into the reef-sheltered harbor, the truth leaped at last to Dawson Haig's brain. . . .

A suspicion, which or weeks past—longer; perhaps since that day when the existence of the former Marquis Yu'an Hee See had thrust itself upon his attention—had clattered for recognition, at last drove home. . . .

Drug smuggler—slave dealer—receiver of stolen property—yes! but at last the whole scope of this devil's activities presented itself like a revelation. . . .

The American yacht, a year ago! And less than a year earlier, the big German freighter with a cargo insured for a quarter of a million! Both had vanished, leaving never a survivor somewhere in the Red sea. There had been talk about a shifting shoal; an official survey had been made.

Yu'an Hee See was a pirate—a modern pirate!—holding strictly to the motto of that ghastly trade, "Dead men tell no tales."

This was the man, with his damnable organization, in whose power Eileen lay!

His body was icy cold but his brain raced like an engine. He clenched his fists. What should he do? What could he do? Where did his duty lie?

He had deliberately snapped the link between himself and official support. He was alone—alone against an organized group of absolute, callous scoundrels—operating under the orders of the most evil man that ever came out of Asia. The whole ghastly conspiracy became an open book, all his past knowledge of the group, clues which had led nowhere—suspensions at which the chief had laughed.

This last astounding recognition had brought everything into order. His futile journey to Singapore with its nearly fatal termination—how near he had been then to the truth! And what bloodshed and sorrow he might have averted had he not failed. Now—was he to fall again—with all the facts at last in his hands?

Eileen! Eileen he could not think about and remain sane. Turning to the taciturn negro who accompanied him, he asked, "Do we go far?"

He fully appreciated the position of Joseph in the scheme of things. Joseph was a nominee of the old villain, Mohammed, at Port Said. He had been given a chance to prove himself. Therefore, he was about to be received by—whom?

Surely not by the man who laughed! No. Yu'an Hee See was too cunning for that. He would be met by some chief of staff.

A horrible idea flashed through his mind—Polodos! The Greek unmistakably was a man with an excellent brain; a man of culture. And it was Polodos who had taken charge in Limehouse during the critical hours which preceded the sailing of the Wallaroo.

He remembered how he had cuddled his brains for an explanation of where the leakage had occurred between Scotland Yard and Sydney. It was painfully clear now. The consignment of drugs—a minor matter—had been removed, because of the last moment this greater scheme had suggested itself to the master mind!

"There," the negro replied, and pointed. Ahead on the right, a long high wall began. Beyond it, where the negro pointed, he saw twinkling lights.

These massive gates evenly reinforced with scrolled ironwork, opened onto a courtyard. A big negro in uniform stepped forward and a quick interchange of remarks, meaningless to the listener, took place between Haig's guide and the guardian of the gate.

He was ushered into a carpeted and well-furnished room. The guide disappeared. But the man in uniform stood before him. "Chief engaged," he said. In his thick negroid voice "Some one see you presently. Have a drink?"

"Thanks," said Haig, civilly. "Have you got a whisky and soda?"

The man grinned and disappeared. Dawson Haig looked about him, weighing his chances. This was headquarters—Yu'an Hee See's base! The girl is safely on her way. Joseph had said: undoubtedly on her way here.

What was the most and the best he could hope for? . . . to get in touch with Eileen, and then? To get away again and bring help.

What was the worst danger in sight? That one of the Hee See group should recognize him.

The negro returned carrying a tray, upon which was a bottle of whisky, a siphon of soda water, and a cut-glass tumbler. He placed this upon a low table before Haig, grinned again, and withdrew.

Haig mixed himself a stiff drink, took a sip, and wondered.

What action was to be looked for from a modern and highly efficient pirate when, in his own headquarters, he found himself confronted, unexpectedly, by a detective inspector of the Criminal Investigation department?

At that moment entered a bull-necked deep-chested man, wearing a gaily colored pull-over, gray flannel trousers, and gymnasium shoes. His low skull was closely cropped, and his face bore the scars of battle.

"My G—d!" Haig thought. "I had overlooked him!" This was the man to whom he had spoken outside the Restaurant Suleiman Bey in Paris! But the little street had been badly lighted, and Haig had worn those tinted glasses which later characterized "Mr. Smith."

No glimmer of recognition showed itself upon the man's brutal face.

"Hello, mate!" was his greeting. He glanced at a slip of paper he held in one large, muscular hand. "You're Joseph Rasta. Got your letter?"

"Here it is."

"I'm the Kid," the other replied. "You speak good English for an Armenian."

"I've lived in England," Haig explained.

The Kid whistled shrilly, and the negro appeared at once. "Another glass," he directed, lighting a cigarette, and thoughtfully regarded the new arrival.

"You look pretty useful," he conceded. "The Chief's engaged in 'is 'atrem—so you get your orders from me. I'm first lieutenant—see?"

The negro returning with a glass, the Kid half filled it with whisky, to which he added a dash of soda water. "You're the garden watchdog," he went on. "See?"

"I don't think I do," Haig confessed.

"Well, what you got to do is to patrol the gardens, 'specially the 'atrem garden, and watch the you-nicks."

"Eunuchs?"

"Yes, Joseph, you-nicks. They ain't like you an' me. They can be bought over. See, mate? If you pipe a cat in the garden—shoot it. Don't shoot a you-nick or a monkey or a parrot, or you're for it. But anything else that moves—shoot. Now I'll interduce you to your new pal—name of the Jackal—and show you round. . . ."

To Eileen every day in that lacquered room was a week of suffering, although Celeste showed a maternal solicitude for the girl's comfort. With a glance of her eloquent eyes and a shrug, Celeste had conveyed the news that they were spied upon, and Eileen became aware that the scroll-work ventilators were really hidden spy holes.

She thought of the bathroom, recalling an impression of dim voices, above, which had disturbed her in the bath. A warm glow spread all over her body, and filled with a fierce resentment she sprang up, hands tightly clenched, and walked out onto the balcony.

"Cherie," Celeste said earnestly, in a low voice, "it is no good. You must keep yourself in hand for when something may be done. And we are watched. Come in. There is a guard on the spy tower looking this way."

She dragged Eileen back, but not before the latter had stared across that unreal lovely garden to where, upon the high wall, a sort of squat minaret appeared. Looking out from its gallery was a man who wore European dress, with a tarbush.

"Oh, G—d!" whispered Eileen, and clutched Celeste, detaining her. "Oh, G—d! It is! It is!"

She stared and stared, choked down a hysterical sob, and then began wildly waving her hand.

The man was Dawson Haig! "My child! Stop! Stop! Whatever you've seen, come in!" the Frenchwoman whispered urgently.

Eileen nodded. The beating of her heart seemed to be choking her. They re-entered the lacquered room.

"And so," said Celeste, in a high and cheerful voice, "two good things are to happen. You are to spend the afternoon in the garden until tea-time, and I have permission to sleep on the divan there, if you wish it."

"Oh, Celeste!" Eileen whispered, tears starting to her eyes, "you are an angel! Whatever would have become of me without you?"

Her heart was singing. She was dying to share her knowledge with this friend to unexpectedly found in the enemy's camp. But well enough she understood the need for silence. . . .

Billy had found her! Billy had found her!

Escorted by one of the gigantic negroes, she and Celeste presently descended stone steps to the garden. The eunuch dropped back ten paces, allowing the women to stroll undisturbed, and in broken whispers Eileen contrived to convey to the French woman that an English police officer, her friend, was actually here.

"My G—d!" Celeste said, "he is a brave man! I only fear—that Mr. King! Ah! This is not his real name—the man they call Excellency, who owns this house—the town—and all the country around."

"Mr. King?"

"Yes. He is a Chinaman."

"What! A Chinaman?" Sudden horror gripped Eileen. "Is he stoutly built, with very red lips, and a small black mustache?"

"Ah!" Celeste gripped her arm. "You have seen him? He has seen you? I understand. It was so with me—ten years ago, cherie. Then, with a swift change of tone: "Hush! hush! my child—he is here."

Yu'an Hee See was walking along the path towards them. His eyes, in that smooth yellow face, resembled oblique black slits. Pausing, he bowed, smiling. Eileen clutched the French woman's hand and stood rigid.

"Our little American guest," came the flute voice. "You are angry with me, I can see. But you do not want to intrude upon your promise, but it was very pleasant for me to find a new beauty in this beautiful garden."

He bowed, smiling, and departed along a path to the right and from a high, latticed window Orange Blossom watched this scene, her tiny milk-white teeth buried in her lower lip.

KENTUCKY FARM NEWS

Strawberry growers in Crittenden county marketed a crop about double last year's with gross receipts of $24,000. Many new growers are planning to set plants next year. Dick Shelby, a director in the strawberry association, made a net profit of $556 from 1½ acres.

Interest is continuing in the reading project in Campbell county, reports the county home agent, who says that homemakers of John's Hill have enrolled 100 per cent in the course. Every club in the county is making use of the list of suggested books for various ages and interests.

Docked and castrated lambs have brought Taylor county farmers 22 per cent more profit than did buck lambs in the same flocks. H. G. Smith had 15 lambs from a non-descript buck and 27 from a purebred ram. The purebreds average 19 pounds more weight per head, and at least 30 per cent more of them will sell as tops.

The second annual Farmers Conference will be held August 12, 13 and 14 at the Kentucky State Industrial College at Frankfort. The meeting is held to promote better farming, homemaking and community life. Speakers from the Kentucky College of Agriculture include T. R. Bryant, John S. Gardner, E. J. Kinney, J. E. Humphrey, E. J. Wilford and C. J. Bradley.

Mrs. L. M. Hill, a Christian county homemaker, has had a complete water system installed in her home following suggestions of Mrs. Frances Fleming, county home agent. Bathroom fixture, kitchen sink and septic tank are included, with an electric pump and pressure tank.

The first annual Blue Grass Cattle Club sale resulted in an average of $97 a head for 52 animals ranging in age from 8 months to mature cows. The top was $225, paid by Louis Lee Haggin, Lexington, for a yearling heifer consigned by McKibben & Hill, Lexington.

Farmers and other interested persons are invited to visit the Western Kentucky Experiment Station at Princeton July 28. They will be shown the experimental work in crop and fruit production, in soil management, and in raising good livestock, and attend a short speaking program.

Marshall county small fruit growers can testify that a well-handled strawberry crop pays. They sold 200 carloads which resulting in more than $200,000 being brought into the county. Forty-six thousand dollars were paid to pickers, $50,000 advanced to growers, $110,000 estimated net return to growers, $8,000 to haulers and 1,500 to shed workers.

Ground limestone will be available after July 1 to Bell county farmers at 50 cents a ton, and farmers are preparing to use at least 2,000 tons by fall. The quarry is located in the county, and tests made by the Kentucky Experiment Station show a high neutralizing value.

Four-leaf club weeds in Hancock county aided in ditching and applying poison bran mash to control army worms, after a drove had partially destroyed a farmer's wheat and corn fields. The control was administered under the supervision of the county agent.

Haden B. Shobe, of Warren county, sold 8000 crates of strawberries from a three-acre field, reports John H. Finch, Negro agent. Ninety per cent of them were No. 1 berries. A packing and grading demonstration was held on his farm, showing size, firmness, ripeness, quality and appearance.

THE FARM AND HOME

(Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station)

It does not pay to can inferior fruits and vegetables. The value of canning depends on the quality of the products when they go into the can and the care and skill with which they are canned. Only choice and fresh fruit and vegetables are worth canning.

Hens eat 6½ to 7½ pounds of feed a day, and laying hens eat little more than hens that are not laying. Thus it costs nearly as much to keep non-producers as it does producers, point out poultry raisers who believe in close culling throughout the year.

Pasture and legumes usually furnish enough minerals for livestock, other than salt. Hog raisers often use a mixture of salt, bone meal and limestone, keeping it before the animals in order to be sure that they obtain sufficient minerals. This supplies calcium and phosphorus.

As soon as beans are through bearing they should be pulled up and burned in order to destroy all Mexican bean beetle. Thoroughly cleaning the garden, adjoining grounds, fence corners and the like in the fall helps to exterminate this pest.

Abundance of rain has apparently increased interest in the use of hydraulic rams to supply water to farmsteads. Information about the installation and operation of rams can be obtained from the Agricultural Engineering Department of the College of Agriculture, Lexington.

Regardless of weather conditions or rush of work, the family should have at least one complete and thoroughly prepared meal a day. Plenty of time should be given to its planning, preparation and serving. Many people have it in the evening on a screened-in porch.

Clarinet Is Most Useful

of Instruments in Band

The clarinet, like other members of the wood-wind family, goes back to those instruments used by Pan, when nymphs and fauns danced to the gay music of pipes in the woods. Since those early woodland days, says an authority in the Washington Post, the pipe has undergone many changes. The mouthpiece was given a double reed for the oboe, the English horn and the bassoons, but in the clarinet only a single reed is used. Much as the clarinet resembles the oboe, it does not taper, and is of equal thickness until the end, where it flares into a bell. Of all the wood-wind instruments, the clarinet is the most useful because of its wide range, its ease of playing and the great variety of tone.

Clarinets are made in different keys and pitches. The ones in B flat and A are most commonly in use, although some of the scores call for clarinets in C, E flat and D. Occasionally an alto clarinet is employed, and, more frequently, a bass clarinet, which is the largest and deepest pitched instrument of this family. It has a crook for the mouthpiece, and a large bell. It sounds an octave below the B flat clarinet.

The clarinet was the last instrument to enter the classical orchestra. Mozart was the first composer to bring out its chief possibilities.

Big Bertha's Long Range

Outlasted Other Guns

Typical artillery of the World war, writes John A. Menaugh, in the Chicago Tribune, were the following British guns: The 14-inch gun, with a range of 20 miles; the 12-inch gun, with a range of 19 miles; the 9.2-inch gun, firing a shell 15 miles; the 6-inch gun, with a range of 10 miles; the 12-inch howitzer, hurling a shell 8 miles; the 60-pounder rifle, with a range of more than 7 miles; the 9.2-inch howitzer, shooting 7 miles; the 18-pounder field piece, with a range of about 9,400 yards; the 4.5-inch howitzer, with a range of 7,000 yards; and the 3.7-inch howitzer, shooting 5,800 yards.

The maximum range of the huge German 42-centimeter howitzers that were used against the forts at Antwerp was 10,300 yards. The German 6.6-inch trench mortar threw a shell 1,250 yards. The German Minenwerfer was capable of throwing a 50-pound trench bomb 450 yards.

It was the German long-range gun, the Big Bertha, however, that was the most talked-of weapon of the World war. A number of guns of this type were employed in shelling Paris.

Others of the guns had different maximum ranges, the greatest only slightly less than 80 miles.

The Stem-Winding Watch

The earliest mention of a keyless or self-winding watch is in Schwenker's "Deitiae Mathematicae et Physicae," published at Nurnberg in 1651. Britten quotes an advertisement in the London Gazette of 1696 concerning a watch having a spring wound up without a key. In 1750 Caron (later Beaumarchais) made a watch in a ring for Mme. de Pompadour which was wound by means of a lever projecting from the case under the dial. The keyless work of turning the pendant is generally attributed to A. L. Breguet, but it was probably Louis Clement Francois Breguet, who retired from the House of Breguet at Fils in 1833. Two forms, the rocking-bar mechanism and the shifting sleeve mechanism, came into use about 1848.

Sneezing

In every age in every country, men have attached some kind of mysterious significance to sneezing. Early Christians crossed themselves. Medieval Europe went back to bed for hours if it sneezed while arising. Today, writes Ray Mollenhauer, Danville, Ill., in Collier's Weekly, sneezing is a sign of truthfulness in Turkestan, an indication of wisdom in some parts of Scotland and a bad omen throughout a large part of the world which still exclaims "God bless you" or its equivalent when one sneezes—for fear his soul will leave his body.

Microbes Live Long

Microbes undoubtedly present the greatest extremes in nature. They vary greatly in size, some being 5,000 times larger than others. They live in a temperature range of 779 degrees, some being able to live at 450 degrees F. below zero while others thrive at 320 degrees F. above it. And some apparently are deathless, writes Freling Foster, in Collier's Weekly, as they have been found in a revivable condition in coal deposits 100,000,000 years old.

Worship Goddesses

Hinduism, which has 250,000,000 followers, or one-eighth of the world's entire population, is the only living religion which worships goddesses as well as gods. In fact, writes D. B. Moberly, in Collier's Weekly, they probably far outnumber the gods, as more than 80 per cent of the people in southern India worship local village deities, nearly all of which are feminine.

"Burned-Out" Eyes

The destructive result of eyestrain is explained on the grounds that six of the twelve sets of nerves in the head lead to the eyes. Overwork of these delicate nerves not only saps the energy available for other nerves, but "burns out" the optical nerves and renders ineffective the eyes, one of the principal channels of knowledge.

STRUCK BY AUTO

PASSES AWAY WEDNESDAY AT THREE O'CLOCK. SKULL FRACTURED.

Struck by an approaching automobile as he started to make a U-turn with his bicycle on Shwnee Run Road between Miami and Drake Roads at 9:30 o'clock Tuesday night, Indian Hill, Ohio, Robert Bemon, 14 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Caleb Beemon, Drake Rd. received critical injuries, Indian Hill Rangers reported.

Physicians at General Hospital said the boy's skull was fractured. There was a deep laceration in the right side of his abdomen, they said.

Frank Perkins, Shawnee Run Rd., driver of the automobile, was exonerated by witnesses, Rangers said.

Rangers were told the boy was riding west behind an automobile going in the same direction when he started to turn. The westbound automobile prevented Perkins, eastbound, from seeing the bicycle until it turned into his path.

Rangers said Perkins was nearly prostrated with grief at the injury of young Bemon, whom he knew well and who frequently played with the Perkins children. Perkins family was with him when the accident occurred.

GREAT ADVANTAGES OFFERED TO BLIND CHILDREN THROUGHOUT THE STATE

To every blind child in Kentucky or any child whose sight is so defective as to prevent it from attending an ordinary school, a free education is offered at the Kentucky School for the Blind in Louisville, Kentucky. The course of study includes kindergarten, elementary school and a full four year high school course with particular attention paid to music and vocational training. (There is no charge for board, laundry, tuition or books).

There are separate schools for the white children and for the colored children, some distance apart, each with its own set of teachers. The State has endeavored to make these schools everything they should be for the education, health and comfort of the blind children of Kentucky. The buildings are beautifully situated on rolling grounds with magnificent forest trees, and filled with every possible device for the training of the blind. The teachers are the best that can be had, thoroughly experienced in teaching those who cannot see.

The school session opens the second Wednesday of September and closes the second Wednesday in June, the children going to their homes for the summer vacation.

If you know of such write to Miss Catherine T. Moriarity, Supt., of KENTUCKY SCHOOL FOR THE BLIND, 1867 Frankfort, Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

RFC $100,000,000 SURPLUS WOULD COVER ALL LOSSES

Financial experts and many others who criticized the expansion of Reconstruction Finance Corporation activities under the Roosevelt administration openly predicted in magazine articles and newspaper interviews that the RFC would incur tremendous losses. Yet in his statement at the end of the third week of July Chairman Jesse Jones declared: "We have accumulated a surplus over operating expenses and interest paid or more than $100,000,000 which should cover such losses as we must inevitably make. Our operations have proved that the government can do business in a business-like way."

In addition to its emergency financing of relief and loans in continuous process of liquidation to financial institutions in other classifications, the RFC has loaned to banks $1,879,018,868. Of this huge sum, $1,368,615,058 has been repaid, leaving outstanding $480,403,310. Of the outstanding loans approximately $320,000,000 was in loans to closed banks to provide prompt distribution to depositors. These are secured by prime collateral which is daily increasing in value. This leaves open banks owing the RFC only $160,000,000, or 10 per cent of the sum originally advanced. Like all other RFC loans, these draw 4 per cent interest, while RFC pays 3 per cent or less for its funds derived from government bonds.

Another feature of Chairman Jones' report was that the "ratio of promptitude" in repayment of RFC advances on preferred stock of banks—as distinguished from the open loans—has been 85 per cent to July 22. In this connection it was announced that the RFC policy of buying preferred bank stocks had ceased on that date, as the corporation's directors were convinced that the banking structure of the country had been sufficiently strengthened. It was added however that exception would be made in unusual or urgent cases. A total of $1,008,420,034 was invested in the preferred stock of 6,468 banks out of the total of 14,137 banks in the country.

OPEN JULY 15TH

CLASSES ARE IN CHARGE OF MEMBERS OF THE REGULAR FACULTY.

Richmond, Ky., July 23.—The student body for the second summer term at Eastern Ky. State Teachers College here at the close of registration Saturday was 157 larger than for the same term last year, according to M. E. Mattox, registrar. A total of 622 students representing 77 counties registered for the term. Thirteen of these are from Boone County.

The second summer term which opened July 15 will be five weeks in length. Classes are in charge of members of the regular faculty. A feature of the summer school is the training corps being offered for teachers of adult and nursery schools in 20 Kentucky counties.

Prof. Paul M. Mathews, supervisor of music of the Lexington city schools, has charge of the music department during the absence of Prof. James E. Van Pearsen who is studying school music in New York University.

FALL GOOD TIME

TO SOW LEAFALFA August is perhaps the best time for sowing a field in alfalfa, for the first time. Dr. E. N. Fergat, at the Agricultural Experiment Station at Lexington says that seed is made then seem to be more generally successful than spring seedings. Even on soils that have previously grown alfalfa, August seedings have one distinct advantage; that is, they may be made on perfectly prepared seed beds. For this reason, stands are likely to be uniform and practically free from weeds.

Good clean seed of varieties suited to Kentucky should be sown. While common alfalfa yields well, the variegated kinds, such as Grim, Hardigan, Ontario Variegated and Cossack, will generally prove sufficiently better to pay for their use.

Alfalfa seed sown for the first time on a field, or on a field that has not been in alfalfa for several years, should be inoculated. Commercial cultures used according to directions are entirely satisfactory. Pulverized soil from an old alfalfa field mixed with slightly moistened seed will also give good inoculation.

A clover and grass seed drill gives the best seeding results, distributing the seed evenly and in such a way that all of it should germinate. Perhaps the next best method is broadcasting after a cultipacker. Or the seed may be broadcast after a drag harrow. It is usually advisable to brush the seed bed lightly after broadcast seeding.

When drilled, 10 to 12 pounds of seed to the acre is sufficient; if broadcast, 15 pounds should be used.

STATE OFFICES

WILL SELECT CANDIDATES TO BE VOTED FOR AT THE REGULAR NOV. ELECTION.

Next Saturday the electorate of Kentucky will cast their votes for the Democratic and Republican candidates of their choice for Governor and other state offices. The Recorder has taken no part in the selection of any candidate for state offices.

The voters of the state will select the different candidates to be voted for at the regular Nov. election, those elected in November will have the burden of Government for the next four years. Candidates should be selected and elected who will have the best interest of the state at heart, not for any particular part, as they will be the representatives of all the people. The question of taxation is one of the most important and that question is always troublesome. In order to maintain Government, expense is created and that expense must be paid by the taxpayers, the only way that funds can be raised to pay that expense, schools, roads and general governmental is by taxation in one form or another. Do not be deceived in expecting that better schools, roads and improvements in general can be made either in the Nation, State or County, without taxation. That is as impossible as for the sun to rise in the west. Nothing is free except the air we breathe.

W. D. Atwood and wife called on L. C. Weaver and wife last Friday. Mr. Atwood will be remembered as the manager of a subscription campaign conducted for the Recorder a short time ago. He just closed a campaign in Pike county for the local paper in that county.

4-H FAIR LIST GOES TO PRESS

After a thorough canvass of the county he reports prospects are for the biggest and best fair and county picnic held to date. The 4-H Fair will in no way interfere with the Annual Harvest Home Fair to be held at a later date.

JOE CLEEK

PASSES AWAY AT HIS HOME NEAR BEAVER — WAS CONNECTED WITH EVERY MOVEMENT FOR BETTERMENT OF HIS COMMUNITY.

Funeral services for Joe W. Cleek, farmer, who died at his home on U. S. 42, near Beaver, Lick, Ky., July 25, were held at the Beaver Lick Baptist church Thursday afternoon. The largest crowd ever assembled in the village attended the services, which were conducted by the pastor, Rev. Roy Johnson, assisted by Rev. R. F. DeMoisey. Mr. Cleek had spent his entire life on the farm on which he died. He had always been an outstanding citizen who was connected with every movement for betterment of his community. He had been a faithful member of the Baptist church for almost half a century. Frank Rouse, Burlington, Ky., Will Arnold, Grant, Ky., J. L. Jones, Florence, Ky., Hubert Conner, Burlington, Ky., directors of The Boone County Fire Insurance Co., of which Mr. Cleek was also a director served as honorary pall bearers, as did also Dr. R. E. Ryle, Walton, Ky., J. C. B. Conrad, Williamstown, Ky., Sam Sleet and J. H. Jack, Beaver Lick. Active pill-bearers were John W. Conley, Oliver Kite, J. F. Cleek, John Delahunty, C. F. Blankenbaker and Ossman Jack. The remains were laid to rest beside his first wife, Marcia Ossman Cleek in the Beaver Lick cemetery. By his cheerful disposition "Uncle Joe" as he was called had made friends of all who knew him, and they share with his wife Emma Clements Cleek and his daughter Anna May Cleek their great loss.

The political advertisements in this issue of the Recorder are published as purely advertising and at the regular advertising rates and are not to be taken by its readers as statements made by the Recorder and for which no responsibility is assumed. As was stated by the former Editor, the Recorder is not advocating the cause of any political candidate in the Primary election to be held next Saturday.

KEEP TURKEYS GROWING CAUTIONS POULTRY MAN

In advising turkey raisers to feed well, Dr. J. Holmes Martin, head of the poultry department at the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, points out that it takes only 4 pounds of feed to produce a pound of turkey meat, which means that a 16-pound young turkey tom has required 64 pounds of meat which should not cost more than 2 1/2 cents a pound. As a matter of fact, he says a 16-pound turkey 6 months old has not eaten any more than 8 pound an 8-pound capon.

During the first month of its life a young turkey gains at the rate of a pound for each 2 pounds of feed. During the second month it requires 2 1/2 pounds and during the third month, 3 pounds of feed to add a pound of weight. Its feed requirement continues to increase until the last month before Thanksgiving or Christmas it may take 7 pounds of feed to make another pound in weight.

The importance of a balanced ration is stressed by Dr. Martin. The proper mash can be made of the simple ingredients of bran, middlings, ground corn, ground oats or barley and meat scrap, with the 1 per cent salt put in all poultry mashes. This mash can be fed to poults from the time they are 8 to 10 weeks old until they are sold. Many successful poultry raisers keep both mash and grain before turkeys. As the birds grow older they eat more grain, but always they apparently know how to balance their consumption of mash and grain.

TO MEET

COMMISSIONERS TO MEET AT COUNTY SEATS MONDAY, AUGUST 5.

Next Saturday the people of this state will, at the primary, select candidates for the different state offices, but the result will not be known for several days as the vote will not be counted until the Election Commissioners meet at the county seats, Monday, August 5th, at 10 A. M. This feature of the election law should be amended so that the election commissioners could meet and begin the count immediately after the ballot boxes have been returned. Other states have a similar provision in their election laws. No candidate will receive the nomination unless that candidate receives a majority of all votes cast for that office.

BED BUGS AND POISON OAK

Want to know how to protect yourself against bed bugs and poison oak? Here are some timely suggestions from the July issue of 'The Progressive Farmer':

"About bedbugs a friend tells us that a sure and easy remedy for them is oil of cloves rubbed on the ankles or shins before exposure. 'Get it fresh every year,' he adds. Another says that they may be controlled by dusting sulphur in one's socks, stockings, or shoes before going into woods or other places infested with this insect.

"As for poison oak, always remember that real poison oak has three leaves in a cluster, never five. The surest and easiest remedy is to thoroughly wash off all exposed parts of the body—face, hands, arms, legs, etc.—as promptly as possible after any probable contact. Wash off three or four times in succession with hot water and soap, changing water each time. As for treatment, local applications of solutions of cooking soda or Epsom salts, one or two teaspoons to cup of water, are as helpful as any."

Eat moderately and use as many vegetables and fruits in the diet as possible.

2. Beware of drinking too much cold water when exceedingly warm as this may be injurious.

3. Get plenty of sleep.

4. Rest and relax at least 15 to 30 minutes at noontime each day.

5. Keep the pores of the skin open by frequent bathing and dring just enough water to replace that lost through perspiration.

6. Do as much of your work in a cool, shady place as possible. When out in the hot sun exercise moderately.

7. Close the windows nearly shut and draw the blinds in the early morning. Air the house well during the evening and night.

8. Don't worry. It never gets anybody any place and it keeps the nervous system depressed and irritated.

9. Do not refer to the thermometer too frequently. Don't talk about the weather. Think of cool, pleasant things. The effects of heat are both physiological and psychological.

10. Keep "mentally" cool, if you

By CARTER FIND

Washington.—No one knows where the figure of $340,000,000—first mentioned in connection with the President's tax proposal as the amount certain schedules would raise—came from. But it is no secret that while no clever work had been done in figuring the returns, for they were obviously wrong, the figure did mean something.

What the figure meant was the estimate of a certain brain trust, now very much in the saddle, of what the treasury needed each year in addition to present revenues.

The reason the figures were so far wrong, in fixing the amount which those mysterious levies would raise (for no one has ever admitted parenthood for the figures either) was that the administration, after working out the schedules, did not ask the treasury to put its experts on them. The reason for this was not an oversight, but the fact that Treasury Secretary Morgenthau had just expressed himself in such vigorous terms against the tax proposals being made at that time that the brain trusters who had won the President's approval hesitated to ask him.

But let no one be deceived about the significance of the figure, despite the discrepancy that the estimates mentioned do not produce the $400,000,000.

The rates were not imagined by enterprising newspaper reporters. Nor was the $340,000,000. Both were conceived inside the administration and formally given out.

The only advantage of the denials is that the administration is now free to produce an entirely different set of rates, and an entirely different total, and insist that these new figures represent carefully worked out studies of the problem. While the Republicans can never prove that the first figures were official.

Want More Taxes

All of which is only important politically. Actually what is important is that certain trusted and at the moment successful advisers to the President believe the treasury should have $340,000,000 a year more in taxes than are now coming in. Also—this conclusion was held prior to the avalanche of decisions against A. A. process—taxes.

If you will examine the best scale of taxes on which Morgenthau reported to the house ways and means committee, and then boost the whole level by about one-fourth, the taxes would represent the treasury judgment on what is needed to make up for (1) the present deficiency in revenue as seen by certain very potent influence with the President—brain trusters, and (2) the loss of processing tax revenue.

This is not a prediction that any such rates will be enacted. The President has no idea of going anything like that far. He never did. His original idea was to increase taxes only on very large incomes, and impose levies on very large inheritances and gifts. Also to boost corporate taxes by the sliding scale aimed at bigness.

It is perfectly true that the sliding scale corporation tax is fairly regarded by insiders as just an opening wedge. That the ultimate of active is to make the taxes on large corporations so heavy as to make it desirable for many of them to dissolve and certainly for no more mergers to be considered.

But at the time of his proposal the President had no idea of irritating as many people as would be hit, and hit hard, by any tax program which would raise the amount of money needed. Not this year, or next!

New Day in Politics

Maybe Business will come to a realization that there is a new day in American politics as well as a New Deal in Washington in time to save itself, but it is about an even bet.

It appeared some months back that the public utilities, long political ally the most stupid aggregation of successful men in other fields in America, had learned at least the elementary rules of the new game. But even the demonstration does not seem to have had much effect on other business men.

The immediate case in point is the administration drive against bigness, exemplified in the sliding scale tax on corporation income. If it were just a boost in taxes no one except perhaps the immediate taxpayers would be interested. But its avowed object is a "better social order."

Which means that the sliding scale idea is just the opening wedge—that the present proposed top rate—if the administration has its way—is only the beginning—that the eventual object is to make little ones out of big ones.

And "big ones" does not just mean a few enormous corporations such as United States Steel, General Motors, American Telephone, etc. It includes virtually every corporation big enough to have its stock listed on the New York Stock exchange list. Or the Curb or other market.

The highest, proposed rate, 17½ per cent, applies on all corporate income in excess of $20,000,000. But the next lowest rate, 17 per cent, includes all corporations with incomes in excess of $10,000,000. Actually, for all the talk of taxes being reduced on "small" corporations, only those with incomes below $40,000 a year have their taxes reduced. And even that reduction is trifling.

In making this sweeping determination of policy President Roosevelt, though this may be denied officially, ignored the advice of both Treasury Secretary Morgenthau and Brain Truster Moley. It represents a complete triumph for the Brandeis-Frankfurter left wing branch of the New Deal.

Using Wrong Tactics

Whereupon Business, following the tactics of long ago, attempts to fight it through the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers, neither of which can scare a representative from a district, or worry a New York senator.

Just why Business in general does not take a leaf from the amazing success which attended the letter writing campaign of public utility stockholders is hard to figure. Not because this letter writing campaign really did the utilities much good. The final bill is tough enough on the holding companies almost to suit Roosevelt.

The significant fact is that this letter writing campaign resulted in a 110 majority in the house of representatives for precisely what the letter writers demanded. The fact that the letter writers did not demand enough really to save their bacon is not of consequence in this connection. They got what they asked for—from the house.

Enough of them, obviously, can get what they want any time—if they make it clear enough, and in time. A couple of hundred excited stockholders living in one congressman's district can scare him to death. But he pays no attention whatever to the national associations. His only concern is votes in his district.

This was not so important up to the new day. In the days when bosses controlled states, Big Business operated through them.

Why Ickes Worries

"We have only two unemployed persons, and they have been unemployed for 30 years."

That crushing answer, made by the little town of Colebrook, way up in northwestern Connecticut, near the Massachusetts line, is one of the reasons why Harold L. Ickes' gray hair is getting thinner. Why the public works part of his activities seems to be bogging down. Why some administration officials are wondering if it would not have been better—providing, of course, the White House had thought of it first—to let Carter Glass of Virginia, Alva Adams of Colorado and other senators have their way about substituting two billions of dollars for four billions of work relief.

But that is not the only problem which is worrying Secretary of the Interior Ickes—and the White House—and which is illustrated by Colebrook.

When the word first got round that Colebrook could have a big grant of federal money for a fine new road there was much excitement round and about the village. The progressive element was all for it. It would mean the spending of money—and prosperity.

But opposition was not slow in showing its head. The handful of merchants might want more customers, but the summer residents did not want a lot of workmen messing the place up. Again the merchants might like the idea of a fine new road, but that would cause many auto tourists to stop off, make purchases, at least buy meals. But the folks who have been the mainstay of the community for a generation, living up there on money made elsewhere, did not want the tourists tramping through, did not want the flavor of the old community "spoiled," in short wanted to keep things just as they were.

But the Progressives did not give up. They kept on fighting. Then suddenly it was discovered that the money so kindly tendered by Mr. Ickes would involve using a new road plan approved by the state highway commission. This would necessitate cutting a corner off the beautiful and historic old church which is the center of the whole Colebrook legend.

Didn't Like It

Even the progressive element didn't like that. But they did not give up. And they might have won their fight at that, and Mr. Ickes might have purged over another "soundly placed" public works project. But there was more trouble to come, the sort of trouble that is always magnified in exactly inverse ratio to the size of a community—the agonized yelps of taxpayers afraid of higher assessments!

For it was suddenly realized by these gentlemen—and ladies, for there are a lot of widows owning property around Colebrook, that Uncle Sam was only giving 45 per cent of the money. Fifty-five per cent would have to be raised by the local taxpayers. In short that there would have to be a bond issue, and they would have to pay the interest and sinking fund for this issue for the next 15 or 20 years. For the rest of their lives, as most of them saw it.

All for what?

To have a new road through their township, which would bring in tourists which only the merchants wanted, that would bring a flock of "aliens" in to work on the road, and destroy the simple pastoral touch of which the community boasts, and finally would chop off a corner of their historic church. And only two unemployed persons in the township, neither of whom, opponents confidently asserted, could be induced to so much as look at a pick or shovel in connection with the new work.

So the town suddenly discovered that Connecticut had a long and prided history of independence, that it was not becoming for Colebrook, proud of its own and Nutmeg traditions, to accept charity from the federal government. And the proposal was turned down.

"Messbacks," said the progressives. "Patriots," said the summer residents.

SEES INFLATION A SLOW PROCESS

A Real Danger for the Future, Col. Ayres Tells Banking Groups.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.—Present prospects do not indicate that inflation severe enough to cause further dollar devaluation will come soon in this country, but as an ultimate development it seems to be a very real danger, Leonard P. Ayres, Vice President Cleveland Trust Company, said here tonight in an address before the Graduate School of Banking. He believed this statement to be true "unless the government enters frankly upon a policy of issuing fiat money with which to meet its expenses." At present that does not seem to be in sight, he said.

The Graduate School is operated jointly by the American Institute of Banking Section of the American Bankers Association and Rutgers University to offer advanced studies for bank officers.

"We have so enormously increased the capacity of our bank system for credit expansion that it is difficult to see how we could have a vigorous business revival without having it develop into a credit inflation," Colonel Ayres declared.

Inflation a Slow Process
If inflation does come it will be a slow process, he said, pointing out that in Germany, France, Belgium and Italy it took about five years to develop from the time when the governments entered upon policies of financing large peace-time deficits by bank credit up to the time when the public generally began to spend money rapidly because of fear that it would still further depreciate in purchasing power.

"If we are to go through such a period here it would seem likely that it might last rather longer than the corresponding periods abroad," he said. "In beginning would date from the spring of 1933 when we left the old gold basis for our money and entered upon the policy of financing large governmental deficits by the sale of Federal securities mainly to banks rather than to private investors."

"The method that we are following is the one that proved disastrous in Europe for in all those countries including Germany, the increasing issues of money that caused the inflation were not mere printing press issues of fiat currency, but were secured by government bonds and notes discounted at the banks. Nevertheless, the process is inherently a slow one."

Among the clearest lessons taught by the European experience, Colonel Ayres asserted, is that there are "no good hedges against inflation." He added:

Did Not Lighten Debt Burdens
"One of the strange facts about these inflation is that while they destroyed the values of most existing debts, they did not succeed in lightening the debt burdens of either the people as a whole, or of the corporations."

"Inflation destroys the value of bonds and mortgages and so confiscates the property of these holders of obligations and hands it over to the shareholders and the equity owners. However, it introduces so many new economic difficulties that these share and equity holders are at once forced to incur new indebtedness so that when stabilization comes the problems of debt are about as troublesome as they were before, or even more so."

The five requisites of inflation were listed by Colonel Ayres as first, a period of sustained active business; second, a rising stock market; third, real credit expansion; fourth, a greater outflow of gold "than we can tolerate which would force us to cut our currency entirely free from gold"; and fifth, continued large budget deficits in government operation.

A PROPHECY

Significant economic developments to be expected in the next decade are listed by a prominent business writer as follows: (1) Higher standard of living. (2) Continued advances in technical processes of production. (3) Factory built houses, better and cheaper than hand made houses. (4) Somewhat cheaper money. (5) Faster travel. (6) News printed by radio. (7) Mechanical cotton picker, revolutionizing the South. (8) Cheaper electric power. (9) Better distribution of goods; more chain stores. (10) Another depression five or six years hence, preceded by an inflationary boom.

TWO QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Why is it that one farmer raises 100 bushels of corn to the acre, and the other one, on the other side of the fence, raises 25 bushels to the acre? Why is it that one farmer produces 100 pounds of pork on five bushels of corn, and another uses 25 bushels? Not until power machinery, scientific principles of soil fertilization and restoration of crops, and economical feeding are applied to the farm, will the farmers' problem be solved, says a firm authority.

BANKING READY

NEW YORK.—There is a soundant evidence that banks are in an unusually favorable position to finance a period of industrial growth, says a June issue of "Banking" published by the American Bankers Association.

An official survey on June 10 indicated that the Government of the United States, through its loans, was the potential owner of more than half of the existing world stocks of American cotton.

TELLS HOW BANKS AIDED PROGRESS

Economist Describes the Ways Banking Institutions Have Contributed to Development of United States

OMAHA, Neb.—Privately owned banking, despite its faults, has served America well, William A. Irwin, Professor of Economics, Washburn College, Topeka, Kansas, declared in a recent address here on "Banking in a Changing World."

"Under the leadership of individual banking has helped to bring this country to a foremost place in economic development among the nations of the world," he said. "The small community has been developed by the individual bank. The frontiers of America have been pushed forward by the help and counsel of the individual banker. The shocks of wars and depressions in a century and a half have been withstood with the assistance of the individual banker."

Change May Be Necessary

"It may be that we have reached a tide in the affairs of America when new methods are needed. It may be that we have come to a point where the individual should be submerged for 'the greatest good of the greatest number.'"

"It may even be that complete centralization of the banking system has become an economic necessity in our complicated social life. But the banker ought to be satisfied that these things are so before he should give up his fight for the system we have known. We came to greatness under that kind of banking; we should not give it up without unmistakable proof of the absolute necessity of such a change."

The American Pattern

Professor Irwin said that the proposal which has been advanced for coordinating banking operations in the national interest under a "Supreme Court" for banking is typically American and ought to have the most serious consideration of those elements which are clamoring for political control, which is typically un-American. It is not wise, he said, to oppose changes as such, but that bankers should "see to it that change, if and when it does come, shall preserve all that is good in the past and stick as closely as possible to the American pattern of things."

Banking is properly a conservative profession, he pointed out, and should cling to practices and principles of banking that are, and always have been, fundamentally sound.

"It is to its credit that so large a group of its members never faltered, even in boom times, in their allegiance to those sound principles," he declared. "We probably owe our salvation from chaos to that fact."

BANKS AND COLLEGE LAUNCH NEW SCHOOL

Aims to Offer Studies in Advanced Banking Subjects to Bank Executives—Public Duties of Banks Stressed

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.—The Graduate School of Banking, an unprecedented educational project, operated under the joint auspices of the American Institute of Banking Section of the American Bankers Association and Rutgers University, with 229 enrolled students from 35 states and the District of Columbia, inaugurated here in June its first resident session.

The states represented and the number of registrants from each were as follows: Alabama, 2; Arkansas, 2; California, 2; Connecticut, 9; Delaware, 3; District of Columbia, 6; Florida, 2; Georgia, 3; Idaho, 1; Illinois, 8; Indiana, 2; Iowa, 1; Kansas, 1; Kentucky, 2; Louisiana, 3; Maryland, 1; Massachusetts, 9; Michigan, 5; Minnesota, 1; Missouri, 5; Nebraska, 1; New Jersey, 3; New York, 50; North Carolina, 8; North Dakota, 1; Ohio, 7; Oklahoma, 1; Oregon, 2; Pennsylvania, 32; Rhode Island, 1; Texas, 5; Virginia, 6; Washington, 1; West Virginia, 1; Wisconsin, 4; Wyoming, 1.

The annual resident sessions of the graduate school will be supplemented between periods by continued extension work for the students at their homes. The purpose of the school is described as being to offer in a three year course a comprehensive approach to an advanced study of the various administrative problems in banking and trust institutions. The teaching procedure is a combination of the case system and the lecture discussion method.

The Curriculum

The curriculum embraces banking administrative problems and policies, bank investment problems, legal and managerial aspects of trust business, legal phases of bank administration and economic problems in the field of money and credit. The public relations and responsibilities of banks and methods for meeting these obligations are emphasized in the courses.

It is planned to set up similar schools in cooperation with other universities in various parts of the country. The school will add 200 registrants each year for two years until 600 are enrolled.

The trustees of the Educational Foundation of the American Bankers Association have set aside funds from the foundation to grant 100 loan scholarships of $150 each to qualified applicants for attendance at the school.

CHANDLER CAMPAIGN

Reply to Thos. S. Rhea's friends published on July 11th:

The voters of Boone county should know the whole truth, and here it is. Thos. S. Rhea's friends failed to tell you that in 1930 your representative introduced a bill in the Kentucky legislature, diverting one fifth of the net gasoline revenue back to the counties in which that revenue derives from the taxpayers of Boone county in which they have no return. This revenue would have returned to Boone county $33,333.00 yearly. This money was to go to build county roads and retire the $359,000 indebtedness. This $359,000 of Boone county indebtedness is the bond issues for building roads in Boone county. Your money is gone and you haven't the roads that you should have with your money. All that you have left is the debt of $359,000 to pay. It was through Thos. S. Rhea's friends and the unworthy highway commissioners gathered at Frankfort that lobbied against the bill and prevented its passage. If this bill had been permitted to pass at the 1930 session of the General Assembly, up to the present date it would have yielded to Boone county $200,000, and if this entire amount had been applied against the county indebtedness, you taxpayers of Boone county would only owe $159,000, instead of $359,000. Compare $33,333.00 annual income to your county against Thos. S. Rhea's friends Sales Tax income of $19,005.88 and you would not have any increases in your tax lists.

Mr. Rhea's friends tell you that if the sales tax had not been passed your public schools would have been closed and you would have had no schools. Well, let's analyze that statement. It is true that the Legislature did reduce your taxes on real estate to the amount of $3,000,000. That is not just on your home as this political group would have you believe, this three million dollars includes all classes of corporations.

Now, Mr. Rhea's friends. Why didn't you tell the voters of Boone county that the General Assembly at the same session passed a bill of five cents per gallon on whisky and enough tax on beer to raise $3,500,000, making a gain in revenue of one half million dollars that they had reduced on all classes of real estate.

Don't your conscience hurt you because you have not told the voters of Boone county more facts and less bunk and hot air?

Is it not written? Be sure your sins will find you out, and isn't it a well known fact to the voters of this county that some of Mr. Rhea's friends in Boone county represent some of these corporations, and that they were looking out for their interest instead of the people. You should have told the people in your statement that some of Mr. Rhea's friends in Boone county were drawing a miximum salary of $5,000.00 a year and an unlimited amount of attorney fees. And you should have told them about Ruby's cousin being president of an electric company, and drawing out of the taxpayers pockets of this state $160.00 per month as highway patrolmen. Yes, we notice in your statement that you reduced the small truck owners license 31 per cent and that is true. But, you didn't tell him that you had a law passed at the same time to persecute him by compelling him to buy governors and one thing and another, and prohibiting him from making over thirty miles an hour. And you put on a group of unscrupulous highway patrolmen that has fleeced them for all that was in sight, making a racket of them.

Now, Mr. Rhea's friends, you say to the voters of this county that Mr. Rhea will exempt homesteads of $750.00 from tax. Just how dumb do you think the people of your county are? You know as well as we do that Tom Rhea cannot exempt homesteads any more than they are at this time. There is only 5 cents tax left on real estate, and this 5 cents does not go to the benefit of the state government. It costs the taxpayers of Kentucky 8 cents to collect it, and this 5 cents goes to the Kentucky Highway department. When it comes to the county and city taxes on real estate to operate your county and cities, the Governor of this Commonwealth has no jurisdiction over county and city taxes. And, it is our county and city taxes that are burning our taxpayers up. Mr. Rhea is making these statements of home stead exemptions to deceive some voter who might vote for him that doesn't know the difference.

Now, Mr. Rhea's friends, you know that there is only one more way to reduce real estate taxes and that is to elect A. B. Chandler, Governor of the state, and let him take over the county roads in the state road system and be built and maintained by state road fund. Then our county road taxes can be exempted from our real estate. You know that we have three road taxes and three road systems here they are: County road tax, state road tax and National road tax. County road system, state road system and National road system. We need but one road tax, and one road system. There, people should see why they are not getting anything for their money, and vote for A. B. Chandler for Governor. A man with courage and ability to correct such evils.

Now, Mr. Tom Rhea and his friends passed the vicious sales tax bill. It was not passed by voice of the people. The people gathered at the state Capitol at that time and protested against its passage. "Thos. S. Rhea and Laffoon Sales Tax Bill" was passed by promises of jobs and all forms of bribery. The Liquor Industry themselves, went to Frankfort at that time and asked Governor Laffoon and Thos. S. Rhea not to pass the Sales Tax, that they were willing that a tax be put on whisky at 15 cents per gallon, and a tax at 15 cents per gallon would have brought a revenue to this state from ten to 12 million dollars, and bread, meat and the necessities of life would not have been taxed. All other states except Kentucky has whisky tax from 35 cents to 50 cents per gallon. But, it took the Sales Tax so Ruby Laffoon could appeal to the relief sympathy.

When Thos. S. Rhea, and his friends are asked where the Sales Tax money has gone, all they say is that they met unforeseen conditions. They do not attempt to say what they were, but they met them. Why didn't they tell the voters that the Sheriffs of the 120 counties has received for their dole from $120,000 minimum to a maximum of $240,000 per year, and the Sheriffs of these 120 counties has nothing to do with collecting the sales tax. Not one red cent goes through that office. It is a gift from Thos. S. Rhea and Ruby Laffoon at the voters expense. You can readily see why the Court House boys are for Thos. S. Rhea. Well, the Federal government says that down in Floyd county they can show the taxpayers of Kentucky where two hundred thousand dollars of their money has gone. The Federal indictment says that Ruby Laffoon had packed a committee of 27 of his friends to defraud the relief fund of $200,000. Facts stated not bunk and hot air.

A vote for Thos. Rhea and Ruby Laffoon means that they are the Gods whom you will serve. When you go to the polls next Saturday, be sure to cast your vote for A. B. Chandler for Governor, who will restore the government to the people.

A. B. Chandler will be the people's servant and not the people serving the government.

But 'tis God who has bereft us,

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Matt Kearney, young American living in London, says good-bye to his sister Eileen, on board the steamer Wallaroo bound for Colombo. The Wallaroo is conveying $2,000,000 in gold to Australia. Eileen has a presentiment of coming evil, which affects her brother. On his way home Kearney meets an old friend, Inspector Dawson Haig, of Scotland Yard, who is very much in love with Eileen. Haig is on the trail of opium, which he is convinced is concealed in Jo Lung's warehouse. Called to other duty, Haig delegates Kearney, with Detective Norwich, to visit the place and find out what he can.

CHAPTER II.—They find the place a veritable treasure house, and Kearney recognizes jewels stolen from his aunt. While in the warehouse he picks up a notebook, which is at Jo Lung's. Norwich is murdered. Haig is puzzled over cryptic notes in the book, referring to steps to be made by the Wallaroo.

CHAPTER III.—Yu-an Hee See, high-born Chinaman, whom Haig has long been seeking as the leader of a band of international thieves, is at Jo Lung's. Discovering the loss of his notebook, he sends two of his followers after Norwich and Kearney, one of whom he realizes must have picked it up. Norwich's murder follows, but Kearney is not overtaken. While Haig is poring over the book, alone in Kearney's room, a monster with features enters, seizes it, and escapes.

CHAPTER IV.—Kearney's story of hearing horrible laughter while at Jo Lung's place satisfies Haig's quarry was in hiding there, he recognizing the peculiar malignancy of Yu-an's laugh.

CHAPTER V.—Eileen Kearney, writing to Haig, tells of a jolly fellow passenger, a clever Austrian, Doctor Oestler. At Cairo Yu-an confers with his lieutenant, Aswami Pasha, known among the gang as the "Chief," over a mysterious coup they are planning. Haig goes to Marseilles, where he meets Eileen when she goes ashore with Doctor Oestler. The inspector boards the Wallaroo, disguised. From radio messages he decodes, he realizes Oestler, with others on board, are members of Yu-an's gang and that they have recognized him.

CHAPTER VI.—A huge Chinaman tries to throw Haig overboard but goes over himself in a desperate struggle. At Port Said Eileen disappears.

CHAPTER VII.—Haig, trailing Eileen and Doctor Oestler, lured into a drug-impregnated "bath of feathers." Oestler reports that he left Eileen shopping, and though under suspicion, his story cannot be shaken. Haig escapes from the deadly trap and shoots Joseph, one of the plotters. Eileen, who has been drugged, regains consciousness in an Arabian mansion, Yu-an's headquarters.

CHAPTER VIII.—Haig takes Joseph's papers, and reports Eileen's kidnapping to the British consul, Oestler and Miss Edman. The mysterious disappearance from the Wallaroo and appear at Yu-an's headquarters in Arabia. It is evident as Yu-an and Aswami Pasha talk that they intend to capture or sink the Wallaroo. Using Joseph's credentials, Haig makes his way to Kenah, Arabia.

CHAPTER IX.—Yu-an's cut-throat gang gathers for final instructions from Aswami Pasha as "capturing the Wallaroo's cargo of gold the next day in the Red sea. Haig begins to perceive Yu-an's monstrous plot, to seize the gold, but all his thoughts are centered on the rescue of Eileen. Impersonating Joseph, he is assigned to guard duty outside Yu-an's mansion. The girl sees him from a window, and is heartened. Haig also has seen her.

CHAPTER X.—Yu-an and Aswami Pasha lure the Wallaroo from her course with a wireless appeal for aid. Orange Blossom, Yu-an's jealous favorite, suggests to Aswami that Eileen be spirited away. He agrees to cooperate with her in getting rid of the girl. Next day, Aswami, from a submarine, boards the Wallaroo, and its helpless captain, to save his passengers, is forced to surrender the gold, which is transhipped to the submarine.

CHAPTER XI.—The gold safely on the submarine, Yu-an torpedoes and sinks the Wallaroo, with, he believes, all on board. From the deck of the pirate submersible his men, with rifles, pick off the remnant of the passengers and crew struggling in the water, and the sharks complete the ghastly work. But Jack Rattray, the Wallaroo's first officer, is providentially saved from instant death. Eileen is taken in a motor cruiser, bound for Kenah. She is conveyed to Hassan es-Suk's Cafe Magraabi in Kenah. Haig learns this and takes up the trail again. On his way to Kenah he rescues Rattray, the only survivor of the Wallaroo.

CHAPTER X

Dawson Haig felt like a man rejuvenated. He had found her! How imminent Eileen's peril might be he could not know. But, whatever the truth, he could do nothing more yet. The ease with which he had penetrated to this secret headquarters at first had astonished him. No doubt the box containing the real Joseph had been dropped in the Mediterranean, and with it had gone his big risk of detection. He had been allotted quarters in a palm-thatched hut. These quarters he shared with a sinister-looking Creole, the Jackal, who spoke a sort of bastard French. He had no other companionship, and could gather nothing that was essential from his satirizing

His duties were simple. Armed with a knoberry resembling the night club of an American policeman, and Mauser magazine pistol belted to his hip, he took sea watches with the Creole, four hours on and four off, controlling the vast gardens of the palace. In short, he was employed as a keeper.

The Jackal, who also answered to the name of Jacques, spent his hours of leisure injecting cocaine into a syringe-spotted left arm. Under the influence of the drug—and he was rarely otherwise—the Jackal became a dangerous homicidal maniac.

There were three separate enclosed gardens, shut off from the rest, and opening out from the southern front of the old palace. A narrow causeway bordered the outer wall which circled these enclosures, having steps at intervals of twenty yards leading up to little watch towers.

In one of these harem gardens he had seen a number of women—orientals, languorous but contented. The second had proved to be empty. But, on a balcony overlooking the third, he had seen Eileen.

When the Jackal relieved him he gave Haig a warning. "No go up steps of women's gardens. Only Uncle Tom and other eunuchs. If see..." Significantly he drew a yellow finger across his throat.

As Jack Rattray paced morosely up and down the bridge of the Wallaroo, footsteps on the ladder aroused him, and Captain Peterson appeared, carrying a radio flimsy.

"Look at this, Rattray," he said. "We've certainly got a Jonah on board this trip."

Rattray took the message and read: "TO COMMANDER RMS WALLAROO MAIN STEAM PIPE BURST STOP CHIEF AND TWO HANDS SERIOUSLY INJURED STOP CAN YOU RENDER IMMEDIATE MEDICAL ATTENTION STOP EIGHTEEN DEGREES THIRTY-FIVE NORTH AND FORTY-ONE DEGREES FIVE EAST SS MOUNT JUPITER JOHN KENDALL MASTER..."

Rattray looked up with a wry face. "One of the Sammelson tramps. She's seventy miles east of the track, sir. Isn't there anybody nearer?"

The captain shook his head. "I have already inquired," he answered resignedly.

Peterson went into the chart-house. Captain and chief officer bent over the chart.

"Right off the northwest peak of Farisan bank," Rattray commented. "The Sammelson scavengers go nosing into places nobody ever heard of."

And the course of the R. M. S. Wallaroo was altered.

In the lacquered study of Yu-an Hee See, the marquis, spectacles on nose, bent over a note which lay upon his table. Aswami Pasha stood at his elbow.

"It is regrettable," said Yu-an Hee See, "that such excellent business should be lost. The caravans have been delayed, as I ordered?"

"As you ordered, Excellency. Apart from which, no woman as specified is included in either."

Yu-an Hee See bent again over the writing. "These fellows insist so upon white skins," he commented. "Circassians are difficult, now, and Europeans, to meet such a specification as this..."

He removed his spectacles, placed them on the table, and shrugged significantly.

"You will notice, Excellency, that the representative of the Bey is expected at Kenah on Saturday."

"I have noticed this, my friend," the Chinaman replied. "But we have other fish to fry. A young and pleasant woman whose qualities answer these specifications—" he tapped a tapering finger on the paper—"would be difficult to obtain in so short a time, even under the most advantageous circumstances."

Many other matters had been discussed before the Egyptian left the apartment of his formidable chief. His route led him through part of the gardens, and as he passed a shady arbor, a hand lightly touched his sleeve. Orange Blossom stood at his elbow.

"Aswami," she said softly, "a word with you."

A chill struck at the heart of the Egyptian. More times than he could remember, a mad desire for the delicate ivory beauty of this woman had possessed him. But always—always—

He glanced about swiftly and then stepped into the shadows with her. "Stand still," Orange Blossom commanded, "and listen. This afternoon you set out on a journey. Is it true?"

"It is true, lady," said Aswami Pasha.

"Walk now up to the small salon and wait for me. Go at once."

Between fear and triumph his brain was a wisp of mist. He had dared greatly all his life. But this he knew was the greatest risk he had ever taken. Mounting stairs where none met him, he came to the room adjoining which was that cup and over looking the apartments occupied by Eileen Kearney. A faint stirring made him turn.

Orange Blossom, the ivory statuette enveloped in mist, came in, her finger raised to her lips. With a key she carried, she opened the door of a tiny anteroom, and indicated that he should move forward. A dimly lighted grille appeared on the level of his eyes.

"Look down..." Eileen, wrapped in a delicate oriental robe, lay upon the divan smoking. Celeste, the Frenchwoman, sat beside her.

"You see?" Orange Blossom whispered softly. "This is a choice treasure, my friend."

Aswami Pasha, a connoisseur, filled his eyes with the gracious beauty of Eileen. He nodded slowly.

Slender fingers gripped his arm and drew him away. Orange Blossom faced him in the room beyond. The woman in the lacquered room was deliciously pretty. "She is Yu-an's new toy," he thought. "And this cat whom I could love or strain with almost equal pleasure, is going to tempt me to take the rose girl from him..."

"She is not for sale," said the Chinese woman. "You understand? But today and tonight this house will be empty. It might be imagined that she should escape?"

"Escape?" The light of a new understanding crossed the dark face of Aswami Pasha.

"Hassan es-Suk is eager for his commission," Orange Blossom continued. "She might so easily be overtaken on the road to Kenah. Better still, outside Koseir, near to Doctor Julian How could they know that she was not for sale? My lord could not condemn them for ignorance."

Aswami Pasha clenched his hands and dragged his glance away from that compelling gaze.

"She is beautiful—and would grace your great house at Aswan. Or perhaps, my friend, it is dark eyes that excite you?"

He turned to her, and greatly daring, rested his hands upon her satin shoulders. The contact thrilled him.

"Will you help me?" She smiled voluptuously. "You don't speak," she whispered, swaying ever so slightly towards him.

"Yes! But—" In a second he would have had her in his arms.

"Sh! Quick!" she hissed—and pushed him away. "Go out by the other door! He is coming!"

She walked swiftly across the room. "I shall remember, Aswami," she whispered.

"No sign of her, sir," Jack Rattray dropped the glasses back into their case. "I can't make it out. It's clear, too, that her wireless has failed." The first officer turned to the commander, who stood upon the bridge of the Wallaroo beside him.

It was perhaps an hour before dusk swept down over the Red sea. A long, low island lay off their port bow; an Arab dhow was creeping out from the tail of it.

"That will be Jebel Selanya," said the captain.

"Yes, sir. If the Mount Jupiter lies inside—and it's quite possible, as the Sammelson tramps poke into all sorts of rat holes—we can't do it."

Rattray, taking up the glasses, searched again, anxiously. He was about to drop the glasses again, when:

"By G—d, sir," he said, "look—quick—under our port bow!"

The conning towers of a big submarine were rising above the surface! A Marconi operator came bounding onto the bridge with a message. Rattray grabbed it. He, the captain, and the third officer read it together:

"COMMANDER RMS WALLAROO AM SENDING BOAT FOR SURGEON STOP LIE TO URGENT STOP JOHN KENDALL MASTER SS MOUNT JUPITER."

Captain Peterson glanced from face to face. "What's this?" he repeated huskily.

"It's a message we haven't disobey, sir!" Rattray replied. "If anybody else picks it up it's our business. Don't you understand?"

The mysterious vessel, how on the surface, ran along beside them, two German quick-firers trained upon the Wallaroo—then came the shrill hovel of a shell; the shattering bark of one of the four-inch guns.

The mainmast of the Wallaroo carrying the wireless, crashed with its rigging to the deck.

There were shouts—shouts of execrations. Captain Peterson, a very old and haggard man, walked to the telegraph and jerked it to "stop."

The Wallaroo lay almost motionless upon an oily sea. The submarine, running alongside within hailing distance, rang off at the same moment, and lay there beside the liner.

There was a sudden battle on her deck. They were putting a boat off.

The dhow drew near.

Dawson Haig went on duty at noon. His "beat" was some two miles in extent. But in all the vast gardens and orchards, pavilions and houses it embraced, he met with nothing except numbers of those magnificent proportioned negroes who seemed to grow upon the estate of Yu-an Hee See as freely as palms.

These were the eunuchs to whom Kid Brown had referred contemptuously. But Haig realized that they could be very formidable elements.

The sinister Jackal would soon be safe in a drug-induced sleep. Four hours lay before him in which to justify his foolhardy enterprise of penetrating alone to the stronghold of the enemy.

One clear fact he had grasped. The moon allotted patrol duty were no more than watchdogs, probably selected for their known savagery. Haig wondered if his predecessor had been promoted or assassinated; for his, obviously, was one of the lowliest tasks. From the great mansion itself he was excluded.

Burned up by impatience—not daring to speculate about Eileen—he walked slowly towards the northern extremity of his patrol. And a curious fact obtruded itself. All the eunuchs had disappeared!

And now, coming in sight of the wall which marked the boundary on the north, he heard again, dimly, that babel of many tongues... but outside, in the distant tree-bordered street which led down to the town...

At one point an old lebbek tree overhung the great wall. Haig ran to it, mounted to the lower-most branches, climbed higher, and could see over the wall. A straggling procession was winding down the street towards the port below. The eunuchs could identify by their liveries, but there were many others who wore no distinguishing dress.

There had been an exodus from the great house. Could he take advantage of it? Along a path bordered by almond trees, he walked. Above everything—he must keep cool. Always. Eileen came into the foreground—but he knew, and his conscience cried out, that even greater stakes were being played for.

A state of the wildest excitement prevailed aboard the Wallaroo. What had happened? Had war suddenly been declared? The underwater craft bore no distinguishing number and flew no flag. Then, a smartly dressed man wearing a tarbush had come off in her boat.

Up in the captain's room, Aswami Pasha stood by the desk, smiling. He had boarded the Wallaroo alone, and apparently unarmed, leaving one man, a recognizable pugilist, on duty at the ladder head. There was something terrifying in the Egyptian's smiling audacity. Captain Peterson's gray face was very grim.

"I carry three hundred passengers," said he, "a hundred and eighty of them women and children—or, by G—d! I'd take you at your word."

The Egyptian shrugged his shoulders. "We are both under orders of my commander in the submarine, and you, at the moment, under mine."

"It appears to me, sir," Rattray said, turning to Captain Peterson, "that this thing's an unholy great bluff."

Through a window of the captain's cabin Aswami Pasha pointed to where the wreckage of the mainmast lay, half over the starboard rails.

"You see, we do not hesitate," he murmured. "The dhow has reached position. The Egyptian went on, and—glancing at a jeweled wrist watch—"I must notify you that you now have exactly three minutes in which to make up your mind, Captain."

A boat, packed with negroes and manned by four Arab rowers, was coming from the dhow. The captain exchanged glances with Jack Rattray.

"No alternative, sir—none whatever," said the latter savagely. "Passengers come first. We haven't risk it."

The skipper nodded, and crossing, swung open the door of a safe. He handed keys to the purser.

And so, from the bullion room between decks, two millions of minted money was removed, taken down the ladder, and transferred to the dhow. It was contained in wooden boxes, each holding five thousand pounds, and not too heavy for one man to carry. The work was done by a team of huge negroes. In a constant procession, coming and going like magnified black ants, they worked, until all the boxes were removed from the Wallaroo.

The transshipment, carried out with admirable dispatch under the orders of Aswami Pasha at the head of the ladder, was completed in less than a quarter of an hour.

CHAPTER XI

In the control room of the submarine Yu-an Hee See received constant messages from an unnamed source. Len Chow, the second in command, delivered them:

"P & O BENDIGO INWARD TWENTY MILES SOUTH SOUTHEAST" "BIRBY LINER OXFORDSHIRE OUTWARD FIFTEEN MILES NORTHWEST"

"AMERICAN FREIGHTER JOHN CLAY ADEN TO SUEZ TEN MILES DUE SOUTH"

On receipt of this third message, Yu-an Hee See spoke into a tube. "There is too much delay," he said. "Signal to Ali to draw off in the dhow."

He studied the scene on the Wallaroo. Aswami, at the head of the ladder, raised his hand signifying that the order had already reached him. Three negroes carrying chests, the last of the consignment, climbed into the boat. Aswami followed.

Behind a four-inch quick-firer trained on the liner, the crack German gunner waited and watched. Jo Lung and the Wasp had other duties.

The boat pulled off to the dhow. Yu-an Hee See spoke again down the tube: "All is to take both boats in tow without transshipping the last load." This order was transmitted to a man forward on the deck of the submarine and shouted to Aswami Pasha.

Captain Peterson, bare-headed, gray-faced, stood on the bridge of the Wallaroo. It all seemed unreal, utterly impossible. Even now it was difficult to believe that the pirates had been actually on board his ship—without a blow struck, had removed that precious cargo under his eyes...

Yet, had there been any alternative? Even if the Wallaroo had carried a gun, the fate of all those women and children below must have rested upon the success of one shot.

He stood listening to the pulsing of the auxiliary engine on board the dhow—watching the negroes scrambling onto her stern. Then the boats swung on two lines, and the dhow heaved in for the head of that rocky island near to which they lay. Her deck was black with negroes.

Suddenly, all signs of life vanished from the submarine. Came the faint sound of a bell on the Wallaroo's bridge; the ship began to vibrate, but: "Stand by all boat stations," the captain roared. The order was transmitted, in dying echoes, from point to point of the ship: "Stand by all boat stations... stand by... boat stations... boat stations..."

Peterson sprang to the telegraph and jammed it "Full speed ahead," then leaped to the side of the bridge and looked over again.

He was too late!

Yu-an Hee See sat in the control room of the submarine. Seen through the periscope, the towering hull of the Wallaroo seemed almost to overhang the vicious little warship. Yu-an Hee See spoke softly. "First tube," he said. And the first torpedo was launched against the helpless liner.

Frightened faces of stewards and other members of the crew, some of them with war experience, peered out of portholes. Men were running—there was tumult—desperation.

Yu-an Hee See began to laugh. That weird, piping laughter swept around the dilly little compartment like a breeze from hell.

The torpedo burst its wicked nose—Jo Lung was clever!—squarely into the engine room. There was a monstrous explosion which shook the submarine and steam dropped a veil between the doomed liner and the watching eyes of Yu-an Hee See. Yet he trusted the Wasp, his chief torpedo operator. "Second tube," he directed.

If the first explosion had been an enormous one, the second was such as seemed to rend the very heavens. The second torpedo had registered in Number Two Hold, where twenty cases of potted Stilton for Colombo were stored. They had come aboard in Marseilles just before Doctor Oestler went ashore. They contained enough high explosive to destroy a small town.

Yu-an Hee See rubbed his plump hands together and began to laugh again. Although they had drawn away from the Wallaroo, a veritable tidal wave swept them, but Yu-an laughed on. At last, recovering himself: "Order Ali to cast the boats off and head the dhow back," came his high-pitched instructions.

He glanced up to find Len Chow at his elbow. He took the message which his second in command had brought, adjusted his spectacles, and, still chuckling, read:

"NEWS OF EXPLOSION RELAYED PORT SUDAN HMS PAT-THEIR HEADED FOR YOU."

Yu-an Hee See nodded, read the message a second time, and began very softly to hiss:

KNOW THE TRUTH AND VOTE FOR HON. THOMAS S. RHEA FOR GOVERNOR

Mr. Rhea favors in administration of government strictest economy in the conduct of state affairs, modification of the sales tax law, this to embrace elimination of taxes on foodstuffs and clothing, real tax relief to all home owners, rural and urban, of $7,500, old age pensions, unemployment compensation insurance, more and better highways, and extension of free text book system to include pupils through the twelfth grade.

SALES TAX LAW GREAT BENEFIT TO BOONE COUNTY

By saving taxpayers of Boone County on real estate tax	$20,811.99
By reducing automobile license tax in Boone County	8,509.84
By paying back to Boone County to apply on Bonded debt	19,005.88
By paying to the Boone County Board of Education which was $12,000.00 more than the previous year	28,095.20
By giving free text books to Boone County Children	1,494.85
Total amount of all property and sales tax paid to the State by Boone County	$31,762.70
Total money returned to Boone by State	$48,595.93
Excess of money returned to Boone County over amount paid to State by County	$16,833.23

IF THE SALES TAX LAW HAD NOT BEEN PASSED THE BOONE COUNTY SCHOOLS WOULD HAVE BEEN OPEN ONLY FOUR AND ONE-HALF MONTHS LAST YEAR.

Mr. Chandler says that he will repeal the sales tax law which will reduce the income of the State $10,000,000. How does he intend to replace this amount of money?

He does not state how he proposes to raise the money now produced by the Sales Tax, but in the Special Session of the Legislature on August 31, 1933, he recommended in writing signed by him a tax on "cigarettes and other manufactured products of tobacco." GROWERS should know that a tax of one cent on each package of cigarettes is a tax of $12.50 on each 100 pounds of tobacco.

Or will he place the tax on Real Estate not at 30c on the $100.00, but much higher.

Or will he tax the electric current you consume at 50 per cent, tax your resident telephone at 10 per cent, add one cent a gallon on gasoline and five cents a gallon on oil, all of which Mr. Chandler recommended to the 1932 session of the Legislature. This was part of his program at that time.

VOTERS DO NOT BE DECEIVED. NO GOVERNMENT CAN OPERATE WITHOUT REVENUE. MR. RHEA HAS A SOUND PROGRAM. MR. CHANDLER HAS NO PROGRAM.

THE GARDEN

THE WINTER VEGETABLE STORE
(By John S. Gardner, Ky. College of Agriculture)

Most of the vegetables for the winter are made; at least, most of them are on their way. The month of August is a light gardening month, accordingly, only the routine of weeding and cultivation remaining to be done. In this light it behooves thoughtful gardeners to look about for ways and means properly and safely to keep the vegetables they have made.

Vegetables differ in their storability in several ways. To begin with, there are the pulpy vegetables, tomatoes, melons, peppers and beans whose term of storing must be short, for when they wilt their succulence wanes. The same is true of the salads and the greens. However, it is possible to keep them in a fairly edible state for a longer time than may at first appear, and the necessary equipment is simple, in some instances almost ridiculously so. These perishable vegetables will be discussed later in this series, attention for the present to be directed rather to the keeping of those crops that can be stored for a longer period, and for whose storing, plans must be laid in advance.

The vegetables that admit of storing during a great part of the winter fall into two distinct groups. One group requires a temperature considerably above that of the other; at the same time, the humidity must be less, almost to the point of dryness, in fact. To keep the other group safely and successfully the temperature should be low, just a few degrees above freezing, and the humidity may be quite high. For the first-named group, specially built structures must be provided or modifications must be made to those already on hand. These are often not complicated, but they must fit the peculiarities of the requirements of the other group are best met in special structures, a good cellar, for example, but there are other ways to keep them, requiring only labor.

First to be taken up will be the vegetables whose requirements are more or less rigid, the high-temperature, low-humidity ones. These are squashes and sweet potatoes, and the best way to store them is the way in which commercial producers do it. Their best storing temperature is 50 degrees. In order that the structure may maintain this degree of warmth, it must be warmly built or arranged for heating it must be had. Professional sweetpotato houses provide both.

The walls are built of verticle 2 by 4 studs, sheathed inside and out, then a thickness of building paper laid, and the outside covered with weatherboard or board-and-batten construction. The inside face of the wall is finished in tongue-and-groove. Thus the sidewalls consist of 4 thickness of lumber and two of paper, with a tight dead-air space between further to impede the loss of warmth. In some houses, the spaces between the studs are filled with screened cinders, with cork or wool sawdust. These materials are porous in themselves, and serve to keep the air strictly "dead." This is of decided advantage, for sometimes within empty "dead-air spaces," circulation of air takes place, reducing their effectiveness. If any filling is used, particularly if the proposed material is sawdust, extreme care should be taken to see that it is thoroughly dry, for if not, it may contribute enough humidity to the house to cause "sweating," the great difficulty to be avoided.

The floors of sweetpotato houses are double, made of sheathing and flooring with building paper between. The ceiling is of double construction, too. It may be built to the roof rafters themselves or a false ceiling a few feet below the roof line may be made. The details of ventilation and heating, and the management of the house as a whole will be discussed next week.

OSCAR VEST.

The attention of our readers is called to the following statement issued by Oscar Vest, of Carrollton, candidate for the Democratic renomination of Railroad Commissioner in this, the Second District:

"In seeking indorsement I am making my race solely on the record I have made in that office and which is an open book.

"During my service as Railroad Commissioner, I have at all times guarded and protected the interest of the shippers. Myself a manufacturer and shipper of ice, quite naturally I have been concerned with whatever pertained to the welfare of shippers. As a result I have been instrumental in saving farmers, livestock men, manufacturers and all other shippers many thousands of dollars in the adjustment of freight rates designed to make them fair and just.

"In this connection there are still pending before the Commission other cases involving rate adjustments and better service, which I am particularly eager to have a part in settling and for which I feel I am the better qualified by reason of my knowledge and experience in such matters.

"Should my candidacy meet with your favorable consideration, and I be given an indorsement, I pledge the same devotion to your interests and to render service that will meet your fullest approbation.

"The Democrats of the district realize that running in thirty-four counties it was impossible for me to meet all of them as I would have liked, but, under the circumstances, I trust they may take the wish for the deed. In conclusion, with the August primary near at hand, I shall deeply appreciate any support that may be given me and at the same time tendering to the Democrats of the district my heartfelt gratitude for what they have done for me in the past."

MUST HELP DISTRICT SCHOOLS

Hundreds of county schools will not have sufficient funds to carry on a winter free school and must be taken care of by the state. This has been done in Ohio and other states and a law must be passed to provide a foundation fund for bounty schools in locations where the lack of number of children and wealth of country makes it impossible to run the public school.

The present set up in the new school law works a hardship on small districts in hilly sections of the state.

These children are entitled to a school close enough for attendance. Many a farm section has been damaged by the destruction of the rural school adjoining it where the children attended school and came in early at night to do up the chores.

Eight hundred and eighty-two out of a possible even hundred Boone County AAA Burley tobacco growers voted in the National referendum which closed Saturday. Eighty-nine and thirty-four hundredths per cent of these growers favor the continuation of the AAA Burley tobacco program in some form. The present contract expires with this year's crop. ## THE FARM AND HOME

(Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station)

Shortage of vitamin C is thought to cause tooth decay and rheumatism. Foods that are an excellent source of this vitamin are tomatoes, lettuce, cabbage, rutabagas, oranges, carrots, apples and bananas. Vitamin C is destroyed by long cooking.

More damage is done to machinery by rust and exposure to the weather than by wear as a result of actual use. When the season is over for a machine, it should be cleaned, the bright parts covered with grease, the wood parts painted, and it stored in a dry place.

Close cutting of lawn grass, especially in dry weather, does much damage; often materially thinning the grass and giving the appearance of poor soil. Set the mower to cut as high as it is possible, and cut grass only when necessary.

In buying cloth, keep in mind its intended use. If for hard use, requiring much washing, be sure it is color fast and durable. If for occasional use, daintiness may be the deciding factor. For long use, select designs and colors of which one will not tire.

With raspberry harvest over, remove and burn old canes, as one means of reducing disease. Raspberry canes grow in one year, produce a crop the next growing season, and then die. Unless the patch is confined to rows or hills, it may become a thicket.

Hot and dry weather requires extra attention to supplying water to chickens, cows and other livestock. Ponds often become unattractive sources of drinking water in August. Stock farmers are coming to realize more and more the value of good water.

AMONG THE COUNTY AGENTS

McCORMICK DEERING— the ONLY Cream Separator with STAINLESS STEEL DISCS with Electrically Welded Stainless Steel Spacers

Stainless Steel Discs—this amazing improvement in cream separators is another triumph for McCormick-Deering. Here is a cream separator that brings to your milk room the same positive assurance of cleanliness, sanitation, and safety that you demand of kitchen equipment.

Stainless Steel Discs are absolutely rustproof. They are made of tough, strong, closely grained metal that will stay the same for years—there is no soft coating to wear away. As a result, the bowl in the McCormick-Deering will remain in balance a great deal longer than one having ordinary lined carbon-steel discs.

Call on us for a demonstration—see this latest and greatest achievement in McCormick-Deering Cream Separators.

RHEA LEADING STATE BY 12,000 CHANDLER CARRIES CO. BY 100

Run-Off Primary Appears Certain

Close Vote For Governors With 400,000 Polled

The count of the ballots cast at the primary election held last Saturday was completed by the Election Commissioners Wednesday and a tabulation of the vote for Governor and Representative are published in this issue. A. B. "Happy" Chandler carried the county by 100 over Thos. S. Rhea. P. L. Sidebottom for Representative carried the county by 20 votes. The latest reports indicate that Thos. S. Rhea will carry the state by a plurality of about 20,000 over A. B. "Happy" Chandler—this will require a "run-off" primary September 7th, as under the primary law a candidate must receive a majority of all votes cast in that race. The County Election Commissioners who supervised the counting of the vote is composed of Sheriff W. B. Cotton, Democratic Commissioner W. B. Johnson, Walton and Republican Commissioner, Liston Hemphing Constance, and County Clerk C. D. Benson is clerk of the board.

CHAS. ROBERTS

DROWNS IN POND NEAR FLORENCE. WAS 55 YEARS OLD. ER-LANGER FIRE DEPARTMENT WAS CALLED AND SUCCEEDED IN LOCATING BODY.

Charles Roberts, 55, was accidentally drowned in the pond on the Joshua Tanner farm about one mile west of Florence. He was living with his niece Mrs. J. E. Wolf, and had been working in the hay field all day. After the days work they went to the pond to swim. He had complained several times during the day that his legs were cramping, and it is supposed that when he went into the water he was seized with cramps and drowned. The pond had recently been dredged and was about 20 feet deep. A number of citizens were called but they could not locate the body and the Erlanger Fire Department was called and dragged the pond with grab hooks and located the body, but as he was dressed in a bathing suit could not be removed until Geo. Feldhaus, a member of the department arrived, located the body and removed it from the pond. He was born in Kent in county and resided in that county all of his life. Magistrate Hut White was called and rendered a verdict that Mr. Roberts met his death by accidental drowning.

BARN BURNED

Saturday evening August 3rd at eight o'clock lightning struck the large octagonal barn of Mr. Bert Loomis on the Petersburg Pike two and one half miles north west of Burlington. He was about fifty feet from the barn when it was struck and ran in the barn and found that the hay was on the floor of the barn was burning and he attempted to put it out, but the fire rapidly spread. A load of hay was on a wagon in the drive way and it could not be gotten from the barn. Other than the wagon no other farming tools were in the barn. The fire spread to a corn crib just a short distance east of the barn which was destroyed with the barn and a plow that was in the drive way of the crib. A number of people responded to the call when notified of the fire and with heroic efforts Mr. Loomis' residence was protected. The wind was blowing from the barn to the dwelling and large numbers of burning snuggles fell on the dwelling but no damage from fire was done to the dwelling, the roof was damaged to some extent by water and the getting the burning shingles from the roof. In the barn at the time of the fire was more than thirty-five tons of hay and other feed which was a complete loss. The fire could be seen for miles. Mr. Loomis is partially protected by insurance on the buildings.

The annual Harvest Home Fair will take place at the Historic Harvest Home Fir Grounds near Limaburg on the Limaburg and Hebron road Saturday, Sept. 21, according to the Secretary Ben Zimmer of the Fair Association.

The fair, held a little later than is the custom in order to give many of its patrons an opportunity to visit the State Fair the previous week. The Harvest Home Fair has been held for over a half century, and is now the only county fair to be held in Boone county with the exception of the annual county 4-H Club Fair which will also be held at Harvest Home this year. The 4-H Club Fair will be held Saturday August 24th and the Harvest Home Fair Saturday September 21.

Mr. Zimmer, the Association Secretary announces that special attention will be given 4-H Club work at the Harvest Home Fair also. Don't forget the two fairs at the same place, the 4-H Club Fair Saturday August 24th and the Harvest Home Fair Saturday September 21.

The election in Boone last Saturday passed quietly with a total of 2710 Democratic and 210 Republican votes cast, just a little more than one half of the vote in this county. The reports from other parts of the state is that a very large vote was cast, in some localities, local bond issues and other local matters caused a large number of votes to be cast. It seems that while Primary Elections for state and district offices are demanded, yet the voters fall in large numbers to exercise their right of suffrage, this does not apply to the primary elections for County officers, where each and every voter knows the candidates for all of the offices.

The actual crushing of agricultural limestone is scheduled to start at Hebron the first of this coming week according to Joe Broderick, Assistant County Agent who is working on this project in Boone and Grant counties.

Farmers to-date have not been able to receive relief labor and those who are having stone crushed at the present are supplying their own labor. Relief labor, however, will be available in the near future and farmers who use relief labor will be taken care of at the earliest possible date.

August is one of the best months for sowing alfalfa and fall the best time for seeding grasses. Farmers having stone crushed are expecting to use large amounts for the growing of better legumes and grass crops.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

A study of sturdy self-reliance under trying conditions is suggested in a prize-winning letter on old age pensions appearing in the current issue of The Progressive Farmer.

"The thing that has so many thousands of the fathers and mothers of this generation, who have toiled their lives away until they can no longer work, must now go unfed, unattended. I am 68; have worked hard by day and studied hard by night, and endeavored to live honestly and justly with my fellowman. But I am past manual labor; partially paralyzed in one leg and foot with an almost helpless wife to care for and a homeless sister. We haven't starved, it's true, for I have a little shop, work on guns and clocks, but I don't average $5 a month. We haven't been able to buy any clothes or pay taxes. I don't believe in going to any such extremes as $200-a-month old age pensions, but if $30 per month were added to my little earnings I could buy clothes and hire some strong unemployed person to do my manual labor for me, thereby benefiting others beside the old age pensioner himself."

ROOSEVELT INTERESTED IN RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

"President Roosevelt is one of the greatest rural electrification enthusiasts," says Morris L. Cooke, new Rural Electrification Chief, in the July Progressive Farmer.

"As a farmer he is tremendously interested in the welfare of the rural people, and he has often stressed the necessity for giving the country people those advantages now found in the cities. He has aided in building better roads, in improving rural schools, and in raising the level of prices which the farmer obtains for his products. Now he is intent on bringing electricity to the farm."

"In the President's opinion electricity can relieve the drudgery of the housewife and lift a great burden off the shoulders of the hard-working farmer." Fifty million Americans are directly concerned with the future of agriculture. What affects them affects the whole nation, and in this program of rural electrification, the President and the Rural Electrification Administration see an opportunity to bring substantial help not alone to the farmers but to the nation as a whole."

YOUR CHILDREN'S BILL OF RIGHTS

Some thoughtful advice for parents s offered by Ruth Ryan in the July Progressive Farmer.

"I wish I could earnestly exhort all parents to allow their children some freedom. If you do not trust your children, do you think they will make any effort to rise to your good opinion of them? Don't you think that if your neighbor were watching you every day to see if you stole any of his corn, you would be almost tempted to steal it just to show him you could? Of course you wouldn't do it, because it would be against your principles. In the same way, your daughter may not do the terrible things you dread—because they are against her principles! You should have more respect for the moral fiber with which you equipped her."

"Every wise parent knows that there is unguarded time in every girl's life when she can fall into mischief if she hasn't too much sense or honor to do so, of her own accord. No amount of watching will improve her character. How can a man strengthen any muscle except by use? How can you expect your children to make wise decisions if they are never allowed to decide? Don't force your daughter to adopt underhand methods. If you forbade her to eat but she slipped her bread, you couldn't condemn her morals although you forced her into a false position. And I doubt if the Good Judge would hold it against her as much as he would against you."

LEAVE BLUEGRASS LONG IN SUMMER

During hot and dry weather the lawn should not be clipped at regular intervals, points out N. R. Elliott, professor of landscape architecture at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

When clipping is done, the mower should be set to leave the grass 2 inches long or longer, if possible. This will protect the crowns of the grass plants and prevent browning by the sun.

The application of water to lawns during the summer encourages the growth of wild grasses, especially crabgrass. Mr. Elliott therefore, believes that it usually is more satisfactory not to water the lawn, even though the grass becomes brown. Bluegrass is a cool weather crop, and revives with the rains and lower temperatures of fall.

If crabgrass is present in spots, rake it up and keep it clipped to prevent the formation of seed. About the middle of September, rake out as much as possible of the crabgrass and prepare a seedbed by loosening the soil. Then make a liberal application to these spots of a mixture of 90 per cent bluegrass and 10 per cent reedtop.

Sow bluegrass seed over the entire lawn about the middle of September. If the sod is fairly good, sow a pound of seed to 400 square feet. If the grass is thin, sow two pounds.

DON'T MIND IF I DO (Boston Transcript)

A dinner guest in a Virginia home was telling his host how to prepare ham that would have been even better than the famous Virginia ham.

Guest—Place the ham in a deep pan, and the first day soak it in a bottle of rye whiskey and let it cook awhile. The second day add a bottle of old Jamaica rum, and the third day a bottle of port wine and the fourth day a bottle of Bourbon.

Host (turning to the colored cook) What do you think of that?

Cook—Ah don't know 'bout de ham, but sho' sounds like mighty fine gravy.

ON A FARM

There's work on a farm from dawn till night.

Work by sun and candle-light, But there's health on a farm, and gladness, too,

And a pride no city folk ever knew. A pride in seeing the seed you sow

Wake and rise and lift and grow; A pride in being, when harvest's done,

An equal partner with rain and sun. A partner with God Himself. What pay

To transcend that can they hope for—they Who are caught in the city and only see

In dreams the farms where they long to be?

There's work on a farm. But I'm glad, aren't you,

That I'm out on a farm where there's work to do?

Oh, cities and streets for those who choose, But give me the sun and earth to use!

Mary Carolyn Davies in The Progressive Farmer.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field
FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Most of the talk about the possibility of defeating Franklin D. Roosevelt next year, which still seems a most unlikely event, but is being discussed wherever politicians congregate, seems to hinge on the possibility of either a conservative Democratic bolt, or of a fusion ticket—a combination of Republicans with conservative Democrats.

Anything can happen, but third tickets are very difficult to start, and fusions next to impossible to get along. Of the two, the fusion would seem to have the most promise of success, but by the same token is less likely to happen.

More effective than either is simply a wholesale but unofficial bolt of party leaders. That is what happened to the Democrats when Alfred E. Smith was nominated in 1928, and when prohibition and the religious issue resulted in a considerable fraction of the Democracy of many states after staying home on election day, or going all the way and voting the Republican ticket.

Contrasted with the La Follette third party four years earlier, this was tremendous in its effects. But for the present purposes it is interesting to look back at how the La Follette third party in 1924 worked inversely to any conceivable hopes of its backers.

It will be recalled that La Follette carried one state, Wisconsin. That is all his party figured, so far as the electoral vote tabulation showed. But the fact that the La Follette party was in the race changed a great many electoral votes. The point worth considering is that in every case, the effect was to drive electoral votes to the Republican nominee, instead of to the Democratic nominee.

This was because the country was prosperous, and was afraid of any element of uncertainty being injected. Widespread polls taken by various independent agencies, particularly the Literary Digest, showed, early in the campaign, that there was a possibility La Follette might carry a number of states. For example, this poll showed in September that La Follette was very close to Coolidge in California.

Scared Democrats

This resulted in frightened big a great many Democrats into voting for Coolidge. They preferred Coolidge to a period of uncertainty, with the house of representatives fighting to elect some one President.

If present convictions are not changed, a great many conservative Democrats next year will prefer almost any situation which might develop to the re-election of Roosevelt. Just as a great many progressive Republicans will prefer Roosevelt's re-election to the success of any Republican candidate.

Hence the situation promises to be much more like that of 1896 when the Palmer and Buckner ticket was put up by the gold Democrats, not with any thought of really electing a Democrat, but with the frank object of giving Democrats who would not vote for any Republican some place to go. The object, therefore, was really to elect McKinley, and it succeeded tremendously, especially in such border states as Maryland, Kentucky and Missouri.

It is rather curious that the most difficult method of attempting to defeat Roosevelt—by a fusion ticket—offers such possibilities this time. There is no strong Republican in sight for the nomination, but there is a whole flock of conservative Democrats who would fit well in the picture for a fusion nomination. For example, Senator Byrd of Virginia, Ex-Governor Ely of Massachusetts, Senator Vandenberg of Ohio, and Senator Donahoe of Ohio.

There are those who think however, that a Republican like Governor Landon of Kansas, or Governor Hoffman of New Jersey, might be all the stronger because they are not so well-known nationally—on the theory that fewer people would vote against them.

Santa Claus in Politics

Seldom has the power of Santa Claus in politics been so forcibly demonstrated as by the recent senate vote on the AAA amendments, one of the chief purposes of which was to freeze the processing taxes beyond the probability of being upset by the Supreme Court.

But this danger is not past, and for a most interesting reason. Expectancy here is that the present processing taxes will be held unconstitutional by the high court. Legal opinion here is divided as to whether the new taxes will pass the test or not. But legal opinion is virtually united that if it had not been for two factors, the high court would uphold the next taxes.

One of these points would have been met if congress, in fixing the taxes, had left out the formula for changing them. This formula has to do with prices paid the farmers for commodities. It provides for a change in the processing taxes if and when such prices reach "parity" or the amount considered by New Dealers as essentially fair for the farmer.

The other would have been met if congress had levied the taxes in one bill, and put all the other agricultural provisions in another.

These two changes would have made the processing taxes, in the opinion of some able lawyers here, strictly exercises, and thus well within the clearly defined right of congress to raise money. When the language of a statute is perfectly clear, the Supreme court has held in decision after decision, it is not up to the court to delve into the reasons for the passage of the act—to read the debates and reports of committee hearings, etc.

But the fact that the taxes are included in an agricultural bill, plus the fact that a formula for changing the taxes in the event that farm prices of the commodities affected change, brings the processing taxes in the new bill close to the border line. It opens the door to the Supreme court to look into the motives for imposing the tax. It proves what every one of course knows, that the tax is not levied for general revenue purposes, but to play a part in bringing about a price change—or to improve the estate of a definite fraction of the population—the farmers.

Doubtful Situation

This would have been just as true if congress had left out the formula for changing the taxes, and if it had passed the taxes in a separate bill. But in that case the court would have been almost obliged to follow its normal course, and examine merely the text of the bill attached. In all probability it would not have gone into the allegation, which will be made when the present bill is attacked, that the tax is unconstitutional because it is not levied strictly for revenue, but to bring about a specific reform, and in favor of a particular class.

But congress did not dare use this simple device for insuring constitutionality of the AAA amendments. Because if there had been a separate tax bill, the sales tax nature of the measure would have been too glaring. The levies would have stood out as taxing the poor man's necessities—food and clothing.

This is not a predication that the court will hold the new law unconstitutional. No one knows that. As a matter of fact, it is an open question, about which there is sharp division of opinion. It may be that the high court will decide that the processing tax on wheat, or corn or hogs, or cotton, is on all fours, so far as constitutional authority is concerned, with the six cents a package federal tax on cigarettes. Also, that it will ignore the formula for changing the amount of the tax.

No one knows, but the fact remains that the whole situation is doubtful.

Golf Parallel

Golfing senators and representatives often chuckle about the misfortune of a long hitting player who drove the difficult green of a hole on a local course, and then putted out of bounds. It sounds incredible, but it is absolutely true. There were a number of witnesses.

That, in the judgment of keen observers in Washington, is what the utility magnates did in their telegraphing campaign to prevent passage of the "death sentence." They have come "pretty near to nullifying all the effects of a remarkable demonstration of the wide spread of the shareholders in public utilities—a demonstration which caused the house of representatives to vote against the President by a majority of 111. And all because they overrid the last touches.

They putted out of bounds! It is just another chapter in the long story of stupidity piled on blunder that has been the record of the public relations of one of this country's great and successful industries.

As a great statesman once remarked: "It was worse than a crime—it was a blunder."

For it was unnecessary! The effect on the national legislators had already been accomplished by the letter writing campaign from security holders when this wholesale pouring in of telegrams signed by names taken from city directories, now exposed by the investigating committee, was undertaken.

Apparently Genuine

In fact, there was a great deal of quiet checking up on writers of these protesting letters and telegrams by the senators and representatives. And in the early stages most of the letters and wires apparently were genuine. Often the writers did not know any of the facts at all about the merits of the controversy. They wrote because the officers of the corporations in which they held stock asked them to—because the officers told them the "death sentence" would affect the value of their securities.

In this last question the legislators were not so much interested. If a number of their constituents believed, rightly or wrongly, that a vote for the "death sentence" was a vote which would take money out of their pockets, that vote might be highly dangerous when election day rolled around. Particularly if the "death sentence" passed, and the value of the stocks in constituents' hands did decline.

The constituent might never find out the truth about the matter, but he would hold his senator or member of the house responsible, and be very apt to vote against him, both in primaries and elections.

D. E. Castleman brought to town Monday morning from that garden of his, a tomato that weighed one pound and 9/10 ounces. It was what he calls the Ponderosa variety, and looked like it was a very fine article, but as to its eating qualities, we can not say, as we did not get to sample it.

An exchange says that a humble boy with a shining pal, went singing gaily down the vale, to where the cow with a brindle tail, on the alfalfa did regale. A bumble bee did gaily sail, over the soft and shady vale, to where the boy with a shining pal was milking the cow with a brindle tail. The bee lit down on the cow's left ear, her feet flew up through the atmosphere, and thru the leaves of a cottonwood tree the boy soared into eternity.

Mrs. Nancy Hughes, consort of the late E. A. Hughes, died of old age at her home in Burlington, at 4 o'clock last Friday morning, in her 82nd year. After a short service at the grave by Rev. There was a party of young girls who attended services one Sunday night recently and thought they were having a good time by making sport and laughing. They should conduct themselves well while in the house of the Lord. One of them knows better, but the others do not. There will be a bountiful crop of water melons this year. There are about 60 acres of them in the bottoms around here. Ennis Nixon has about five acres of the finest we have seen.

Roman Soldiers Brought

Harp, Back From Britain

The Irish claim to have originated the harp. Undoubtedly the oriental harps were earlier, though the Roman legions brought the Irish harp back from Britain, asserts a writer in the Washington Post.

The old Irish harp had three rows of strings. The old laws of Wales mention the use of the harp as one of three points that distinguished the freeman from the slave and pretender.

It was often used by the king, his skillful use of it. Of the king, his musicians, and the fifteen of the realm could own a harp; and slaves were forbidden even to touch the instrument. For a time the popularity of the harp was threatened by the guitar, when a troupe of Spanish players toured England. But when humble people began to buy guitars, fashionable people gave up plans for learning it, and continued to buy harps.

The orchestral harp has 50 strings. The frame rests on the pedestal, which contains the pedals, the large hollow body or back rising from this, with the soundboard at its upper face. The strings are attached with the pins by which they are tuned. The harp has seven pedals, each double-acting, and so contrived that certain strings can be shortened and their pitch raised a semitone or a tone. The instrument may thus be set in any desired key.

Harp music is written for two hands, on two staves similar to piano music. Flat keys sound best, because then most of the strings are open, vibrating at full length.

Incidentally, dogs are not the only animals that have been broken to point game. One famous instance of a pig trained to point occupies quite a bit of space in the writings of some authorities of the breed.

With the introduction of firearms, resulting in hunting becoming more general than in the days of snaring, it became desirable to have a dog that would point game without flushing it. This was needed to give the hunter, with his slow-firing, muzzle-loading weapon, time to come up on the game and fix the rest on which the heavy guns of the period had to be held. It is probable that a smooth-coated hunting dog was first trained for this purpose and that finally, with sufficient training, pointing became so much of an instinct that it was not difficult to train puppies along these lines.

Jerusalem Most Revered

Spot of Religious World

Jerusalem itself is a revelation. Its narrow, winding streets lead to spots revered all over the world. Through the crooked way is the Church of the Holy Sepulchre where pilgrims from every corner of the earth come to worship, observes a writer in the Washington Post. Set in an open square is the Dome of the Rock (Mosque of Omar), sacred to the Mohammedans, and almost lost in the maze of turnings and alleyways is the so-called ancient Walling Wall of the Jews where the prayers of the Children of Israel float up on the four winds to heaven. The city itself is filled with Arabs, Greeks, Jews and Turks. Queues of little shops line the streets. To the west is Mount Zion, Jehovah's dwelling place. On the east once stood the castle of David. On the north stood the Temple of Solomon, where is now the Mosque of Omar. Nearby are the Garden of Gethsemane, the site of Calvary and the Mount of Olives.

Among the picturesque Judean hills about five miles from Jerusalem is the birthplace of Christ, Bethlehem, sacred to Christians and also holding many sacred traditions of the Jews and the Moslems. Here Rachel died and was buried. Here is the site of the beautiful story of Ruth and here was spent the childhood of David. In the Church of the Nativity is the cave, or grotto, where it is believed Christ was born.

There are several different kinds of Praying Mantids in North America known by the common names of Devil's Rear Horses, Soothsayers and Mule-Killers, the latter name being given to a species occurring in the South, which is believed to poison stock with a brownish fluid which they emit from their mouths. The name Praying Mantid was given to them in view of the fact that one of the favorite attitudes of these creatures is supposed to be devout. It is said that these insects are the only ones that can look over their shoulders. All are beneficial insects owing to the fact that they destroy numbers of injurious insects.

Praying Mantids

When Noise Is Harmful
Is noise definitely injurious to health? This topical question is discussed from a new angle by an ear specialist in the British Medical Journal. A healthy man, he states, can stand ordinary traffic noise without suffering much, if any, damage. This, however, does not hold good for the over sensitive and weakly. The grave damage that noise inflicts upon the sick is emphasized. There are many diseases, says the specialist, in which quiet is of much greater importance than diet.

Rat Deadly Enemy

The rat is one of man's deadliest enemies, as it has spread bubonic plague throughout the world for more than 2,000 years and has been responsible for more untimely deaths than all the wars in history. This dread disease, writes Freling Foster, in Collier's Weekly, transmitted to man by bites of the rat's infected fleas, has killed an average of 2,500 persons every day since the birth of Christ.

Indian Bible Oldest

The first Bible published in America was printed in the Indian language after the translation of the missionary John Eliot. It was issued in 1663, more than a century before part of the book was published in English in 1777. A few years later, in 1782, a complete English version was issued in Philadelphia.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Walt Comes From Germany

The waltz was introduced from Germany into France at the end of the Eighteenth century and into England in 1812. Here it was at first ridiculed but soon achieved unequalled popularity.

Origin of Pointer Not

Known, Writer Asserts

As with some other breeds, the question of the origin of the pointer is a matter of controversy. A number of authorities contend that the pointer originated on the continent of Europe, probably in Spain, and was imported into England. The majority of best opinion, however, fixes England as the birthplace of the breed, writes Frank F. Dole, in the New York Herald-Tribune.

It is pointed out that old English writings regarding the pointer antedates writings about a similar breed in other countries. Furthermore, it is argued, with plenty of logic, that had the breed originated elsewhere it would have had some foreign or semi-foreign name, but the fact that it always has been called the "pointer" points to its development in a country where the name pointer would have applied to a dog that pointed. It is not difficult to see the point of that argument!

With the introduction of firearms, resulting in hunting becoming more general than in the days of snaring, it became desirable to have a dog that would point game without flushing it. This was needed to give the hunter, with his slow-firing, muzzle-loading weapon, time to come up on the game and fix the rest on which the heavy guns of the period had to be held. It is probable that a smooth-coated hunting dog was first trained for this purpose and that finally, with sufficient training, pointing became so much of an instinct that it was not difficult to train puppies along these lines.

Incidentally, dogs are not the only animals that have been broken to point game. One famous instance of a pig trained to point occupies quite a bit of space in the writings of some authorities of the breed.

All Animals Lay Ears

Back Out of Harm's Way

In all kinds of deer, including the moose, and in all antelopes and other animals having horns of any kind on the head, these weapons spring from the forehead in front of the ears. This must naturally be so, because one of the points of usefulness of these appendages to an animal is as a protection to the ears, which are of the greatest importance as a means of safety by warning of approaching danger.

The mode of resistance by such an animal to an attack by a rival of its own kind, or from any beast seeking to kill it, or one of its females or kids, is by meeting the enemy with lowered head and bayonet-like work with its horns. Were they situated behind instead of before the ears, these tender organs would be smashed and put out of service, at least to a serious degree. Horses, dogs, cats, every sort of animal is exceedingly careful of its ears, laying them back out of harm's way when a fight is on or even expected.—Montreal Herald.

Transvaal's Wild Life

An outstanding sanctuary for wild life lies in the northeastern portion of the Transvaal bordering on Portuguese East Africa, between the Crocodile river and the Pretoria-Lourenco Marques railway on the south, and the Limpopo river and Rhodesia on the north. It has a length of some 220 miles and an average width of about 40 miles, rather larger in area than Wales. It presents a vast variety of scenery, from the wild gorges where the great rivers thread their way through the Limpopo hills, to the open, palm-dotted flats of the Shingweddi, and the dense thorn bush country of the Sabi river. Away to the west, visible from all portions of the park, tower the giant Drakensberg peaks, from whose summits the low red appears like a huge billiard table, although on closer acquaintance it is found to be anything but flat and monotonous.

Radium as Element

Radioactivity has proved that some, and possibly all, of the elements are decomposable, yet radio-active changes are entirely different from any known chemical reaction. Moreover they are so exceedingly slow that they are practically negligible, and the metal radium itself, though being gradually transformed into the gases helium and niton, is unhesitatingly classed as an element. The essential fact about every chemical element is its relative atomic or combining weight, which is constant and unchangeable and forms an unvarying characteristic of the element.

Sakellaridis, Soft Fiber

Sakellaridis is soft, silky, long-staple fiber and normally is a prime favorite with the manufacturers of fine laces, fine lawns and ladies' fine handkerchiefs. In its heyday the staple was one and one-half inches long, compared with one inch for American upland middling and with two inches for American sea island—the last named being the only competitor sakellaridis has had since the mysterious Jean Sakellaridis first produced and named the plant in the early years of the present century.

"Worthless" Stocks Have Value

Supposedly worthless stocks and bonds of thousands of American companies, now out of existence, writes J. F. Milligan, Santa Monica, Calif., in Collier's Weekly, still have a definite value and the holders of these securities can obtain the money due them by applying to the receiver, trustee or Court of Chancery holding it. The value of these unclaimed funds is estimated to be about $100,000,000.

THE GARDEN

THE WINTER VEGETABLE STORAGE

(By John S. Gardner, Ky. College of Agriculture)

Last week, the principles of sweetpotato house construction, as exemplified by commercial structures, were given. This week, management details are to be discussed, and modifications of commercial methods home gardeners may adopt in storing their crops.

An important part of storage is proper ventilation. At the beginning of the storage period, immense amounts of moisture must be passed off; thereafter, dryness must be maintained. In commercial houses, this is effected by providing vents at the highest point in the storage for the escape of moist air, which by reason of its nature automatically rises. To replace the escaping air, vents for intake of fresh air are placed as near the floor line as possible, or in the floor itself. With both sets of vents open, circulation of air is produced, and moisture is carried off.

Not many gardeners and not many producers of small lots of the potatoes have facilities like the commercial men have, but they may still keep their potatoes successfully.

The simplest way is to put the potatoes in crates or boxes placed in a room in which a fire is kept, a living room, for example. To assure their not cooling excessively during the night, the potatoes may be wrapped individually in paper or the boxes may be covered with sacking. Further to protect them from cold, the boxes may be kept raised above the floor line; the higher, the better. Another way of keeping sweetpotatoes in boxes of sand or dry soil, the potatoes kept separate from one another. Ventilation is assured both by the paper and the soil, and by reason of the potatoes being kept from touching rats that might start here and there, will not spread, or at least, spread slowly.

A better place to store potatoes (and other crop that needs a high temperature and low humidity) is in a cellar in which the house heating plants is located. To make doubly sure that the boxes of potatoes are surrounded with warm, dry air, they should be set high off the floor, in fact, hung to the ceiling joists, and near the heater.

In case the boxes of potatoes are too numerous to be so placed, they should be blocked off the floor six inches or so, and the room ventilated by opening the cellar windows, usually set near the ceiling, and by admitting air through the outside tellar door, across which, sacking or a tarpaulin has been tacked in such way that only the bottom quarter is left open. Thus the fresh dry air, admitted to the room, will rise through the potatoes to replace the air escaping thru the open cellar window. A week or two in the fall of this sort of ventilation, even without a fire, will "cure" the potatoes, and if moisture is seen to gather at any time later, opening both "vents" for an hour or two will dry them off again. Enough heat is given off by the average heater to furnish a temperature proper for the successful storage of sweetpotatoes and also squash.

If there is no central heating plant on which to depend, occasional warming of the sweetpotato storage part of the cellar may be necessary. On the size of the room depends the heating arrangement to be chosen. Even a kerosene heater may be made to do, particularly if it is placed in such a way that the admitted air passes by it. A temperature of 50 is well to observe. Certainly risk is involved if it falls much below that for any length of time, but if curing has been properly done and if air may freely circulate, as just explained, danger from occasional chilling is less.

EAST BEND

(Delayed)

This community was saddened and shocked when the news reached here of the death of Mr. E. A. Skillman.

Miss Gladys Isaacs spent the first part of the week with her sister Mrs. Henry Black and family.

Miss Fay Kelly, of near Warsaw, spent several days this week with her cousin Miss Wauwetta Lea Ryle.

Mr. and Mrs. I. D. Isaacs and family entertained Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Sam Combs and two children, of Sugar Creek, Gallatin county, and Mr. Melbert Combs, of same place, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Black, of this place.

The Death Angel visited the home of Mr. Bernard Hodges and took from him his beloved wife, Mrs. Bertha Belle Woods Hodges. She departed this life July 27. God in his gentle way took this young wife in her early days, only being 28 years of age, but God has prepared her a home and he shall take us to it soon or later. May this young husband and aged father and brothers and many other relatives look to our dear Savior for comfort. If you only put your trust in Him that does all things for the best, he will never leave you comfortless.

Several have been attending the revival at the Baptist church.

May God bless this family and be with them through their sorrow and all other times, and that they may look to Him for all things and all be together in that Heavenly Home some day.

Lesson for August 11

DANIEL

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 1:8-20.
GOLDEN TEXT—Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God?—1 Corinthians 6:19.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How Daniel Grew Strong.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Ten Times Strong.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Obeying the Laws of Health.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Motives for Total Abstinence.

The lesson committee has designated this lesson, "Temperance and Health." In the use of this a temperance lesson it must be borne in mind that it is temperance in the sense of self-mastery, rather than having to do with indulgence in intoxicating liquors. Daniel's self-mastery was due to his right relation and loyalty to his God. It is utterly futile to hope to enforce a program of temperance upon those who are in rebellion against God.

I. Daniel in Captivity in Babylon (vv. 1-4).

Daniel with his companions were carried away to Babylon in the first siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. At the command of the king, certain choice young men were carried away because they were "skilled in wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science," that they might be trained to stand in the king's palace.

II. Daniel's Trials (vv. 5-7).

1. Conscience tested (v. 5). By the appointment of the king, a daily provision was arranged of the king's meat and wine for Daniel and his companions. This was contrary to the custom among the godly Jews. Being contrary to the Jewish customs they could not conscientiously partake of them.

2. The change of name (vv. 6, 7). Among the Hebrews names were given to children which were most significant. Daniel means "God is my Judge." The significance of this name is that all the problems of life were submitted to God for a decision. God was made the arbitrator of his life. His name was changed to Belshazzar, which means "Bel's prince." I mean, therefore, one whom the chief god of the Babylonians favors. Eranah means "gift or beloved of Jehovah." His name was changed to Shadrach, which signified "Illumined by the sun god, Raah." Michael means "who is as God?" His name was changed to Meshach, which means "who is like the goddess, Sheshach, the gentle one?" Azariah means "Jehovah is our help." This was changed to Abednego, which means "the servant of Nego." Back of the change of names was the attempt of Satan to wipe out the name of the true God.

III. Daniel's Courtesy (vv. 8-13).

Daniel seems to have been the spokesman for the company. Although his heart was fixed, he did not forget to be a gentleman. He requested to be excused from this meat and drink in order that he be not defiled. We should learn from this that in times even of great trials we should be courteous. When Daniel asked that a test be made as to the effect of the food upon the countenance of himself and companions, gracious consideration was given to them.

IV. Daniel's Triumph (vv. 14-21).

1. As to physical health (vv. 14-16). A test was made for ten days, and it was shown that Daniel and his companions were fairer in countenance and fatter in flesh than those who indulged in the eating of the king's meat. This meat and wine would have been pleasant to the palate, but would have meant a compromise of the conscience. It is obligatory upon God's children today to abstain from that which is contrary to his law.

2. Spiritual insight (v. 17). Because of Daniel's loyalty to God, Nebuchadnezzar's dream was revealed to him (2:31-45), and he was given visions sketching the whole history of the world.

3. Mental growth (vv. 17-20). Daniel and his companions were found to be ten times superior in matters of wisdom and understanding to their comrades. Those who abstain from indulgence in the use of strong drinks have clearer minds and are thus better equipped mentally for their work than those who indulge therein.

4. Their social and political preference (v. 19). They stood before the king. No higher position of influence and honor could have been given them.

5. Their temporal influence (v. 21). They were all advanced to positions of influence, and Daniel became president of the college of wise men, and the prime minister of the nation. This position he continued to hold during several dynasties.

Good Actions

Do you act as if you had ten thousand years to throw away. Drath stands at your elbow. Be good for something, while you live and it is in your power. What remains but to live easy and cheerful, and crowd one good action so close to another that there may be the least empty space between them.

Habit

Habit is the magistrate of our lives; and, therefore, we should see that we have good habits.—Lord Bacon.

One is survived by her husband, Charles Bennett, No. 4 Rosebud Ave., Erlanger, a three weeks old daughter, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Foster, several brothers and sisters and a host of other relatives and friends, to mourn her untimely passing. She was a member of the Erlanger Baptist church.

Funeral services were conducted at the Taliaferro Funeral Home, Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, by the Rev. J. A. Miner, assisted by the Rev. R. D. Martin, after which she was laid to rest in Highland cemetery.

The Death Angel visited our community and took from our midst one of life's fairest flowers in its full beauty in the going of our friend and loved one, Bertha Belle Wood Hodges. She was born to Cornelius and Bertha Wood on Sept. 3, 1907, and died July 27, 1935. She spent her childhood and girlhood at Big Bone, Ky. Her mother leaving her at the tender age of nine when her father became both father and mother to her, loving her devotedly. After her marriage to Bernard Hodges on April 13, 1929, she moved to East Bend, Ky., where she spent the remainder of her life. At the age of fifteen she gave her life to her Savior and was loyal to him. Having united with Big Bone Baptist church. She leaves her husband, father and three brothers, besides many relatives and friends. Although the path that we have been treading had been so bright and beautiful in the presence of her love.

Yet across this path has come a shadow may we look beyond this dark shadow and see the "Light of our Heavenly Father's love and care."

I cannot fathom the ways of God. The Why and hows of life.

Often with questioning heart I plow through the land of sorrow and strife.

But I can choose the best to day and the best will lead in the Father's way.

DISHES FAVORED IN SCANDINAVIA

Interesting Menus That Appeal to Hardy Norsemen.

By EDITH M. BARBER

ALL over our country we can find restaurants which offer little adventures to those of us who are interested in the food customs of various countries. Today, I shall take you for a visit to Scandinavia. There are restaurants where you may dine as well as you would in Norway, Sweden or Denmark, where the food customs are much the same. Perhaps the majority of the patrons are of Scandinavian parentage and therefore the food must be typical to draw them.

Scandinavian food is particularly interesting. The outstanding note is the enormous table called the smorgasbord, where you will find dozens of appetizers arranged most attractively, with regard to contrast in both appearance and flavor. You begin your meal by making a trip to the table and filling your plate to overflowing from the many cold and hot dishes which are designed to give you an appetite for the rest of the meal. Remember that there is a large meal to come and do not be tempted to indulge too heavily in the smoked and pickled herring, the sardines, the anchovies, the cold meat, the cheese, the shrimps, the smoked eels, the salads, the pickles, the olives, the radishes, the celery, the hot fish custard and the other hot meat dishes. On some of the more elaborate smorgasbords you may even find a cold pheasant in the center.

At the table when you have finished the smorgasbord, you will be served with soup, with fish and with meat, for which I suggest Swedish meat balls with their sour cream sauce or beef Lindstrom. You will have potatoes with both the meat and fish courses. Stewed preiselbeeren, those tiny, cranberry-like berries, will be sure to appear with the meat course or as a sauce with the dessert. Soft, rye bread, the firmer black bread and the crisp rye cracker-like bread will be sure to appear throughout the meal. Of course, there will be coffee which all Scandinavians demand and make so well. The meal may end with Swedish punch, a sweet, strong liqueur. In the Scandinavian countries schnapps will be served instead of cocktails before the meal, beer with the smorgasbord and wine with the main course. At home in the Scandinavian countries you will find the smorgasbord in a much less elaborate form appearing at breakfast as well as at the main meal. As you have probably gathered, food is an important item in Scandinavian life.

Custom of Tattooing Is From South Sea Islands

That barbaric custom of tattooing, borrowed by sailors of all countries from the natives of the South Sea Islands, is named from the Polynesian word Tahiti, or Tatu, states a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Tattooing was originally a part of some primitive religious ceremony. The painful process by which the skin is pricked and dyed into pictures and symbols probably started with the custom of slashing one's body in grief and rubbing ashes into the wounds. The ashes caused a permanent discoloration in the skin, but this was viewed with a religious pride.

These distinctive colored marks in the flesh probably came to be regarded with some admiration, and so there developed the art of tattooing.

There are two kinds of tattooing—color and scar. In the color tattooing, the skin is punctured and the holes are filled with various dyes. In the scar tattooing, the skin is scarred and recut in the old scars until the tissue is puffy even after the wound is healed.

In general, the South Sea Islanders used only blue and black coloring for their tattooing, but the Formosans and the Japanese developed a technique which employed many colors.

Color tattooing is usually supposed to be ornamental, and scar tattooing is used as a mark of tribal recognition. In the Congo some of the middle class scars the whole body by way of beautifying it.

In the Admiralty Islands, in Fiji, and in certain parts of India, only the women are decorated by color tattooing.

Eye Is Easily Tricked

by Nature's Illusions

Looking at the brilliant plumage of the humming bird or the magnificent tail of a peacock, you may exclaim at the wonderful colors you see. But actually your eye is being tricked by one of Nature's illusions. This magical effect of color is produced by a very thin transparent film on the feathers.

The light that strikes the upper surface is partly reflected to the eye, while the rest passes through and is reflected from the under surface of the film. In this way the waves of light that come from the under surface, being delayed by that extra journey, fall somewhat out of step with the waves that were reflected from the upper surface.

This delay causes the blotting out of light waves of some particular color (just as one series of waves on a pond may be blotted out by another); and in consequence the reflected white light, being robbed of part of its color, will shine with the color that is left.

To contemplate the same effect look upon the play of color in a pearl, whose beauty is all due to the fact that it is built up in fine layers of transparent film.—Pearson's Weekly.

Much of the wheat land in Laurel county will be seeded to lespedeza in the spring, as a result of good crops this year.

Heterography, Heteronym, Homonym

Heterography has little or nothing in common with Heteronyms, for heterography concerns the variations in sound of the same letter in different syllables or words. The word concern is an instance of heterography, in which the letter c is sounded as k in one syllable, and as s in the other.

A heteronym is a word spelled like another of different sound and meaning; as, lead, pronounced "led," and lead, pronounced "leed." Read is another heteronym; also, wind, bow, row, sow, tear, etc. So also, collect, convict, essay, refuse—nouns and verbs. A homonym is a word agreeing in sound with but different in meaning from another. There are many groups of homonyms in the language: a few examples are: rain, reign, rein; to, too, two; road, rode, rowed; fare, fair; pear, pair.—Literary Digest.

Women are eligible for jury service in Alaska, Arkansas, California, Delaware, District of Columbia, Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah, Washington and Wisconsin. In eleven states service is compulsory for women as it is for men. In eleven others women may serve or not as they choose.

Wheel, Great Invention

The man who invented the wheel was one of the greatest benefactors of mankind, for upon succeeding models of that first crude round disk of wood or of stone, man has been for centuries increasing his range and speed of travel. Riding upon this invention, goods, culture, and knowledge have been spread throughout the world with speed and economy.

Long-Leaved Pine

The long-leaved pine, Pinus palustris, is probably the most beautiful member of its family in the world. Stately and magnificent in height, symmetrical in form, its graceful tassels of foot-long leaves luxuriantly borne, and its great cones which require several years to reach maturity, single it out above all others.

The Orb-Weavers

Some of the Orb-Weavers of the spider family live in their webs, hanging head downward, usually near the center of the net; others have a retreat near the edge of the net, where they hang with their backs downward. While resting in these webs they keep hold of some of the lines leading from the net, so that they can instantly detect the presence of an enemy. The Orb Weavers are usually plump spiders, with a large abdomen, and often nearly spherical. In some species of this family the male is much smaller than the female.

Rockcastle county farmers planted 90-day yellow corn in hopes of early maturity.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Matt Kearney, young American living in London, says good-bye to his sister Eileen, on board the steamer Wallaroo bound for Colombo. The Wallaroo is conveying £2,000,000 in gold to Australia. Eileen has a presentiment of coming evil, which affects her brother. On his way home Kearney meets an old friend, Inspector Dawson Haig, of Scotland Yard, who is very much in love with Eileen. Haig is on the trail of opium, which he is convinced is concealed in Jo Lung's warehouse. Called to other duty, Haig delegates Kearney, with Detective Norwich, to visit the place and find out what he can.

CHAPTER II.—They find the place a veritable treasure house, and Kearney recognizes Eileen's room. He picks up a notebook. Soon after leaving Kearney, Norwich is murdered. Haig is puzzled over cryptic notes in the book, referring to stops to be made by the Wallaroo.

CHAPTER III.—Yu-an Hee See, high-born Chinaman, whom Haig has long been seeking as the leader of a band of international thieves, is at Jo Lung's. Discovering the loss of the notebook, he sends two of his followers after Norwich and Kearney, one of whom he realizes must have picked it up. Norwich's murder follows, but Kearney is not overtaken. While Haig is poring over the book, alone in Kearney's room, a monstrous creature enters, seizes it, and escapes.

CHAPTER IV.—Kearney's story of hearing horrible laughter while at Jo Lung's place satisfies Haig his quarry was in hiding there, he recognizing the peculiar malignancy of Yu-an's laugh.

CHAPTER V.—Eileen Kearney, writing to Haig, tells of a jolly fellow passenger, a clever Austrian, Doctor Oestler. At Cairo Yu-an confers with his lieutenant, Aswami Pasha, known among the gang as the "Chief," over a mysterious coup they are planning. Haig goes to Marseilles, where he meets Eileen when she goes ashore with Doctor Oestler. The inspector boards the Wallaroo, disguised. From radio messages he decodes, he realizes Oestler, with others on board, are members of Yu-an's gang and that they have recognized him.

CHAPTER VI.—A huge Chinaman tries to throw Haig overboard but goes over himself in a desperate struggle. At Fort Said Eileen disappears.

CHAPTER VII.—Haig, trailing Eileen and Doctor Oestler, is lured into a drug-impregnable "house of feathers." Oestler reports that he left Eileen shopping, and though under suspicion, his story cannot be shaken. Haig escapes from the deadly trap and shoots Joseph, one of the plotters. Eileen, who has been drugged, regains consciousness in an Arabian mansion. Yu-an's headquarters.

CHAPTER VIII.—Haig takes Joseph's papers, and reports Eileen's kidnapping to the British consul. Oestler and Miss Ednam, an accomplice, mysteriously disappear from the Wallaroo and appear at Yu-an's headquarters in Arabia. It is evident as Yu-an and Aswami Pasha talk that they intend to capture or sink the Wallaroo. Using Joseph's credentials, Haig makes his way to Kebeh, Arabia.

CHAPTER IX.—Yu-an's cut-throat gang gathers for final instructions from Aswami Pasha as to capturing the Wallaroo's cargo of gold the next day in the Red sea. Haig begins to perceive Yu-an's monstrous plot, to seize the gold, but all his thoughts are centered on the rescue of Eileen. Impersonating Joseph, he is assigned to guard duty outside Yu-an's mansion. The girl sees him from a window, and is heartened. Haig also has seen her.

CHAPTER X.—Yu-an and Aswami Pasha lure the Wallaroo from her course with a wireless appeal for aid. Orange Blossom, Yu-an's jealous favorite, suggests to Aswami that Eileen be spirited away. He agrees to co-operate with her in getting rid of the girl. Next day, Aswami, from a submarine, boards the Wallaroo, and his helpless captain, to save his passengers, is forced to surrender the gold, which is transhipped to the submarine.

CHAPTER XI.—The gold safely on the submarine, Yu-an proceeds and sinks the Wallaroo, with, he believes, all on board. From the deck of the pirate submarine his men, with rifles, pick off the remnant of the passengers and crew struggling in the water, and the sharks complete the ghastly work, but Jack Rattray, the Wallaroo's first officer, is providentially saved from instant death. Eileen is taken in a motor cruiser, bound for Kebeh. She is conveyed to Hassan es-Suk's Cafe Magrabi in Kebeh. Haig learns this and takes up the trail again. On his way to Kebeh he rescues Rattray, the only survivor of the Wallaroo.

Jack Rattray, chief officer, who had seen the torpedo, was racing for the bridge. He had just reached the ladder when it crashed into the engine room. One of the boilers went, and he was headed off his feet, lost his hold of the rail, and pitched into the scuppers.

Dazed, temporarily confused, he staggered on. Somewhere behind and below there was a shambles—shrieks which he was never to forget to his dying day. He tottered again for the ladder and was halfway up when the second torpedo found its billet in the secret cargo.

The whole of the Wallaroo, forward of the bridge, burst upward like a volcano. The deck planking belied upward and shot him into the sea as if he had been propelled by a catapult. Always, in such catastrophes, seeming miracles occur. The case of Jack Rattray was one of them. Physically, he was unhurt. Mental confusion was cleared by his plunge into cool depths. He came to the surface immediately beside a floating deck chair. Upon this he rested his hands, for the moment content to be alive.

But he would have gambled a year of the chance of life that remained to him to have been spared the spectacle he was now compelled to witness.

The Wallaroo was sinking fast. Flaming the timely piece of wreckage before him, he ducked his head and looked off wildly. Then, resting on the fragile raft, he watched. Heartrending cries reached him. Figures were leaping from her decks. He saw a man spring from the rail with a woman in his arms.

The forward part of the ship broke free of the hull. The bowels of the Wallaroo dropped out of her through the gaping hole below her bridge—and the big ship died.

Rattray, clutching his little raft, threw one arm across the folded wooden struts. Shaken though he was, he knew its presence alone spelled salvation.

And pushing it before him, he began to swim slowly yet further out to sea, towards where, a hundred and forty-five miles due southwest, Port Sudan nestled on the African coast, and H. M. S. Panther, Captain Harwood, raced towards him.

The mass of wreckage was spread over a great surface of the sea. A pall of smoke and steam was rising, slowly rising. The two machine guns in the submarine's conning towers crackled into activity, sweeping that area where survivors struggled in the floss of the wrecked liner. From the deck of the dhow, men armed with rifles picked out more distant swimmers.

And now—darting actively about amongst that marine shambles—now came the fins of the sharks.

Yu-an Hee See, from the deck of the submarine, watched thoughtfully. "I had counted on the sharks," he said, "but nevertheless, we must take no chances."

From the deck of the dhow black marksmen were making good practice. Kid Brown, his face very white, fired once or twice, but wildly, and never at a living target. In his capacity as Aswami Pasha's bodyguard, he knew that he served a soulless villain, but his own record was far from unblemished, and somehow he had made terms with his elastic conscience.

He knew that the German freighter had been sunk with all hands nearly two years before, but he had not been present at her actual sinking. He had been on the submarine when the American yacht was held up. Explosives had been smuggled into her hold in some way, and he had seen her go up like a Crystal palace firework display.

Although no rescues were attempted, there had been none of this sniping. The sniping was too much for his stomach. He threw his rifle on to the deck of the dhow. "Gor blimey!" he shouted, clenching his fists, "I can't do it! It's bloody murder! That's what it is—bloody murder!"

"You are conscience-stricken again, Mr. Brown!"

The Kid turned. Aswami Pasha stood pointing a vicious-looking automatic straight at the Kid's stomach. "I have watched you with interest for some time," the Egyptian went on; "in Paris and in Egypt, as well as here. I regret it—but I can no longer trust you." Aswami Pasha pressed the trigger. But swiftly as he acted, he nevertheless acted too slowly to check that "Maxim silence" left of the Kid.

As the boxer dropped, coughing, to hang over the side, pumping his life's blood into the Red sea, Aswami Pasha temporarily passed into forgetfulness, his once classic nose a mere memory.

On the submarine, Yu-an Hee See gave the order to cease firing. "It will disturb the sharks," he explained. He rang on the engines to "Dead slow ahead."

Jackal. The drug-shattered creole sprawled across his bunk, breathing heavily.

Haig realized that practically he had the run of the place; a guardian who was himself a prisoner. Foolhardily he had thrust himself into the place, and he knew that it was not the call of duty, but a mad anxiety for Eileen which had driven him.

He had seen the room in which she was imprisoned apparently under the guardianship of a woman. He wondered if any of the eunuchs remained on duty inside the harem enclosure. He walked along the path below the wall. Very faintly at times he had heard the murmuring of surf far below.

Cautiously he mounted the steps of the first of the little watchtowers. There were several women in the garden, but Eileen was not among them. The balcony upon which he had seen Eileen was not visible from this point. Pressing on, he cautiously mounted another flight of steps. . . . He saw something at which his heart seemed to miss a beat. One of the black eunuchs was coming down a side path, carrying a woman's body thrown sack-wise over his right shoulder.

One glance was sufficient. He was carrying Eileen Kearney—alive or dead Haig could not tell! A tall and vicious looking Arab, white-robed and turbaned, followed.

Automatic in hand, Haig craned over the parapet as the gigantic negro swung suddenly left, descended a flight of stone steps, and disappeared under an archway, followed by the Arab.

Where did that tunnel lead to? Haig heard the bang of a heavy door in the sunken archway.

As he stood plainly in view now to anyone in the garden, he heard a cry. It came from the balcony upon which he had seen Eileen! "Cherie! cherie! my baby, where are you?" This was the big woman he had seen on the previous day. She had looked French.

Haig sprang right up on the parapet, waving his arms. Swiftly Celeste indicated that he should conceal himself and wait. Haig drew back and presently she came running down the stone steps and along the garden.

"You, up there! you can hear me?" she gasped.

"Yes, yes, I am."

"I know you are here! She told me. Listen, only listen: This is the work of the Chinese hell-cat. It is said from Kebeh who has taken the little one. They have drugged me again, I think. The poor baby. They will take her to Kossel, and from there to the house of Hassan es-Suk at Kebeh. This house—"

"I know it. I know it!" Haig interrupted impatiently. "Go on! Go on!"

"There are two motor boats in the harbor. In one of them she will be taken. For G-d's sake, save her! Here it is bad enough—but there! Stop them—you must stop them!"

"But tell me: where is my best chance—?"

"There is only one way," she said. "It is through the gate. But, if you could only reach it, the blacks would never question you. And all those pigs are away."

Haig raced down the stone steps. As it chanced, a collapsible ladder, used for pruning purposes, was lying on a path where one of the gardeners had left it! It was heavy, but long.

A passionate rage gave Dawson Haig additional strength. Fully extending the ladder, he leaned it up against the high wall, mounted, and stood on the top. The road far below was deserted from end to end. Poised perilously, he began to draw the ladder up, an operation calling for great muscular effort and a nice sense of equilibrium.

A sort of savage exultation lent him the powers of an acrobat. He got the ladder poised like a see-saw on top of the wall. Then, realizing that he could not turn it, he lowered the narrow end onto the hard-baked mud of the path below. Swiftly, he slid down, jerked the tall ladder from the wall, closed its three sections, and dropped it amongst rank undergrowth in a ditch.

He reached the outskirts of the little terraced town unchallenged—indeed, without meeting a living creature. The palm-lined street on the left, which contained what appeared to be the only cafe in the place, was deserted. None of the squat buildings of plastered mud-brick and woodwork exhibited any sign of life. Tied up to the steps was a umgy-looking motorboat—the same, or its twin, in which he had crossed from Kossel. Then a distant murmur checked him in his stride. Shading his eyes, he stared. Another motorboat—a mere dot in the blue—was rapidly disappearing around the tail of the island.

He set out running again, but had not gone fifty yards when a second time he was pulled up sharply. From the north, far over the sea, beyond the rocky headland which embraced the port, beyond the island, came echoing and reaching the sound of a mighty explosion.

Jack Rattray, chief officer of the Wallaroo, was a powerful swimmer. When that rain of Yu-an's machine-gun bullets had swept the sea he had ducked under the protection of the floating deck chair. He discovered that by resting his chin upon a crosspiece and swimming steadily, he could propel it without any very great effort. He knew, provided he could escape a bullet, that it would be possible to keep afloat for hours. But that ghastly stretch around the wreck was now bristling with sharks' fins!

There were fewer sounds from the few poor survivors. But the protecting deck chair, so far, had escaped the attention both of the marksmen and of the sharks.

Rattray summoned all his resources. He meant to survive the tragedy. He must survive it. A floating deck chair and one man's undaunted spirit meant the difference between immunity for these ghastly murderers and that day of reckoning which he swore, with clenched teeth, should come to them.

A gentle, almost imperceptible current, was bearing him seawards. He tried to visualize a chart of the Red sea and the approximate positions of steamers. He was many miles off the track, and dusk was near. His proper course, then, was to steal southward on this gentle current, and then edge in towards the tail of the rocky island, since rescue by a passing steamer was almost out of the question.

He was now more than a mile from the scene of the disaster. He swung around. The submarine and the dhow, the latter with two boats in tow, was making for the head of the island. It was a screen from behind which, doubtless, they operated.

And so carefully does Fate weave those comedies in which willy-nilly we all play a part, that it was almost exactly at this moment that Dawson Haig walked down the little jetty to where the motor cruiser was moored.

A pockmarked negro, whom he remembered, and an Arab boy, were on board. They stood up and stared at him suspiciously as he came hurrying along the stone pavement.

"Orders!" he said, sharply. "Kossel!" he said as he sprang on board, the crew of two continued to regard him with doubt and hesitation.

"Hurry!" he cried, and swung himself deftly on to the motor boat. The negro glanced helplessly at the boy—and the latter threw off the rope. At last the game was in his hands!

By dawn he would be back in Kossel. There was a wireless station, and a small English colony. He was no longer "Joseph," but had become again in spirit and in fact Detective Inspector Dawson Haig.

He peered anxiously ahead. The leading motor cruiser was not in sight. Even if a car waited at Kossel, which he suspected would be the case, he could have it intercepted. The game was in his hands.

The course, as he remembered, lay due northwest from the bay for the first forty or fifty miles. There, out of sight of the mainland, it skirted that long, low island. Thence it bore north along a desolate coast for three hours or more, then westerly again, sweeping out seaward to pass Jeddah, and north-west to the petrol station. He might find himself in difficulty, there. Probably they had some means of communication.

Exultation, doubt, fear, fought for supremacy in his mind. They were three hours out from the base, and the long, low island was dropping astern. Four more hours before that swing around which would point their bows to the African coast—which would seem to bring him nearer to Eileen!

They were drawing in to the main coast again. Suddenly, Haig sprang to his feet, shouting excitedly. Almost under their starboard bow floated a piece of wreckage which looked like a deck chair. . . . Then, beside it, a head bobbed up.

Aswami Pasha, swathed in bandages, came out of Doctor Oestler's room on the ground floor of the old palace, into a tiled corridor. He walked along to that little lobby which opened on the courtyard inside the entrance gates.

He would be disgraced for life. Kid Brown, in passing, his cunning fighter's brain keyed up by the imminence of death, had left this ineffaceable mark of his hand upon the man whose bullet had sped him. All the piston-rod force of that phenomenal left had been put into the job—the final job—of pulverizing Aswami's beauty. Certainly that that Grecian nose was smashed flat had sweetened the Kid's last agony.

Jacques the creole (known as the Jackal), waited in the lobby, his shifty eyes fearful.

"Well!" said Aswami Pasha. "What have you to report?"

"Chief!" the man gasped—"Chief . . . it is Joseph . . . he is gone!"

"Gone?"

"He is nowhere! He does not come to relieve me at four o'clock. He is nowhere—he is gone!"

There was a moment of silence. "Go back to your duty," said the Egyptian. He walked out along the corridor, up a short flight of stairs, and entered that office exotically furnished, with its voluptuous paintings and statuettes.

Dropping down upon a divan, he sank his bandaged face in his hands. He was already a very wealthy man. His share in this last coup would make him a millionaire. It was as well, since, henceforward, whatever of pleasure he could secure—he must buy. He would always be hideous. Men would shun his company. Women would fly from him.

He struggled to regain mastery of himself—to remember what he had planned before they had set out on this expedition against the Wallaroo.

What did the absence of Joseph mean? Certainly old Mohammed was to be trusted; and he had had word of the fellow's excellent quality. But yet . . .

"The girl! The rose-girl whom the Marquis Yu-an Hee See loved, whom he had taken such insane risks to secure!"

Was there any connection between his compact with Orange Blossom and the absence of Joseph?

He must find out.

Aswami Pasha unlocked a heavy, iron-studded door, and entered a covered courtyard. Yu-an Hee See, a blue tinge showing under his lemon-colored skin, fixed his eyes upon him.

"The woman has gone—the American woman I had chosen. Do you realize what this means?"

A cold terror clutched Aswami Pasha's heart. Well enough he knew his danger. But he rested gratefully upon the cunning of Orange Blossom. "Celeste, the French woman?" he suggested.

Yu-an Hee See reflected. "There is deep treachery here. You will take the French plane. Aswami, with Anton as pilot. I am thinking, now not of my pleasure, but of our safety. It is too late to establish contact with Hassan es-Suk. He will have left for Cairo. Hassan we cannot reach. Go, my friend. You have much to do."

Aswami Pasha choked down an exclamation of relief, and went out. The disappearance of Joseph he decided not to report. It might be part of Orange Blossom's plan. Perhaps it had been necessary to kill the guard.

In a car specially equipped for the desert journey, and belonging to the manager of the Italian mines near Kossel, Dawson Haig was headed for the Nile valley. He had done everything that it was possible to do at the seaport. Jack Rattray, the Wallaroo's first officer, whom he had picked up at sea, had stayed behind at the wireless station, busily sending messages. The motor boat, with her crew of two, had been detained. He had left the establishing of contact with the police, Kebeh and Cairo, to Jack.

Hour after hour the dusty journey continued. He was burning to reach Kebeh. He glowered over the idea of taking the widened throat of Hassan es-Suk between his two hands.

THE FARM AND HOME

Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station

To control mites, spray roosts and other equipment with a mixture of equal parts of kerosene and old engine oil. As mites stay in cracks and crevices during the day and crawl on to the fowls at night, the house and equipment should be well cleaned before spraying.

To insure proper diet for children, milk should be served daily, eggs almost every day, tomatoes or tomato juice several times a week, a cereal every day, and at least two vegetables daily. Care should be taken not to over-look vegetables.

Late lambs often need treatment for stomach worms, but care should be exercised not to injure them by over-dosing, whatever the remedy used. See a county agent for directions, and then measure the doses and administer them with care.

Much clothing and materials now on the market are to be shrunk that no allowance need be made for shrinking when laundered. Many materials, however, will shrink, especially the cheaper goods, and it is often wise to make some allowance if they are to be washed often.

Kentucky farmers are finding trench silos, where properly constructed, satisfactory ways of preserving winter feed. Several hundred have been made in the state. Write to the College of Agriculture for building directions.

Poor rubbers are often the cause of canned fruits and vegetables spoiling. Use only new ones from fresh stock. It also is often inadvisable to use old lids, especially if they are rusty and fit imperfectly.

KENTUCKY FARM NEWS

Four hundred tons of limestone were subscribed at a meeting of farmers of Ennis community in Muhlenburg county. Rehabilitation labor will be used to quarry and prepare the rock for the crusher, at a cost of 21 cents a ton.

Kentucky sheep breeders are finding a ready market for good rams this season. A large number have been purchased in this state for breeders in Virginia, Indiana, Tennessee and several other states, and many inquiries have been received at the College of Agriculture.

The burley tobacco acreage is placed at 314,000, compared to 307,000 last year, and 500,000 in 1933. The indicated production is 248,000,000 pounds, compared to 234,000,000 pounds last year and 375,000,000 pounds in 1933.

Larger consumption of pork bolstered hog prices last month, 200-pounders reaching new high levels at Chicago. Weekly receipts at the principal markets continue at less than half of marketings during similar periods in 1934.

The annual meetings of farmers at the experimental fields that are maintained over the state by the Agricultural Experiment Station are scheduled as follows: Mayfield, August 14; Greenville, August 15; Campbellsville, August 16, and Fariston, August 17.

Work is progressing on the first rural electric line in Boyd county. It will serve 125 farm families, and represents a new day for the rural sections of that county. Plans also are being considered for taking gas to farm homes.

Pewter Holds Place in Hearts of Antiquarians
Dear to the heart of the antiquarians are pieces of old pewter. Some confine their collections to examples of early American pewter, while others search for such bits regardless of their place of origin, observes a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

For a period of a hundred years, from 1750 to 1850, the pewter makers of America reached their highest point of both artistry and production. Out of touch with the Old world, wooden trenchers were not uncommon in the colonies at the beginning of the eighteenth century. Pewter came to the front to replace the wooden vessels at about the same time that china was triumphing over pewter in Europe.

Most of the pieces first made in this country were of tableware, plates being of first importance. The earliest encroachment of china was in dinner plates, but for a quarter of a century thereafter, craftsmen continued to do very well with pewter ware for other uses, such as for platters, bowls and salt cellars, with coffee pots, tea pots and pitchers also figuring rather importantly. But it is the old pewter plates that every collector dreams of finding.

It is not only the early American plates which are of the greatest value. Dutch, English and European plates likewise reign supreme.

Coot Not Member of Duck Family; Called "Mud Hen"

The term "mud hen" is a nickname for the coot or similar water fowl. The coot, Fulica americana, is a bird of the small creeks and the shores of shallow lakes and ponds where marsh plants grow abundantly, notes a writer in the Washington Star. The foot is half webbed, an excellent arrangement for running on water when the wings lend their assistance. The coot never rises on the wing without a preliminary run on the water of from 50 to 150 feet.

The coot swims and dives quite well, but as a rule it prefers to live, as do the rails and ballinates (to which the term "mud hen" is also applied), in the edges of heavy marsh vegetation. Here it can pick up its living of buds, blossoms, seeds, aquatic insects and snails, and also hide from its enemies. The coot is not a member of the duck family, but belongs to the rail family, Rallidae and the order Gruiformes, or crane-like birds.

Ivan the Terrible

The British museum has a rare portrait of Ivan the Terrible. He lived in the time of Elizabeth and was the first ruler of Russia to take the title of czar, a corruption of Caesar. His deeds were so infamous that for centuries after his death Russians crossed themselves at mention of his name. He proposed by letter to Queen Elizabeth for the hand of an English woman, but at the last moment the woman was afraid to go into exile in Russia. Ivan then married a Russian princess, who exercised some check on his cruelty. But after her death he gave full rein to his unbridled passion. He passed his last days surrounded by magicians, who could not, however, exorcise the ghost of his son, whom Ivan had slain.

ACCOUNTS, BUDGETS HELP 19 FARMERS IMPROVE INCOMES

How 19 farmers in Green, Taylor and Adair counties made changes in their farming that increased their profits, is told in a new University of Kentucky College of Agriculture circular called, "Farm Accounts and Budgets Aid Farm Management."

In cooperation with the Department of farm economics at the college, these farmers kept single accounts for seven years, as a means of finding out what improvements might be made in management. Plans were made in the form of budgets, which served as guides to making changes.

In 1933, the average net return of the 19 farmers, who had kept accounts and followed budgets continuously beginning in 1927, was $250 more than that of 28 farmers, under similar conditions, who kept the accounts and followed budgets only in 1927. The increase was brought about by improvements in the organization and management of the farms, the result of keeping accounts and following budgets, according to R. E. Proctor, author of the circular.

The profitable changes made by the 19 farmers were, in general:

1. Selection of livestock for better quality and higher production.

2. Higher yields of crops per acre.

3. Use of more legumes in hay and pasture, with the application of more limestone and phosphate.

4. Greater income per dollar of expense.

TURKEY RAISERS SEE FRUIT-POULTRY FARM

Farmers from 16 Kentucky counties recently inspected the poultry raising operations at the Kentucky Orchards in Bullitt county, where 6,500 turkeys are being raised in conjunction with fruit production, under the management of R. E. Nute.

The birds are started in home-made brick brooders, and then run among the trees, where they eat insects and cull fruit, and fertilize the ground. In this manner the cost of feeding is reduced and fertilizer added to the soil.

The tour was arranged by the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, and members of the staff of the poultry department discussed turkey raising, at a speaking program which followed the inspection of the birds and equipment.

What is the yardstick for a cigarette...

Take mildness for one thing—how does it measure up for mildness?

Chesterfields are milder—not flat or insipid, of course, but with a pleasing flavor.

Then take taste for another thing—does it have plenty of taste?

Chesterfields taste better—not strong but just right.

In other words, They Satisfy—that's my yardstick for a cigarette.

THE FARM AND HOME

(Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station)

Many tests have shown that hogs gain faster and more economically when self-fed than when given a limited amount of feed at a time. In some instances both feed and time were saved when the animals were allowed to help themselves. Clothing and material goods trade names and what they mean: Sanitized, guaranteed against shrinkage of cotton; durable, high quality mercerized yarn; nafa tested, colors fast to light and laundering; crown tested, tested for high quality and durability.

Following harvest, strawberries are usually cultivated, the rows narrowed to about 8 inches, and the soil treated with nitrate of soda at the rate of a pound to 50 feet of row, 20 pounds to a tenth of an acre and 50 pounds to a quarter of an acre.

There is a keen demand for high-class rams among Kentucky sheep raisers. A few dollars more spent for good rams may add hundreds of dollars to the market value of the lambs next year. Many farmers now refuse to buy anything but the best.

Too much emphasis cannot be put on keeping the pullets growing well, as the laying season approaches. They should move steadily forward on good, well-balanced maturing rations, so they will be in tip-top condition for laying in the early fall.

Some women follow the practice of canning fried chicken for emergency meals. The pieces are precooked in hot fat until nicely browned and then packed while hot into hot jars. The jars are then processed with the cold pack method.

Miss Maud Berkshire, of Petersburg, was the Saturday night guest of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Snyder.

Rev. Bedinger, pastor of the Walton Methodist church, and some of his friends from Walton, held services at the County Infirmary Sunday afternoon.

The members of the local B. Y. P. U. held services for the inmates of the County Infirmary Wednesday night.

The Rose Union held their monthly meeting at the Methodist church at Florence Monday night. Quite a few members of the local Epworth League attended and enjoyed the meeting.

WILL OFFER FARMERS NEW FOUR-YEAR WHEAT ADJUSTMENT CONTRACT

A new wheat adjustment plan, to cover the years 1936 to 1939, inclusive, will be offered farmers before planting time this year, according to information received by the College of Agriculture at Lexington.

The required reduction for next year will be 15 per cent of the base acreage, and any contract signers may plant not more than 85 per cent nor less than 54 per cent of his base next year. Plantings for the years thereafter can be varied up or down but the reduction is never to be more than 25 per cent.

The Secretary of Agriculture has the power to terminate the plan at the end of any marketing year, and any grower has the option of withdrawal at the end of the first two-year period.

Adjustment payments, the Washington announcement states, will be "in such amount as will tend to bring producers as a whole parity or fair-exchange value return on their allotments, which are 54 per cent of their adjusted average base production."

Contract signers will agree to use land removed from wheat production for soil improving and erosion preventing crops.

BIG FACTOR

CUTTING TIME BIG FACTOR IN QUALITY OF LESPEDEZA HAY

The time Korean lespedeza hay is cut has much to do with the quality, in the opinion of Dr. E. N. Fergus of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station.

The best lespedeza hay is made when the crop is not more mature than full bloom. When in doubt, it is better to cut too early rather than too late, when quality of hay alone is the deciding factor.

Curing Korean lespedeza hay is not difficult because of its small water content. Leaves shatter rather easily, however, and these are the most valuable part of the hay.

A good practice is to wilt the hay in the swath and then rake it into windrows for the rest of the field curing. In this way, leaves and natural color may be retained.

An effort to make both hay and seed from the same cutting always results in a lower quality of hay. Dr. Fergus points out. Loss of quality also results from incision as to whether the crop is to be made into hay, turned out to pasture or saved for seed.

The presence of weeds and grain stubble tends to lower the quality of lespedeza hay. Attempts to grow lespedeza or poor soils nearly always means weeds and poorer quality.

Some farmers have endeavored to control weeds by running the mower over the field, with the bar carried just above the lespedeza on a weed wheel. The real remedy for weeds, however, is in building a better soil.

Despite the fact that many farmers bale lespedeza hay, in the field, Dr. Fergus does not recommend the practice, as he has found much musty and other objectionable odors in lespedeza baled in the field.

1060 AAA CONTRACTS MEASURED COMPLIANCE

The 1935 AAA corn and tobacco acreage was measured on 1060 AAA corn-hog and tobacco contracts according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The above includes eight hundred and seventy-one regular and special base tobacco contracts and one hundred and eighty-nine corn-hog contracts.

Mr. Floyd Crigler, who served as County Supervisor, reports that excess acreage was found on only twenty-one farms and that full compliance in practically every one of these cases has been met.

Mr. and Mrs. William G. Finn and small daughter Susan, will sail from New York City on the steamship Manhattan for Europe on August 1.

Mr. Finn was born and reared in Boone county, and is now living in Washington, D. C. Mr. Finn is being sent to Europe by the U. S. Department of Agriculture to do special work for that Department.

He will make a special study of tobacco, paying attention to factors affecting the United States exports of tobacco to Europe, noting trends of consumption of tobacco products, changes in production relating to imports, trade restrictions, systems of taxation of tobacco products.

The Finns are sailing for Hamburg Germany, after spending a short time they go to Berlin. Mr. Finn's work will take him first into the Scandinavian countries, then into most of the other European countries.

Mrs. Finn and daughter plan to accompany him on most of these visits.

AGRICULTURAL HERO HONORED

Cornell University at its annual "Farm and Home Week" has just unveiled a handsome tablet in memory of a man who refused to make millions from his invention—an invention which took the guesswork out of dairying, making it possible to compute accurately the butterfat content of milk. The following comment on the life and work of this agricultural hero, Stephen M. Babcock, is quoted from The Progressive Farmer for July:—

"It was in 1890 that Dr. Babcock (a native of New York State but then at the University of Wisconsin) after a long series of experiments devised the famous "Babcock test." Until the Babcock test came into use, it was commonly believed that 100 pounds of milk from one cow would make just as much butter or cream. Cows were valued for their bulk milk production and quantity not quality, was the test. Dr. Babcock changed all this. After many years the mode of measuring the milk, the volume of the sampling pette, the character of the test bottle, and the technique of the operation remain today the same as the day they left Dr. Babcock's hands.

"But his greatest glory is that he helped millions of farmers without trying to enrich himself. He did not patent his device but gave it free to the world. He received world-wide acclaim and honor, but remained the true scientist, living the simple life and continuing his experiments until his death in 1931. The writer met him in 1912 and will always cherish the memory of his graciousness and modesty."

RESTORE EXTENSION WORK TO ITS ORIGINAL PURPOSE

Agricultural extension forces, to meet the emergency created by the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, were drawn away from the original purpose of their existence, points out an editorial in the current issue of The Progressive Farmer. They were the only organization that could possibly meet the need, and considering the magnitude of the task, they did a magnificent job. But have the purposes for which the extension forces were originally created ceased to be desirable? Here is the way this editorial answers the question:—

"We think not. We think there is the same need for increased efficiency in production and marketing; in fact, even greater need than existed prior to 1933.

"The extension forces, to meet the present emergency, were drawn away from the original purposes of their existence, but the need for the work for which the organization came into existence remains equally great.

"We would not materially change the organization. Nor would we lessen the responsibility of the extension forces in the administration of the AAA policies. But we would enlarge the organization in order that the much needed work for which it was originally created may again receive the attention needed. Assistant county agents have been employed in some counties but only where it required the work of two men to handle the AAA program. A man should be placed in every county to perform the service previously rendered by the county gets.

"The 4-H club leaders, the vocational agricultural teachers, and the county agricultural and home demonstration agents—all these exert a most constructive and far-reaching influence for the building of a better agricultural and rural life in America. This is no time when we can afford to curtail such work. Emergency administrative duties should no longer be allowed to decrease the attention given to the original and true work of county agents."

WHO WILL DROWN IN 1935?

Does ever a summer pass without one of us hearing of some fine boy drowned, some loving family bereaved? A vivid and timely warning is given in the following conversation between a doctor and a neighbor, quoted from The Progressive Farmer:—

"Hello, Dr. Jim; how are you?"

"Good morning, Ben. I am just downright tired."

"Been up all night, Dr. Jim?"

"No, Ben; it's worry as much as anything. Late yesterday I got a call telling me to hurry to Carver's Mill, that a boy had drowned, but that perhaps if I could get there quickly I could bring him to life. Of course I hurried; that's one time I think I was justified in breaking the speed laws. When I arrived I found it was the Widow Jones' oldest boy, that it had been over an hour since he had been taken out of the pond, and not a single one of the boy's present knew a thing about artificial respiration! This particular bunch of boys refused or neglected—it doesn't matter which, the result was the same—they failed to take the course in "first aid" that was given last year by a Red Cross representative. I funny believe —in fact, I almost know—that these boys, if they had known how, could have saved Eddie Jones. I worked on him for a long time, but it was too late. Then of course I had to go and break the news to his mother. So that's the reason I am all tucked out. No easy job, Ben, to work over a drowned boy for an hour and then have to go and tell his mother that you had failed in your undertaking and that her dear son and bread winner was gone forever. She will have to be taken care of by the county."

"Dr. Jim it looks like those boys could have gotten Eddie out."

"They could Ben, if they had just thought to carry a rope along. One of the boys, Joe Brown, tried manfully to rescue him. But like all drowning people, Eddie clung so tight that Joe saw Eddie would have both of them drowned if he had not got loose. So it was only after Eddie went down for the last time and quit struggling that the boys got him out. But I think even then they could have saved him if they had only known some "first aid" stuff. And it's the greatest pity in the world that they had not carried a rope along for safety's sake. Boys should never go swimming without a good coil of rope at least 40 feet long; then if a boy gets cramped or something wrong, one boy can drop a loop around his waist and the other boys can hold the rope's end while he swims to the boy in distress."

"I helped to save a boy once with plew lines, Dr. Jim. Six of us neighbor boys rode our plow mules down to the river for a swim. One of the boys out in deep water got cramp in his legs and holiered for help. The river was up from a freshet, a swift current and rather dangerous. Being on the bank near my mule, I snatched my plow lines off as quickly as I could, and called to Henry Smith, who was also on the bank, to get the lines off his mule. Then I made a slip noose around my waist and fastened Henry's lines to mine, gave him the end to hold and I jumped in. As soon as I reached Wilbur, he grabbed me with a death grip. I called to Henry to pull and he and the other boys pulled us out. Every time I hear the old tune, "Throw Out the Life Line," I think of the day we saved Wilbur Williamson. Dr. Jim, I want you to give those first aid lessons to my boys and that crowd of boys who were at Carver's Pond. If you could give them right at Carver's Pond it would be more impressive."

"All right, Ben; I'll do that. You get the boys together and I will start any time."

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL by Carter Field

Washington.—Down in South Carolina, where cotton benefit payments abound and which is so regular in its Democracy that even the Bishop Cannon movement did not affect it in 1928, there are said to be rumblings against the New Deal.

There are enough rumblings to decide Col. William O. Harlee, retired, of the Marine corps, to throw his hat in the ring for the senate. And against none other than Senator James F. Byrnes, generally regarded as the closest follower President Roosevelt has in the senate. If not in congress. So close, in fact, that until Joe Robinson simply told him himself into a White House rubber stamp there was very serious talk of making Byrnes leader in his place.

Colonel Harlee, who is a graduate of West Point but chose the marines instead of the army and has seen service in nearly every major theater in which the devil dogs burned powder, thinks Byrnes is too New Dealish to suit the South Carolina folks. And judging from some newspaper clippings which have come to Washington there are at least a few editors in the Palmetto state who agree.

Professor Tugwell seems to be the colonel's chief target, but he insists that he is not a John Raskob Democrat either—just a plain, old-fashioned, Jeffersonian, nullificationist, pro-Calhoun and anti-Jackson, states' rights, low tariff, Democrat.

In fact, he is not for any tariff at all, sticking strongly by the old nullificationist doctrine, when South Carolina held that the federal government at Washington had no right to rear tariff barriers which would keep foreign goods out of her ports.

Some very shrewd observers think that Colonel Harlee just might make a lot of trouble for the administration's fair-haired senator. They say that the people who put the money up for Byrnes' campaign in the past are very disappointed in him. Particularly on his sticking by the administration on the procession taxes, and on his fight for the death sentence in the public utility holding bill.

Now They Doubt

It just so happens that many of the interests that supported Byrnes in his several races were of the conservative variety. They liked Byrnes, all right, but what they were really anxious to do was to defeat Cole Blaise. Now some of them are wondering if Blaise would not have voted more often in their interests, as they see them.

"What do you think of Senators Byrd and Glass of Virginia?" the writer asked Colonel Harlee. "Especially of the way they have opposed the administration on a number of important measures?"

"I wish you would tell your readers that I will out-Byrd Harz and out-Glass Carter," grinned the colonel.

"A great many of our people are getting tired of this relief thing. They want to get people to work, and I find them on relief, buying cheap new cars on time with the relief money, and just stepping on the gas. I think Washington is going to be surprised at some of the primaries and elections to come, if the feeling in South Carolina is any indication."

It promises to be rather war in South Carolina next spring and summer!

The Ethiopian Mess

Italy will have no difficulty in defeating the Abyssinians in whatever battles may occur in the approaching war, in the opinion of high military experts both in our own War department and in various embassies here. The trouble will come after that, they believe, as they fully expect there will be a constant guerrilla warfare for years during Italian efforts at colonization.

Hence it is expected that the Ethiopian mess, which the rest of the world is so anxious to avert, but Italy is so determined to push, will prove highly costly to the Italian treasury for many a long day to come. Experts here figure that Italy will have to garrison the country, so to speak, with strong forces at strategic points, and this, of course, will prove expensive.

Confidentially, for no officer ever speak on such a situation for publication, our army officers are considering the situation to that which existed for a time after the Spanish-American war in the Philippines. They expect Italy to have more trouble than the United States did for several reasons.

For example, some of them say, it is not likely that any Abyssinian leader would walk into any such trap as clamped Aguinaldo in American custody. Incidentally, there is no great pride, even to this day, in our army over that episode. It smacked a little too much of bad faith. Of treachery.

Then, too, our military experts do not believe that any one man in Abyssinia means as much to the fighters of that land as Aguinaldo did to the ## Filipinos in their desperate fight.

Ars Good Fighters

But the most important distinction of all, no army officer would dare whisper, save on the deepest pledge of secrecy. But the truth is that our army officers do not believe the Filipinos are in the same class with the Abyssinians as fighters. Either physically, morally or mentally. Opinion here is that the followers of the King of Kings are pretty fine specimens, capable of great hardships and valor, and that in addition they are, at least, approaching the fanatic class. Which makes them very difficult to handle. And which promises little in the direction of their submitting to the inevitable after a few spectacular Italian victories.

That there will be these spectacular Italian victories no one here doubts very much. Opinion is that no such force as that of the Abyssinians, no matter how brave or how well directed, could possibly be a match for the well drilled, well equipped army the Italians will send against them. Especially as Mussolini is apparently taking no chances. He is not sending out the forlorn hope type of expedition. He is pouring men to the vicinity of the Abyssinian border in numbers that have amazed the military experts of the remainder of the world.

Meanwhile the answer to why nothing happens is simply one thing—water. The Italians are waiting for the rainy season.

Shaves Hoary Legend

Just when the public, for the first time in a generation, had a chance to get a liberal education on the value of seniority in congress—just why the multi-striped boys always run the machine—Cactus Jack Garner comes along and shaves the hoary whiskered legend!

He is appointing conferees on important controversies between the house and senate to suit himself! Or more accurately, to reflect what he regards as the majority view of the senate. There has been no particular protest about this, for in every instance his appointees represent the majority view. Had it been otherwise, in any instance, a mere motion would have resulted in the senate's naming the conferees by vote. Which explains why the senate takes this upsetting of an old tradition lying down.

Seldom before has the country had such a vivid picture of how legislation is really settled—not on the floor of the house or senate—not even in the house or senate committees prior to bringing the measures on the floor—but in the conference between the two houses. After the conferees get through, assuming they ever agree—and the probability is that conferees will agree on all bills this time) there is nothing much for the mere memberships of the house and senate to do except take it or leave it. And generally, it has always been take it. Will be this time.

Which brings us to the time-honored rule, now somewhat lacerated. Technically the speaker of the house appoints five members of the house, and the Vice President five members of the senate, to confer and adjust the differences in texts and ideas in the measure which the two houses have just passed. Sometimes it is only three. In very important measures, particularly tax bills, it is seven. Always the majority party has one more conferee from each house than the minority.

Normally in the past no discretion has been exercised by the presiding officers in making the selections. Appointments have almost invariably been made of the ranking members of the committees that handled the bill.

Absurd Rule

Vice President Garner had an early illustration of the absurdities this rule sometimes effects. For instance, when he was naming conferees on the pink slip income tax publicity repeal bill, he named the three ranking Democrats of the senate finance committee, Harrison, King and George. Also the two ranking Republicans, Couzens and Keyes. So far strictly according to Hoyle.

But Couzens didn't like the senate's position—was not in sympathy with the repeal, as a matter of fact. So he announced his resignation from the floor. Garner at once appointed the next ranking Republican, La Follette. The Wisconsin man shared Couzens' views—also resigned. So Garner appointed the next ranking Republican, Metcalf.

Still according to Hoyle. But there was the idea, and Garner announced he would exercise his own discretion in future.

Contrary to some newspaper accounts, he has not tried to use this power to impose White House will. It seemed so in the death sentence of the public utility holding company bill. But the senate had voted for the death sentence, even if only by a majority of one. So Garner threw seniority to the winds. He appointed Wheeler, the chairman, skipped Smith of South Carolina and Wagner of New York, to pick administration wheel horse Barker, and then skipped Neely, Dieterich, Loneragan and Long, to pick Brown of New Hampshire.

On the minority side he skipped ranking members Couzens, Metcalf and Hastings, and picked White. Then he ignored Davis and picked Shipstead, who is not a Republican at all. On the TVA bill Garner took the list of conferees from George Norris, daddy of Muscle Shoals. But on the banking bill he permitted Carter Glass to name the conferees.

THE GARDEN

The Winter Vegetable Store 111
(By John S. Gardner, Ky. College of Agriculture)

In the past two weeks the winter storage of the "warm" crops was covered; today, that of the "cool" crops, potatoes, beets, carrots and cabbage will be discussed.

At the outset, may it be said that this group of vegetables presents almost no difficulty in storing, except in the early fall and late spring, when it is not always possible to keep them cool enough. Their best temperature is 0 degrees, though this may fall, for at least short intervals, to freezing, without harm. As to humidity, the "cool" crops are not critical, either, except that the air should be moist, so that shriveling does not occur. In fact, water running through the storage is of advantage to have, but always below the level of the stored crops.

The best place in which to store this group of vegetables is in a house cellar, whose walls are so constructed that freezing may not take place. In the event there is a heating plant, the storage room should be walled off from it, to keep the temperature and the humidity down. The walls of the storage room should be of the same general construction as that suggested for those of a sweetpotato storage, and it should include at least one window to the outside, so that fresh air may be admitted and stale air passed off; an occasional may require. The ceiling should be planked or otherwise insulated, else the room over it may be difficult to keep properly warm.

The management of such a storage room is simple, all that is needed being the opening of the door into the main cellar when the temperature within the storage unduly low, or the opening of the outside cellar window, when the storage needs cooling.

In the early fall and in the late spring, and in fact, sometimes during the winter, there may be difficulty in maintaining the temperature low, but this may be gotten around by opening the outside window during the night, and closing it and the inside door as well during the day. Thus, bottled-up, cool night air will bridge-over during quite warm days. If excessive wilting occurs, as it may when the cellar floor is of concrete, sprinkling will help; so will placing a vessel of water on the floor. In the event the floor is earthen, the humidity is generally controlled automatically.

Second best, is an outside cellar or storage cave, wholly or in part submerged in soil. Ideal construction is stone or concrete, but a passable temporary "cave" may be built of timbers covered with plank and then with earth. To top it all, sodding should be done, to reduce moisture seepage, especially through the roof. The ventilation of such a cellar is accomplished by putting at the highest point in its ceiling a vent, whose size in inches is that of the floor of the cave, in feet. Through this, moist and stale air will escape. To replace it fresh air is introduced, through the same means suggested for the sweetpotato storage, while curing is in progress. As in the case of the cellar storage room, ventilation should be given thru manipulating the vents to cool the storage, or perhaps to warm it (by admitting "day" air in periods during which the nights are dangerously cold) or, as is sometimes necessary, merely to replace stale musty air with the fresh air.

Next best is "pit" storage, holed up as it is sometimes called. The pit should be so located that there is no danger of standing water. Ditching around the pit is sound procedure. Under the pit two ditches should cross, making intake vents. Through the center of the pit and projecting above it a flue should be placed to carry off stale air. When severe winter weather is expected both the vents and the flue should be closed; if the earth cover is 12 inches thick, there is no difficulty in keeping the cool crops thus "holed-up."

Said to Be First Man to Have Gift of Prophecy

The servants of Melampus (so the story goes) chopped down an ancient and hollow oak, and finding a family of serpents inside the tree they killed the old ones and would also have killed the young ones if Melampus had not intervened and commanded them to forbear. Later, when Melampus was asleep, the young snakes came and kissed his ears with their tongues, and when the good man awoke he was amazed to find that he could hear and understand not only the conversation of snakes but also the talk of birds and beasts and even of small worms. By means of this gift he was able to foretell the future.

On one occasion when he had been placed in prison he overheard the gossip of the wood worms in the walls and learned that the worms had been so busy that the walls were all hollow and that the jail would collapse on a certain day. He told his jailers, and when the building did fall down on scheduled time the men of that country made a large to-do about Melampus. Whether or not he was instructed by worms and weasels and widgeons, Melampus was also a great physician. The name means (in Greek) "Black Foot."

English Bull Terrier Is

Good Pal and Protector

The bull terrier was started about 1800, being bred from the English bulldog and the black-and-tan terrier, the whole idea being to produce a dog unconquerable in the fighting pit, writes Ruth Mansfield in the Washington Post. In 1870, a few men got together and decided the dog was too good for a fighting beast. They decided that he had a wonderful disposition, qualities making for a good watchdog and faithfulness in every way. As a result of this, the English bull terrier is now a pal and protector.

The bull terrier is the gladiator of the canine race, strongly built, muscular, active, symmetrical with a keen, determined expression. His head is oval, fairly long and with tapering muzzle, small almond-shaped black eyes, black nose; even, regular teeth, thin ears on the top of the skull, moderately long neck, strong shoulders and broad chest. The coat is short, flat, rather harsh to the touch and with a fine gloss, being pure white. The bull terrier may weigh from 12 pounds or the toy to 60 pounds.

Vicious Trees

One of nature's oddest growths is the electricity tree of Central India. Its leaves are so full of electricity that if you touch one you receive an electric shock. They will induce a magnetic needle 70 feet away. The electrical strength is strongest at midday, and weakest at midnight. In wet weather its powers disappear. Birds and insects keep away. The "Sagmal" or "Cotton tree" of Nepal, will eat other trees. Its seeds are dropped by birds in the forks of its victims, where they germinate and drop a sort of root which starts a cotton tree branch. This spreads and drops other roots until a large stem of the victim tree is seized. Then the cannibal spreads round the main trunk. After its meal, a fig-cotton tree appears on the scene of the repast.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Hardest Artificial Substance

Boron carbide, material made by combining the rare metal boron and ordinary carbon in the electric furnace, is the hardest known synthetic substance, and readily cuts practically anything but diamond. Power Plant Engineering reported that boron carbide is unaffected by the strongest acids and alkalis, is able to withstand compression of 50 tons to the square inch, expands only two-thirds as much as steel under the influence of temperature, is little affected by heat up to 1,000 degrees Centigrade (at which diamonds burn up completely), and is lighter than aluminum.—Literary Digest.

Build Fences of Fire

All towns and villages near the great tropical jungles of Africa start forest fires at a certain time each year—when the wind is right—to keep the surrounding plant world and its animals, reptiles and insects, from encroaching upon them. These fires, although well under control, sometimes develop into vast sheets of flame more than two miles in width.—Collier's Weekly.

Held Down

Winds of almost hurricane proportions sometimes sweep the Hebrides islands, west of Scotland. The inhabitants, most of whom are fishermen, protect the thatched roofs of their cottages from the ravages of the gale, by throwing old fishing nets over them, and weighting the nets with stones at the eaves.—Washington Post.

Naming the Game "Craps"

The game "craps" was introduced in this country under its European name of hazard. The Frenchman who brought it to New Orleans was often called "Crapaud," a nickname applied to the French. The game was known as Crapaud's game, then Crap's game and finally Craps.

Oleander Used as Poison

The fruits of what is known as "Yellow Oleander," a dwarf shrub from the West Indies, Thesvetia nereifolia, were once used to poison enemies by mixing it in food, in its native islands.

Lesson for August 18

MARTHA

LESSON TEXT—Luke 10:38-42: John 11:17-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus.—John 11:5.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A Home Jesus Loved.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Home Jesus Visited.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Can I Help at Home?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Home That Attracts Jesus.

The lesson committee designated Martha as a home-maker. That she was a home-maker is to be conceded, but to view this lesson only in that light is to miss its vital point, for Christ's teachings here are equally appropriate to male and female, in the home, office, shop, schoolroom, farm, etc.

1. Jesus Revealing to Martha Her Supreme Need (Luke 10:38-42).

1. Jesus welcomed into her home (v. 38). Though Jesus had no home of his own, he could come into this home at any time and throw off the restraints incident to public ministry. What a blessed thing it would be if all homes were open to receive Jesus.

2. Mary sitting at Jesus' feet (v. 39). While this was Martha's home, Mary seemed to have lived with her. Mary had a peculiar spiritual insight which prompted her to sit at Jesus' feet and listen to his words. The real place to hear Jesus' words is "at his feet." Let no one imagine that Mary did not render any service, for the little word "also" indicates that she had been serving with Martha.

3. Martha's complaint (v. 40). She was so bent on providing a good meal for Jesus that she was on the verge of distraction. Her many assumed duties had so got on her nerves that she not only found fault with Mary, but even censured Jesus for allowing Mary to sit at his feet while dinner was being finished. She even assumed the authority to command Jesus to send Mary back to help her. The sure way to serve without distraction is to first sit at Jesus' feet and listen to his words.

4. Jesus' reply (v. 41, 42). He rebuked Martha (v. 41). This rebuke he administered most tenderly, for he knew that Martha loved him sincerely. Those who are supremely occupied with Jesus are anxious for nothing (Phil. 4:6).

b. He defended Mary (v. 42). In this defense he declared that there was but one thing needful and that Mary had chosen that good part which could not be taken from her. Those who choose this good part cannot be robbed of it by friends, foes, or circumstances.

11. A Revelation of Christ's Love (John 11:1-50).

1. The sickness of Lazarus (v. 1, 2). Even those who are in close fellowship with the Lord are not immune from sickness. Sorrow comes even to the homes where Jesus is loved.

2. Martha and Mary send for Jesus (v. 3). Because they had come to know Jesus as more than a mere man they instinctively turned to him when this shadow fell across their home.

3. Jesus' strange delay (v. 4-6). They sent for Jesus because he loved Lazarus. They said, "He whom thou lovest is sick." Jesus abode in the same place because he loved Lazarus and his sisters (v. 5). This mystery is to be explained by the fact that Jesus was divine and knew all things.

4. Jesus goes to the Bethany home (v. 7-17). His mission in going into this home was twofold; to minister to the sisters and brother, and to strengthen the faith of the disciples (vv. 11-15).

5. Jesus teaching Martha (vv. 18-27). As he was nearing the village, Martha met him with a complaint because of his delay. He ignored her complaint and taught her concerning the resurrection and the life.

a. "Thy brother shall rise again" (v. 23). He is saying these words to every sorrowing sister, brother, wife, husband, child, and parent.

b. "I am the resurrection, and the life" (vv. 25, 26). He is the source of life, and all who are joined to him by a living faith are in such vital fellowship as to be unaffected by bodily change.

6. Jesus weeping with Mary (vv. 28-35). In response to the Master's call Mary fell at his feet, uttering the same words used by Martha, but, no doubt, in a different tone of voice and attitude. Her words were responded to with tears. "Jesus wept."

111. Jesus Raising Lazarus (vv. 38-44). His great sympathy now expressed itself in supernatural power. Sympathy would be valueless without this connection with divine power.

Music

Music, like a true coin, rings best on the domestic hearthstone. The essence of it no more belongs to the concert room than—reverently let it be said—does religion to the church. It must needs be an everyday matter, entering the hearts and homes of the people, otherwise its true functions remain unfulfilled.

Repentance

Repentance is a goddess and the preserver of those who have erred.—Julian.

Big Lake and Salt Bed

Combined in Australia

Although several water courses, frequently swollen by tropical rains, pour their waters into Lake Buchanan, Central Queensland, the lake supplies itself almost as quickly as it is filled and is often a vast white field containing millions of tons of salt. The glare of the sun on this 100-mile-round field is intense.

A circle of hills forms a natural basin for Lake Buchanan, from which there is apparently no outlet for its waters. Scientists, however, declare that the contents find their way to the Great Artesian basin, which lies under part of Central Queensland and Northern New South Wales.

Explosions resembling heavy artillery frequently boom forth from within one of the lake's surrounding hills, earning for it the name of Rumble Hill. Their origin is unexplained, as is the fact that a vapor continuously sprays up from a cavern there, drifting to earth as a fine salt. Rains in the district obtain their salt supplies from the deposits left by this vapor. Owing to the lake's remoteness, no attempt has been made to use its salt supply commercially.—New York Times.

Comedy With Bullfights

Comic opera bullfights are frequently staged in San Sebastian, matadors masquerading as clowns. The bull selected for the sport must be young and without much courage, while the matador himself makes a better comedian than bullfighter.

Two great woolen balls cover the bull's horns to protect the fighter, who dresses in bizarre costume. Sometimes he masquerades, keeping the bull off with a bamboo cane instead of the regular sword. The fight itself is rough and tumble sport, the matador jabbing wildly at the bull, and the animal repeatedly knocking him down.

When the attention of the audience begins to lag, the matador leaps upon the bull's back. If this does not provoke laughter, he lets the bull catch him on its horns, and goes hurtling wildly through the air.

Eventually, however, the crowd wears out of the fight, and then occurs the only tragedy of the day. People call for the death of the bull, a sword is brought and the unfortunate beast killed in the ring.

Elk Similar to Cattle

"In feeding habits, the elk are similar to domestic cattle, in that they prefer to graze on grasses and a variety of other ground vegetation when they are available," notes a writer in the Detroit News. "In winter, however, when the snow gets up in the north country, covering the ground vegetation with its snowy mantle, the elk must seek some other food supply. Then they may be found in the localities where they can find browse, the twigs and buds of trees. The preferred varieties of browse are found on the hardwood trees—maple, beech, birch, ash, basswood—and a multitude of shrubs which grow in mixture with the hardwood trees. They also like to paw the snow away to obtain such tasty morsels as lichens and mossy growths."

Burial Place of Norse Gods

In Old Uppsala, north of Stockholm, are three huge mounds beneath which, ancient legend says, the old Norse gods—Odin, Thor and Freya—were buried when they died on the introduction of Christianity. Modern scholarship, however, contends that they are ceremonial mounds. From the highest of the ancient kings addressed their people when the tribes assembled for what the Scandinavians called a "thing." Near the mounds is the sacred grove where, on festival days, thousands of victims were slaughtered in Odin's name. The castle in modern Uppsala, incidentally, was the favorite home of Queen Kristine. Here she abdicated the Swedish throne.

Getting Out of Crime

Most American courts still consider pleas of insanity from the standpoint of moral responsibility instead of mental derangement, writes J. W. McKenna, Milwaukee, Wis., in Collier's. "In 20 states a person is not liable for a crime when he proves he did not know that the act was wrong. In 17 states, even when knowing the difference between right and wrong, he is immune from punishment when his crime was committed under 'an irresistible impulse' due to a mental disease."

When the Earth Rumbles

An earthquake sounds like the rumble of a heavy freight train, and the noise apparently precedes the actual shock by a few seconds, it has been reported in Science by Prof. Alvin L. Lugin, associate professor of geology at the University of Nebraska, who heard and experienced a shock. The true sound of earthquakes is seldom detected because it is often masked by the crashing of masonry and glass, and cries of victims.—Literary Digest.

Farmers Do Not Live on Fat

The people of the Bahamas do not live on their farms, as is customary in America, but in small settlements by the sea. On the majority of farms there are no buildings at all, save occasional thatched palmetto leaf huts. As a matter of fact, excepting the island of Eleuthera, agriculture can hardly be considered a major industry in the islands.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

THE woman who does her own laundry work can save herself effort in many little ways which are sometimes overlooked. If at a summer camp, or by the sea, or in the country, the bed linen can be used rough-dried. The room scarcely applies to the neatly folded and well-smoothed linens when they are done with the idea of no ironing. We might well call them smooth-dried, rather than rough-dried. In order to give them the smooth finish, the following methods should be followed:

Shake the sheets, pillow cases, and towels well after wringing them, as this immediately lessens the creases. Hang them on the line so that the wind direction is against the surface, not striking the pieces from the side, which makes the material blow in folds and not out straight.

Put sheets over the line so that half falls each side of it, bringing the crease straight along the middle, which would be the very place it would come if the sheet were ironed. An imperative necessity is to keep the sheet stretched its full width or length, according to how it is doubled over the line. This does not mean that it should be pulled taut across the line, but that it falls without folds over the line for the breezes and the sun to dry the material unwrinkled.

Pillow Cases and Towels

Hang pillow cases hems down, and with the other end straight along the clothes line. Then the wind will blow them smooth, or the sun will cause the evaporation of the water from uncreased surfaces. Hang towels straight with one edge along the clothes line, so they will dry evenly.

When it is time to take the clothes down, let no wrinkles or folds get into them except in the folds desired. Fold the sheets as they are taken down. If two do this it is easier, but one can do it successfully by folding the sheet in half again while it is on the line, and then throwing it over the line and folding it in half again that way. The rest of the folding is easy. Keep the wide hem on the outside. When the clothes are in the house, lay each sheet flat and folded, on the table, and smooth it with the palms outspread. Lay away, flat and smooth, and no ironing, which is hot work, will be required.

Fold towels and pillow cases as you take them from the line and smooth them as described before laying them on the shelves. It takes a few moments to take in the wash as described and only a few moments more to palm-press them. I have done it many times at my summer place and know whereof I speak.

Vacation Clothes

When you go on your vacation be careful not to let the weather just prior to your starting off influence you in your choice of a wardrobe. Be prepared with proper clothes for different weather. There is sure to be a change, and you want to look well and suitably dressed all the time.

There are many styles of rainy day togs that are light in weight, inexpensive in price, and becoming. There are rain coats and capes, and even rubber skirts to drape over frocks, and capes to go with them for complete protection.

Be sure to pack one warm frock. Not only is it uncomfortable to be chilly, but a person looks far from the best when too thinly clad. Cold shows in the countenance. There is a pinched look that betrays that chilly feeling, and everyone will be commiserating you either vocally or silently. And who wants that? Look warm and cheerful, and you will instill an element of pleasure by your very appearance, and thus add a note of popularity to yourself.

Take along sheer costumes for hot weather, and look as cool as you can. It is pleasant to see some one who looks crisp and cool when weather is sweltering. Even at seashore and mountain resorts, there are occasional such days. Be ready for them.

Varnishing Precaution

The formation of blisters on a varnished surface may be due to underlying spots of grease, sap or moisture, to excessive heat or to direct exposure to the sun during the process of drying.

To avoid the possibility of such a mishap be sure the surfaces to be varnished are clean, grease-free and absolutely dry—also that there is no direct sunlight and that the temperature is well below the gay "nineties."

Preparation for Painting

Jane Stewart Davis in Better Homes and Gardens advises the home craftsman to be sure that porch or garden furniture is thoroughly clean before beginning to paint. Soap and water can be used if all the soap is removed—any soap left on the furniture damages the finish. Water containing a little ammonia is very easily rinsed. Grease can be removed with gasoline or turpentine without difficulty.

Washington Chief Center, of the World for Maps

Generally unknown is the fact that Washington is the greatest map-making center in the world and the storehouse of the largest number of completed ones, says the Washington Star.

In its more than 50 collections, containing about 20,000,000 on file—3,500,000 all different—one may find literally everything from airplane maps to whale charts. The air above the earth with its "bumps" and currents; cadastral charts which show every contour of the soil, its chemistry, geology and man-made objects on the surface; the mountains and valleys of the continents under the seas—in some way, every square inch of the known world may be seen on maps drawn, published, compiled in Washington or purchased abroad, and now in public and private collections.

When Hipparchus had scratched the last line on his crude map of the world as it was known in 200 B. C., he could set aside his stylus and the mud tablet was set in the oven, and feel reasonably sure that his work would stand for at least another score of years. In that day the face of the world altered slowly.

Catching up with our changing world to map it is no longer the leisurely task of a cloistered draughtsman. It is rather the hurried, full-time toll of highly skilled artists, and is crisscrossed with elements of adventure, news reporting and accurate, laborious research.

Busy Little Insect Is

Manufacturer of Shellac

Few people realize a man's debt to an industrious little insect called lacquer laccifer. India first knew it as a rampaging parasite, despoiling forests. But, as the raw manufacturer of shellac, the resin used for making gramophone records, stiffening straw hats, coating wood and metals, and other insulating purposes, it is today treated with marked respect.

Knowing its appetite for succulent young branches, the natives prepare these specially for it, attaching them to trees. The lac then dines at its pleasure, covering the bark with a resinous secretion. The female lac is the most prolific source of supply. Then, when the harvest appears ripe, the branches are cut down and scraped. The resin is melted into a plastic mass, which on drying is cut up into circular cakes or sheets, ready for export.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

THE STORY

CHAPTER XII

CHAPTER I.—Matt Kearney, young American living in London, says good-bye to his sister Eileen, on board the steamer Wallaroo bound for Colombo. The Wallaroo is conveying £2,000,000 in gold to Australia. Eileen has a presentiment of coming evil, which affects her brother. On his way home Kearney meets an old friend, Inspector Dawson Haig, of Scotland Yard, who is very much in love with Eileen. Haig is on the trail of a criminal, which he is convinced is concealed in Jo Lung's warehouse. Called to other duty, Haig delegates Kearney with Detective Norwich, to visit the place and find out what he can.

CHAPTER II.—They find the place a veritable treasure house, and Kearney recognizes jewels stolen from his aunt. While in the warehouse he picks up a notebook. Soon after leaving Kearney Norwich is murdered. Haig is puzzled over cryptic notes in the book, referring to stops to be made by the Wallaroo.

CHAPTER III.—Yu-an Hee See, high-born Chinaman, whom Haig has long been seeking as the leader of a band of international thieves, is at Jo Lung's. Discovering the loss of his notebook, he sends two of his followers after Norwich and Kearney, one of whom he realizes must have picked it up. Norwich's murder follows, but Kearney is not overtaken. While Haig is poring over the book, alone in Kearney's rooms, a monstrous creature enters, seizes it, and escapes.

CHAPTER IV.—Kearney's story of hearing horrible laughter while at Jo Lung's place satisfies Haig's quarry was in hiding there. He recognizes the peculiar malignancy of Yu-an's laugh.

CHAPTER V.—Eileen Kearney, writing to Haig, tells of a jolly fellow passenger, a clever Austrian, Doctor Oestler. At Cairo Yu-an confers with his lieutenant, Aswami Pasha, known among the gang as the "Chief," over a mysterious coup they are planning. Haig goes to Marseilles, where he meets Eileen when she goes ashore with Doctor Oestler. The inspector boards the Wallaroo, disguised as a radio messages he decodes, he realizes Oestler, with others on board, are members of Yu-an's gang and that they have recognized him.

CHAPTER VI.—A huge Chinaman tries to throw Haig overboard but goes over himself in a desperate struggle. At Port Said Eileen disappears.

CHAPTER VII.—Haig, trailing Eileen and Doctor Oestler, is lured into a drug-impregnated "bath of feathers." Oestler reports that he left Eileen shopping, and though under suspicion, his story cannot be shaken. Haig escapes from the deadly trap and shoots Joseph, one of the plotters. Eileen, who has been drugged, regains consciousness in an Arabian mansion. Yu-an's headquarters.

CHAPTER VIII.—Haig takes Joseph's papers, and Eileen, Elsie, and a young man to the British consul. Oestler and Miss Edman, an accomplice, mysteriously disappear from the Wallaroo and appear at Yu-an's headquarters in Arabia. It is evident that Yu-an and Aswami Pasha talk that they intend to capture or sink the Wallaroo. Using Joseph's credentials, Haig makes his way to Kenah Arabia.

CHAPTER IX.—Yu-an's cut-throat gang gathers for final instructions from Aswami Pasha as to capturing the Wallaroo's cargo of gold the next day in the Red sea. Haig begins to perceive Yu-an's monstrous plot, to seize the gold, but all his thoughts are centered on the rescue of Eileen. Impersonating Joseph, he is assigned to guard duty outside Yu-an's mansion. The girl sees him from a window, and is heartened. Haig also has seen her.

CHAPTER X.—Yu-an and Aswami Pasha lure the Wallaroo from her course with a wireless appeal for aid. Orange Blossom, Yu-an's jealous favorite, suggests to Aswami that Eileen be spirited away. He agrees to co-operate with her in getting rid of the girl. Next day, Aswami, from a submarine, boards the Wallaroo, and his helpless captain, to save his passengers, is forced to surrender the gold, which is transhipped to the submarine.

CHAPTER XI.—The gold safely on the submarine, Yu-an torpedoes and sinks the Wallaroo, with, he believes, all on board. From the deck of the pirate submersible his men, with rifles, pick off the remnant of the passengers and crew struggling in the water, and the sharks complete the ghastly work, but Jack Rattray, the Wallaroo's first officer, is providentially saved from instant death. Eileen is taken in a motor cruiser, bound for Kenah. She is conveyed to Hassan es-Suk's Cafe Magrabi in Kenah. Haig learns this and takes up the trail again. On his way Haig rescues Rattray, the only survivor of the Wallaroo.

CHAPTER XII.—Yu-an discovers Aswami's treachery, with Eileen's disappearance, and punishes Aswami and Orange Blossom in his ruthless fashion. In the absence of Yu-an and his chief aide, the submarine crew decides to put to sea when the Panther, a British battleship, is sighted. Mac Elsen, debauched Scottish engineer in Yu-an's employ, in a fit of remorse, overcomes by the ghostliness of the wanton slaughter of the helpless survivors of the Wallaroo, deliberately puts the submarine, with Doctor Oestler, the gold, and all on board, at the bottom of the sea. Haig, happy with Eileen, realizes he has won high position through his efforts in putting an end to Yu-an's operations, and his future is assured—but he cannot overcome the feeling that somewhere, still seems to hear the appalling laughter of Yu-an Hee See, of whom there is no trace.

Eileen, for the second time since she had set out on that ill-fated voyage from London, found herself groping in the dark, trying to remember what had happened. It was something to do with drinking a cup of coffee. And Celeste, poor Celeste, had not been there.

"The risk is too great," a man's voice had said. "It's madness! This may ruin us." She had been ill, perhaps. It was all part of delirium. . . . those garlands with the orange trees in which monkeys played. . . . the sickly anesthetic smell. And there were voices again.

"Yes, but it is dangerous—very dangerous. How can I ever hope to carry her so far?"

"The price is low, my friend, for such."

"Her legs are too thin for the taste of His Serene Highness."

It was this last remark which had finally aroused Eileen. She opened her eyes, looked down at her own bare body—and, galvanized into life, sprang upright. She was in a large saloon with a matting-covered floor and closely shuttered windows. She had been lying on a divan covered with faded tapestry above which hung a lighted lamp. Before her, one plump band raised to his hairless lip as if in consideration, was a stout, greasy-looking person wearing European clothes. Beside him stood a very dirty old Arab. Eileen looked swiftly about her.

There was no substitute for a garment in the place. Taking a swift step forward, and conquering a deadly nausea, she struck the hesitating buyer on his fat face! Once, she struck twice! He recoiled. A third time—and this with her fist!

Hassan es-Suk clutched her in his sinewy old hands. With her knee she kicked him viciously in the stomach. He released her. She kicked him again.

But this spurt of strength which had flared up under the sense of outrage now deserted her. She staggered, swayed forward, followed an interval of complete unconsciousness. And then, a voice—the voice of the Arab again.

"What could I do, effendim? Said brought her to me. How was I to know she was reserved? Here was a famous jewel—and money is money. But she struck AM Mahmoud in the face! And he had offered—my heart bleeds—one thousand English pounds for her!"

"He withdrew his offer, I presume?"

"Immediately, effendim. She has ruined me. Also, the American pigs know she is here. At any moment the cafe may be raided."

"Forget this fear, Hassan. I had thought the chief, enunoh of the prince a wiser man. But my money is as good as his, and I also collect fair women. Twelve hundred pounds English, Hassan? Your share will be a big one."

Eileen opened her eyes. She still lay in that dark, stuffy saloon. The villainous old Arab was there; the other man's features were indistinguishable because of bandages, but through these bandages dark eyes watched her greedily.

A silken coverlet had been thrown over her. She grasped this and drew it up to her shoulders.

"You have nothing to fear from me, my child," said the tall Egyptian.

"Although you just offered to buy me! You miserable, cowardly dog! Do you think you or any other man could buy me?"

A door at the further end of the saloon opened softly. . . . Yu-an Hee See came down the steps. The Egyptian stared at the Chinaman as though hell's gates had opened and Satan had stepped forth.

Yu-an Hee See stood still for a while, hissing softly. "So this is the story, my friend," he said, the quivering flute notes sounding unlike any thing human. "I passed through the tall end of the sandstorm which forced you down in the desert. It delayed your journey—but not mine. A fortunate accident, Aswami, for me—not for you. Always—always—I suspected. But last night, or very late this morning, I forced the truth from our little Orange Blossom, Aswami. . . . forced the truth—you understand?"

He began to laugh; and it was dreadful laughter—laughter which for years afterwards haunted Eileen's dreams. Aswami Pasha seemed to be choking.

"Come, my friend," said Yu-an Hee See, checking his laughter. "I have matters to discuss with you which I do not desire this lady to overhear."

He fixed his slanting eyes on the rigid figure of old Hassan es-Suk. "Carry this lady through to the cage room," he ordered. "Find clothing. Bar your doors and return. I shall have work for you."

Eileen fell back, sick and faint, upon the divan. The opaque earlier placed in her coffee, overcame her again. . . . She felt herself lifted—carried. . . . There was a dull crash—a stifled grunting cry. . . .

In a sort of canteen Yu-an Hee See's rogues were gathered.

Doctor Oestler was addressing the Scotsman. "I tell you, Mac," he said, "what you suggest is madness—ha? Madness. When you consider that we have two millions of minted money, not unloaded from the how, ha?—where is your good sense to suggest that the Chief has deserted us? Why should he desert us, ha? Just when we have accomplished so great a success?"

Macles, who was dead sober—he had touched nothing for twenty-four hours—fixed bleary eyes upon the speaker. "I say," he replied, "that life is more valuable than gold. The Chief has gone and so has Mr. King. And there's a British warship nosing about the island. We a' know that. They can put a landing party ashore, to cut us off on the east, and they can blow this place to smithereens in two minutes. Listen to what the lads are saying!"

Indeed it was apparent enough that the ruffians in the canteen were disheartened. High above the clamor a voice was heard demanding, "Vot about der share-out? Dis it iss I ask. Vot about der share-out?"

"They dinna ken the truth," said Macles. "Something's gone awry, and we've been left to face the music. It's true, we have the money; but we'll never live to spend it unless we do what I suggest."

"You see Mac," Doctor Oestler interjected, "it is pretty clear that we had a spy amongst us, ha? The Chief has gone to head him off—ha? head him off? If the other has gone also, why the situation is bad I think—bad. But we should wait—ha?—for instructions. You think so?"

"I'm not!" Macles banged his hand upon the table to emphasize his words. "No harm can be done by hiding the bawbles. There's only one place we can hide them and bide ourself, if we're to be raided."

"I do not think she will carry it, not also with a full crew," said Doctor Oestler.

"Leave that to me," said the Scotsman truculently. "Stick to your ain province, doctor. If I see she can carry it—she can carry it. He stood up."

"Boys!" he said, "I've had for orders, because there's no other, else here to give them. There's something wrong I canna tell what it is, but our course is plain. I'm for transshipping the gold to the submarine and, landing by w! all hands to submerge! the falst hoot o' danger. Now, wha' w! me?"

A general roar indicated that all were with him.

"It's only us of the crew have anything to be afraid of," he continued. "But when the Chief returns, if he does return, he can only thank us. There's a Breethish warship."

His words dramatically were terminated by the sound of a distant gun shot. Macles looked down at Doctor Oestler, whose face, suddenly, had grown very white.

"The Panther," he said calmly. "She'll be putting a boat ashore!"

The establishments controlled by Yu-an Hee See, wherever they might be, had one notable characteristic: there was a secret entrance and exit. In the case of the Cafe Magrabi, there were two such entrances and exits. One opened upon a narrow lane at the back into an old house which adjoined the establishment of Hassan. And while British and American agents had watched the cafe, Eileen was taken into this house and offered for sale!

When at about two o'clock, Dawson Haig arrived, the dingy shutters of the Cafe Magrabi were closed.

The party accompanying Haig had these shutters down in a price. Haig leading, they dashed into the dirty cafe. Where there had been a matting curtain leading to the short corridor beyond, a stout wooden door now showed. They broke it down. This was the sound that, mingled with a grunting shriek, had formed Eileen's last waking memories.

Haig dashed down the wooden steps. "Eileen!" he cried.

He was on his knees beside a pathetic white figure, half draped by a dirty coverlet. His teeth clenched in furrowed anger, he drew it more closely over her and eagerly bent his head. "Thank God!" he whispered. "Thank God!"

Haig gave one last glance at the girl's pale face before racing up the steps upon the other side of the room. The door was barred. The sergeant hurried himself at it, and the first impact of his two hundred pounds did the job.

Dawson Haig entered a smaller room with an iron-barred window. It was empty. There was a narrow staircase leading out of it—the very staircase upon which old Hassan had run not five minutes before. There was an open door, a disguised door very cunningly contrived, low down in one wall. Below—brick steps.

"Upstairs, sergeant! Take three men! Send three more after me!" Haig, ducking his head, raced down into the short tunnel which led to the house of the potter. He found himself in an empty lobby, ran up a wide staircase, and into a saloon with shuttered windows. One lamp burned above that divan upon which Eileen had been submitted to the judgment of the chief enunoh of His Serene Highness. He crossed to a door approached by steps, and pushed it open cautiously.

On the threshold of the room beyond, he fell back. A man lay upon the floor in a pool of blood, his throat torn as though by the fangs of a wild animal!

"This was how poor Norwich died!"

The Thing I saw in London is here somewhere!"

But the room was empty, from moldy, decaying roof, to stinking cellar! The only person, other than Eileen, found on the premises was Aswami Pasha, his jugular pierced by curving teeth, his blood pumping out from those ghastly wounds. Add Haig thought he detected a faint smell of musk. . . .

In a long, low hangar, which from above (from an airplane, for example) resembled more than a mound in the desert, the German U-boat bought for breaking-up purposes by an agent of Yu-an Hee See three years before, and "lost" owing to the parting of a tow-rope on her way from the Australian yards, lay under floodlights suspended from the roof.

Two streams of negroes poured, like black ants, up and down her gang ways, the upstream laden with small, heavy boxes, the downstream empty-handed. Two million pounds in minted money was thus transferred from the dhow at anchor in the nearby harbor to the hidden submarine.

On the light-flooded wharf, Doctor Oestler, excited by many glasses of champagne, grasped the arm of Macles as the Scot came down the gang way.

"I tell you, Mac," said the doctor hoarsely, "she is overloaded! Ha?"

Macles broke away from the clinging hand.

"Shut your mouth," he replied roughly. "Hinna sail w! un it ye it, doubts."

But the Austrian physician was not without supporters. Len Chow, second-in-command of the U-boat, stood by him. "I agree with the doctor," he said in his monotonous tones, "that only two tons should be shipped."

"Go to—b—!" He brushed Len Chow aside and passed on.

An Arab boy came running. A launch from the gunboat was headed for the jelly.

"There goes the last five thousand," said the Wasp; and, raising his voice: "All aboard!" he cried.

"Do ye sail?" Macles asked Doctor Oestler. The Austrian thought: "Money opens many doors, ha? There was no escape if he remained ashore. The Marquis and the Pasha plainly had deserted the sinking ship, and the danger must have been great, ha?—since they had left two millions of minted money behind them?"

Doctor Oestler nodded briefly and walked up the gangway, followed by Macles and Len Chow. They slipped out to the open sea. Oestler, from the forward conning tower, saw the threatening gray lines of H. M. S. Panther lying half a mile outside the reef. Len Chow gave the order to submerge. Only through the periscope did that doomful shape remain visible.

They sank lower. Doctor Oestler ran down a cramped iron ladder. He stumbled and clutched. It seemed to be strangely tilted.

"They can never see the periscope!" he cried. "Why do we submerge so deep?"

The whole fabric of the underwater craft shook suddenly and quivered.

"Mac!" Oestler screamed desperately—"Chow! Gott! . . . We're aground!" The Scotsman stopped his engines.

Other voices came, dimly at first—then raised to shouting pitch. "Doctor Oestler," said Macles, "Mr. Len Chow—we're right in it ye said! We're overloaded. There's five fathoms between us and God's sunshine, and no human power can raise us to it. We're buried under the sea, w! two million pounds and a' our sins!"

The iron-framed doorway was crowded with ghastly faces. Macles sprang to his feet, dropped to his knees, and raised his head and his locked hands.

"O Lord!" he cried, "for this one wee deed in a sinful life—spare me a grain o' mercy!"

The inhabitants of that nameless town dominated by the palace of Yu-an Hee See, willing servants of the master on the hill, had flown at the moment that the battleship had showed her nose over the horizon.

The palace surpassed anything which Lieutenant Markham had seen or imagined. The female inhabitants, hudded in cushioned corners, were staring wide-eyed at the intruders.

Lieutenant Markham pressed on through more and more extravagant apartments. . . . and suddenly found muscular arms about his neck and tearful dark eyes looking up into his own!

"Oh, thank God, I see you!" cried Celeste, replying sorrowfully. "All I know is what happen inside these walls." She waved eloquent hands. "But in that room there—" she pointed dramatically to a narrow door paneled in dull gold—"in that room there, this morning, something happen. I think—a good thing."

When the locked door was broken down a horrified group stood on the threshold of a room entirely paneled in gold lacquer. Lying across a divan covered with black cushions, delicate ivory gleaming through the fine texture of a silken robe, lay Orange Blossom—her downward hung head chastly because of the blood which had dripped it.

"Good G—d, sir!" came a hoarse whisper. "Some wild animal has been at her—look at her throat!"

"Darling!" Dawson Haig whispered. "Oh, my darling! Thank God!" Eileen opened her blue eyes and looked up at him—wondering. Then, with a slow smile, she twined her arms about his neck and drew his head down to her breast.

Dawson Haig held her tightly. He had done much and gained much. At last, he had justified his quixotic choice of a profession. He had fashioned a stepping stone, he knew it, which would carry him from the criminal investigation department of New Scotland Yard to the goal of his ambition. He had been instrumental in breaking up a formidable organization, a danger to the civilized world. . . . Kenah was being combed. Air force pilots were watching all roads to the Red sea. The camel corps were at Bir Amhar. And the secret base was in the hands of the navy.

"What is it, my dearest?" Eileen whispered.

He stroked the thick waves of copper hair. "Nothing, darling," he replied.

But save, for one glimpse in London, he had never yet come within reach of the Thing which tore human throats. . . . and, somewhere deep down in his mind, he seemed to hear the high, battlelike laughter of Yu-an Hee See.

MAKING CHERRY
PIES REAL ARTThere's a Trick to Turning Out a Good One.

By EDITH M. BARBER

"CAN she make a cherry pie, Billy-Boy, Billy-Boy?" So goes the old song, with its answer, "She can make a cherry pie in the twinkling of an eye." Evidently this was considered a test of the bride-to-be as far as her housekeeping abilities were concerned.

Even today when we are served with a really good cherry pie it is usually at the end of a satisfying meal where everything else is well cooked. First of all the pastry must be rich and flaky. There are just one or two tricks to pastry making. The proportion of fat to flour must be right. In general, one-third as much lard or hardened vegetable fat as flour. Usually it is best to cut the fat into the flour with a knife.

Perhaps you are saying to yourself, "Well, my mother always mixed pastry with her hands, and it was simply grand." I'm sure it was. But if your hands are as warm as mine you will do better if you will use a knife, or maybe two. It should not be cut as fine, however, as it is for biscuits because the large particles of fat make a nice flaky crust.

Now you are ready to add the water, which should be very cold. Make a hole in the mixture at one side and stir in a tablespoonful of water until you have a stiff ball of dough at that point. Then begin to add water at another point. When you have three balls of dough, take your hands and put them together with the extra flour left in the bowl. When the dough is smooth, put it in the refrigerator for at least an hour to chill and then it will be easy to roll.

Divide the dough into two parts and you are ready to make your pie and roll lightly into a round a little larger than your pan. Line the pan with one sheet, pressing it into the pan and cover the bottom with flour and sugar mixed together, one tablespoonful of each. Cover with a layer of cherries, sprinkle liberally with sugar and continue until your fruit is piled a little higher than the depth of the pan. Cover with the other layer of pastry and press the edges together. Cut the overlapping pastry evenly. With a fork press the two layers around the edge of the pan or blind the dampened edge with a thin strip of pastry. You may now get rolls of parchment paper which are designed especially for this purpose. Cut slits in the top of the pie to let out the steam which forms as the fruit cooks. Use a very hot oven, 450 degrees F., for the first 15 minutes of baking and then lower to 350 degrees for about 30 minutes longer. You may use this same method for all fruit pies which should be sirupy, not starchy as is sometimes the case when too much flour is put with the fruit.

In all of these cherry recipes we make use of the sour cherries. The large sweet cherries are often put into tart shells over which a cherry glaze may be poured.

Steamed Cherry Pudding

2 cups cherries
¼ cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1½ cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
1 cup milk

Look over cherries and cut in half and pit. Cream butter, add sugar slowly and cream together until light. Add beaten eggs. Add flour which has been sifted with the baking powder alternately with the milk. Add the cherries mixed with a little of the flour. Put into greased mold, cover and steam three hours. Serve hot with hard sauce.

Cherry Dumplings

2 pounds cherries
2-3 cup water
1 cup granulated sugar
1 cup unseasoned mashed potatoes
1 cup flour
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ cup melted shortening
1 egg slightly beaten

Wash and stem the cherries, place in a covered kettle with the water and simmer covered 25 minutes, stirring occasionally, to prevent sticking and to bring the pits to the top. Skim out the pits and stir in the sugar. Meanwhile combine the mashed potatoes, flour, salt and melted shortening. Drop from a teaspoon on top of the hot cherry mixture for 15 minutes. Serve dumplings with the hot sauce.

Pastry

1½ cups flour
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ cup fat
Cold water

Sift together the flour and salt. Cut in the fat with two case knives. For a large quantity, a wooden bowl and chopping knife may be used. When fine, add at one side of the bowl one tablespoonful of cold water and stir in as much of the flour and fat as the water will take up. Continue this until you have four or five balls of dough and some dry flour left in the bowl. Press together with your fingers. If all the dry flour is not taken up, add a little more water. Chill and roll.

Cherry Pie

3 cups cherries.
1½ cups sugar
2 tablespoons flour
Stone cherries, mix with the sugar and flour and bake between crusts or bake in one crust, in a hot oven, 450 degrees F., for ten minutes. Lower temperature to 350 degrees and bake about 25 minutes.

CIRCUIT COURT

IN SESSION ONLY FIVEDAYS—RETURNED FIVE INDICTMENTS AND ONLY ONE SENTENCED TO PENITENTIARY.

Judge J. G. Vallandigham adjourned the August term of Circuit Court Friday afternoon. Court had been in session five days. The grand jury returned five indictments. One defendant was sentenced to the penitentiary for store house breaking, another defendant was found not guilty for chicken stealing by a jury. Louis Reitman who was indicted for shooting with intent to kill, was found to be of unsound mind and sent to the State Hospital, Lakeland, for the criminal insane. The indictment will not be tried until the mental condition of Reitman is restored. He has been confined in the Asylum on two other occasions and recovered his mental condition sufficient to be released, but as he is now confined in the criminal insane wards, if he recovers his mental faculties he will be returned for a trial of the crime of shooting with intent to kill for which he is indicted.

The jury was not called upon to try but few cases, but Judge Vallandigham was kept busy in the trials and making orders and rendering judgments in a number of other cases that were not submitted to a jury. The grand jury in their report stated that all county property was well taken care of.

EXPERIMENTS SHOW THAT FERTILIZERS INCREASE IODINE

That the iodine content of vegetables and other food and feed crops may be increased by the application to the soil of certain fertilizers, is the conclusion reached by Dr. J. S. McHargue, D. W. Young and R. K. Calfee in the department of research chemistry at the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station.

Due to the interest in the effect of iodine on health, the Kentucky scientists tested the effect of applying to plant growth certain chemical fertilizers known to contain relatively large amounts of iodine.

The results of the experiments, published in the Journal of the American Society of Agronomy, indicate that the iodine content of vegetables and other forms of plant growth may be materially increased, especially when potassium iodine is used on the soil. Crude Chile nitrate, raw rock phosphate, and limestone rocks contain enough iodine to influence the iodine content of forage crops and vegetables.

Not only is it possible to increase the amount of iodine in food and feed crops, the investigators state, but the iodine is present in a suitable form for assimilation by livestock and man.

Analyses of the iodine content of the soils in the six principal geological areas of Kentucky showed the greatest deficiency in the Eastern Coal Fields, and the experiments were confined to corn, wheat and vegetables grown in eastern counties.

SAYS SOUTH FAVORED FOR POULTRY RAISING

The South is an especially favored region for the development of poultry raising, Prof. C. L. Morgan, head of the poultry department at the South Carolina Experiment Station, told those attending the 11th annual poultry short course at the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station at Lexington.

Many southern markets for poultry products are under-supplied by local producing areas, he said, thereby giving farmers and poultrymen local outlets for eggs and poultry at good prices.

An ample supply of locally grown feeds for poultry can be produced throughout the South, thus reducing feed costs.

Adequate conditions are favorable for maximum egg production by the time of maximum egg prices. Adequate buildings and equipment for poultry can be provided at a minimum cost.

Parasite troubles respond to the same control measures in the South as elsewhere, while certain poultry diseases are less common or less destructive.

Good breeding stock is available in practically every section for establishing flocks or for flock improvement.

The nearness of large eastern markets and possibilities of cheap transportation provide a satisfactory outlet for any surplus production.

George B. Miller, of Florence, who has been in failing health, is in Good Samaritan Hospital, Cincinnati.

STATE FAIR

AT LOUISVILLE TO BE WORLD WIDE EVENT

Louisville, Ky. (Special)—The influence of the Kentucky State Fair, which is to hold its 33rd annual exhibition in Louisville, Sept. 9-14, is world-wide.

While Kentucky's fame for thoroughbred horses, cattle and other livestock belies the globe, the Horse Show, which will be on four days and nights at the Fair this year, is unquestionably, year-in-and-year out, the world's greatest array of blooded horse flesh. The colt show event given by the American Saddle Horse and Breeders is recognized as the world's greatest show of future thoroughbred Ky. racing horses.

So great has the Kentucky State Fair become, not only as the show window for Kentucky breeders of livestock and poultry, and for agricultural and industrial products, but for attracting the leading herds of livestock from other States, the nation over.

The Fair's influence in Kentucky alone, is something for every Kentuckian to feel proud of, and be an incentive for not only himself to attend, but to see to it that his family gets the benefit and enjoyment out of its hundreds of educational features and wholesome entertainment attractions.

The Fair's slogan, adopted by Secretary Garth K. Ferguson—"The State Fair is your fair, so be there," should make every true Kentuckian, says he, want to go.

NO POLITICS

PEOPLE ON RELIEF IN STATE CAN VOTE ANY WAY THEY SEE FIT WITHOUT FEAR OF LOSING THEIR RELIEF STATUS

Louisville, Ky., August 20.—Charges and counter charges of intimidation of relief clients in Kentucky to force them to vote one way or another in the recent primary were answered today by Geo. H. Goodman, Works Progress Administrator.

Mr. Goodman admitted charges had been made to him that in certain sections of the state candidates for office, or their agents, had gone among relief clients and told them that unless the client voted a certain way his relief would be cut off. Still other charges, Mr. Goodman said, had been made that employees of the Relief Administration had been guilty of activity in the recent primary.

"I shall not countenance any such practices for a single moment," Mr. Goodman said. "People on relief in this state can vote any way they see fit without the least fear of losing their relief status. And you can further say for me that if I find a single instance wherein I am satisfied anyone employed by me is taking an active part in politics, other than to cast his vote for whom he pleases, their connection with the Relief Organization will be severed forthwith."

Discussing the charges still further, Mr. Goodman said, "you can not emphasize too strongly that there is one thing I will not stand for and that is politics" in relief. President Roosevelt told me personally on a recent trip I made to Washington that politics and relief were alien and that he expected me to see to it that there was no such thing in Kentucky. As long as I am on this job I shall do just that."

Quoting from the 1935 Emergency Appropriation Act, Mr. Goodman pointed out a clause which he quoted in substance as follows: "This Act, under which the Works Progress Administration is now operating, specifically says that political intimidation of employees and workers, and misrepresentation by persons in this connection, can and will be proceeded against in Federal Courts."

The members of the Parent-Teachers Association of the New Haven Consolidated school wish to thank those who attended the Garden Party Saturday. The cakes and salads donated were very fine and much appreciated. Especially do we want to thank the Walton String Ensemble, as the success of the party was largely due to their music.

Mrs. Walter Ferguson, President, P. T. A.

GOOD METHODS

PROFITS WERE MADE BY 20 UNION COUNTY HOG RAISERS WHO FOLLOWED IMPROVED PRACTICES LAST YEAR.

Profits were markedly increased by 20 Union county hog raisers who followed improved practices last year, according to a study made by the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

Thirty farmers in Kentucky's largest corn and hog county cooperated with the county agent and the college in keeping records of their hog raising operations.

Net returns increased from a loss of $1.24 to a profit of $1.91 for each 100 pounds of gain as more of the following practices were used:

1. The raising of a large percentage of the pigs farrowed.
2. Having a large number of sows per herd.
3. Full feeding the pigs from start to marketable age.
4. Taking fewer days to produce 100 pounds of pork.

Farmers who raised 8 out of 10 pigs farrowed made a net return of 1.12 in contrast to a loss of 71 cents for each 100 pounds of gain for those farmers who raised an average of only a little more than 4 pigs of every 10 farrowed.

Net returns increased as the number of sows per herd increased, due largely to the fact that the big hog raisers are better equipped and give better care to their herds. Eight farmers who owned an average of about 20 sows made a net return of 83 cents per 100 pounds of pork produced, compared with a loss of 41 cents per 100 pounds where herds averaged only 4 sows. Eight farmers who practiced full feeding had a net return of $1.12 per 100 pounds of gain, compared with $2.22 cents for 22 farmers who followed limited feeding.

Full feeding, sanitation and generally better care and management considerably reduced the time required to produce 100 pounds of gain.

The Methodist Ladies Aid and Missionary Society met Wednesday with Mrs. Louis Sullivan for an all day meeting. The Ladies Aid Society celebrated the Birthday Anniversary. They had the pleasure of having Mrs. Lucy Pearson of Graves Avenue, Erlanger, who has been a member of the Florence church for 50 years. The Ladies Aid Society will hold their monthly Bakery Sale at E. L. Sine's grocery, Bank Lick and Dixie Highway August 24th.

PURCHASE PUREBRED SHEEP

G. H. Grant, S. B. Sleet, S. B. Scott and Charles Riley purchased purebred rams in Owen, Gallatin, Grant counties the past week. These rams will lead grade flocks in the production of high quality market lambs.

Boone county sheepmen are showing more interest in good rams to produce a better type of market lambs. Central Kentucky has excelled Northern Kentucky in recent years in this respect. The increased interest in breeding as well as sheep management indicates Boone county is coming to the front.

NEW SHOE STORE OPENS IN COVINGTON

The Quality Sample Shoe Shop was opened this week at 627 Madison Avenue, near Pike Street, Covington. The name of the store was adopted because of the shoes featured—quality shoes. The management announces that nationally known makes of shoes that sell as high as 10.00 a pair can be had there for as little as $1.90 and $3.87, which are the prices the year round. The store carries all sizes and every width, but not in every style.

Buying there is like buying remnants in a dry goods store—your size governs your selection entirely. The public is cordially invited to inspect the store. An advertisement of the Quality Sample Shoe Shop is carried in this issue of The Recorder.

The many friends of Albert William Weaver are glad he is able to be out again after a severe illness last week.

HOLD MEETING

THOSE INTERESTED IN ASSOCIATION ATTEND CORN-HOG MEETING AT LOUISVILLE.

J. H. Huey, president of Boone County AAA Corn-Hog Association, John E. Crigler, Secretary, Bert Gaines and S. B. Sleet, Directors, and H. R. Forkner, County Agent, attended the State AAA Corn-Hog Committeemen's meeting at Louisville, last Tuesday.

Mr. Claude R. Wickard, Chief of the AAA Corn-Hog Sections, was the principal speaker on the program. He stated the AAA corn-hog program was threatened by prejudiced and unfair statements sponsored by certain middlemen who were hindered from profiteering on the farmer. Not enough publicity has been given to the fact that working night and day to supply farm machinery and equipment with which the farmer is now purchasing as a result of securing a higher price for his products.

MANLEY GULLEY

Manley Gulley, 41, son of P. E. and Eliza R. Gulley, ended his life Saturday morning with a shot gun. He had been raising a crop on the farm of Joe Baurer, near Guilford, Indiana, and came home to visit his parents Friday. He spent the night with them on the Cason farm about four miles west of Burlington. After breakfast on Saturday morning he told his mother that he would take the shot gun and go and kill a squirrel. He left the house about 8 o'clock. His body was found by Mr. Johnson and his two boys about one half mile from the residence of his father. He had written a note telling where his discharge and compensation papers could be found and that he thought there was enough due him to pay for his burial. He used a single barrel 16-gauge shot gun, and apparently had put the barrel in his mouth as there was no powder burn on his face, the shot ranged upward but did not go through his head. His body was found within two hours from the time he left the home of his father. He had a crop of tobacco of three acres that is ready for housing. He is survived by his father and mother, and Mrs. Cecil Mullen, Lester Gulley, Mrs. L. L. Stephenson, Mrs. Maude Louden, Lloyd Gulley, Harry Gulley and Mrs. Alva Delph. Funeral services were held Monday afternoon at the home of his brother, Lester Gulley and wife, Burlington, burial at Bellevue on the family lot. Sheep growers over the county are reporting considerable trouble with stomach worms in their flocks according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Sheepmen who are interested in these treatments may secure the College of Agriculture Circular No. 132 "Stomach Worm Control" at the County Agent's Office at Burlington.

ARE THEY RIGHT?

Recently we have heard visitors to Owen say that the people of this section must be more prosperous than those of other sections because they note more new cars in the county than they have seen anywhere else. Now does this mean that our people are more prosperous than those of other counties? Think it over.

We agree that much money and notes have been given this year in Owen for new cars, gasoline and repairs.

We know that some of our folks are able to afford new cars and lose the time to ride in them, but as to whether this section is more prosperous than others we cannot say, possibly a look at the mortgage books in the county clerk's office might tell.—Owen County Democrat.

THE MONTH OF AUGUST

The month of August is a very important one for all. It is the time to sow turnips, finish cleaning out the crops and the gardens, cut the balance of the hay, mow the weeds, stick the late beans, begin feeding the meat hogs, clean out the ponds and springs, spray the hen houses, sell the surplus stock, repair the barn, doors and stalls, get in the winter's wood, paint the houses and roofs and get ready for fall and winter—this done a little swing around the country to see what the other fellow is doing will pay better than seeing soft balls and carnivals.

NOT ALWAYS THE CROSSING

The common mistake made by most people in thinking of automobile accidents at railroad crossings is that they consider the crossing instead of the driver.

A railroad crossing is a danger only when and to the extent that it is made so by careless driving. The automobile is what we must think about, and not the crossing. We must change practices instead of grades. Ninety per cent of all auto accidents occur on the highways. Not over 10 per cent occur at grade crossings.

Grade changes will not prevent accidents at intersections and elsewhere on the highways, but improved of safe practices of driving will prevent them everywhere.

Grade changes cause heavy tax burdens and tie up a large amount of money for unproductive purposes, while yet leaving 90 per cent of the hazard of automobile accidents uncared for.

As long as we have with us the driver who never looks to right or left in places of potential danger, who drives at reckless speed in congested areas and who disregards the safety of others at every turn, we will have automobile accidents regardless of grade crossings or any other fixed danger. And it is nearly always this sort of driver who gets caught at the grade crossing.

Let us require safe driving, which costs nothing, yet will remove the hazard not only at grade crossings but on the highways also.

FLIES, FROGS AND BEES

We read somewhere the other day about a man who had invented a new way of making money. This man owns a mushroom cave. In the highly fertilized mushroom beds, flies breed in enormous numbers. By the aid of a vacuum cleaner sort of apparatus, the story went, the man sucks the flies into a refrigerated room, where they become dormant from the cold. Then he packed the chilled flies into tin cans and sells them to another man who has a frog farm. Frogs thrive on a diet of flies, and at the reports both the fly-packer and the frog-farmer were getting rich.

We get a good deal of entertainment out of stories of that sort, but we are often amazed to see them printed as serious news in the city papers. We were much more edified by Senator Carter Glass' recent protest against the proposed regulation by the A. A. A. of the love-life of the queen bee. We do not know the name of the person who conceived the idea of introducing birth-control into the beehive, but we would not be surprised to learn that he was the original inventor of the process of canning chilled flies for frog food. We hope he has nothing to do with the administration of the blue-berried-canning industry.

SCHOOLING FOR PARENTS

Child experts in the U. S. have come to the conclusion that parents are sadly in need of schooling in common education in habits of economy and efficiency. That some children do no better in life is not surprising, when the examples set by many parents are taken into consideration.

Many parents have very poor programs for the routine work of life and the habits formed early in life by the children do much to wreck their future.

They smoke, chew, drink and habits of idleness found in many sections of the country among the young folks make very poor foundations for success in future years.

Many families have but few books and take and read but few papers therefore have but little opportunity to improve themselves or their children. Each and every parent should make journals of instruction along whatever may be their line of occupation.

A stream can rise no higher than its source and this is an argument given in favor of sterilization of a certain class of inhabitants and this question will be a hot one in the next legislature.

Time was once when debating societies were formed over the land, penmanship, spelling and mathematics were taught in night classes to parents as well as children.

So parents should study to improve.

A little loving now and then has caused the shooting or many a man.

How true it is that a man with a fine line of talk is usually fishing for something.

around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Comments by administration leaders, including Vice Chairman Crowe of the Democratic national committee, that President Roosevelt would be re-elected by the votes of the West and South, thus virtually conceding the Northeast as enemy country, have driven political wisecracks to the electoral vote table. What they have found is highly significant.

In a nutshell, if the Democratic campaign for Roosevelt should be waged on that basis next year, New York would again be the pivotal state, as it used to be in calculations at the turn of the century. For New York has not been the decisive state since the Cleveland days. In fact, in the only close election held since Cleveland—that of Wilson versus Hughes in 1916—New York was on the losing side. She cast her electoral vote for Hughes, by the fairly tight majority of 119,000.

Talk of re-electing Roosevelt with the West and South has brought back interest in that very close election, when everyone waited for word from California to see who had been elected. An inspection of that vote, however, brings out the highly interesting fact that the real key state in that election was Ohio. The Buckeye state was the only one, so to speak, to go "out of line." Ohio voted against the trend in surrounding states, for Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana and West Virginia all went for Hughes.

Had Ohio gone for Hughes, no one would have waited three days to see how California went. Hughes would have been elected.

The point of which now is, that the entire South and West are not enough, unless the candidates carrying them can also carry one of the big states, at least, east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio. New York, with all the West and all the South, would be enough. So would Ohio, Illinois. Or a combination of Indiana and Wisconsin.

Now Vital State

All this, too, it must be remembered, is on the assumption that the candidate carrying the South and West carries California. That state is now vital, far more important, with its heavily increased electoral vote, than it was in 1916—before election day of that year.

Rumblings from California are that the Golden Gate state today is no more friendly to the New Deal than is Rhode Island, whose vote precipitated all this talk. Washington attorneys who attended the bar association meeting in Los Angeles, most of whom also visited San Francisco, and some of whom visited San Diego, bring back these reports. They say California has been so frightened by radicals that it has swung all the way conservative.

Add to this possibility, the fact that Ohio never was a strong Roosevelt state—that even in 1932 its majority for him was only about 73,000—and since then it has had many squabbles—that both its senators voted against the AAA amendments—and it becomes clearer why New York's 47 electoral votes are apt to be absolutely essential to Roosevelt next year.

Which again brings up the question of Tammany. So far the Tiger has not put a stone in the President's path. It rolled up a tremendous majority for him in 1932. Its delegation in the house has voted almost solidly for everything he wanted—in many obvious instances against the local selfish interests of the New York taxpayers. Whereas Tammany has gotten very little. Farley's backing of McKee for mayor of New York resulted in the election of La Guardia, which deprived the Wigwag of local plunder, and it has fared very badly on federal patronage.

Now, no one accused the Tammany chieftains of being stupid about this sort of thing. And there will be no forced municipal election in November, 1936, as there was in 1932, following the resignation of Mayor Walker. So do not be surprised if suddenly there should be manifested a much more kindly spirit toward Tammany at the White House.

Churches and Charities

Sudden realization of what the Roosevelt tax ideals would do to their sources of incomes—not to mention endowments—has been driven home to prominent churchmen as well as those interested in hospitals and other charities.

Up to about a month ago the attitude toward the New Deal of most persons, whose chief interest was in churches, educational and charitable enterprises, had been rather benevolent. They were glad—especially these interested primarily in church and charity—to see the federal government take so much of their burdens from them. This was especially true because the New Deal program began at a time when for several years contributions had shrunk and expenditures skyrocketed, both due to the depression.

But suddenly their interest was forced on the whole subject of where the New Deal policies would lead—with respect to contributions and bequests by the rich—by President Roosevelt's firm stand against exemption of corporation contributions to charities from corporation income taxes.

Churches have long been beneficiaries from the wills of the rich. So have universities, hospitals and charities. And while some of the shrewder leaders in such circles had been somewhat alarmed by the heavy imposts on big fortunes proposed in the Roosevelt tax message of June, they had not taken any public stand. In fact, if they bothered to write to their senators and representatives during the last days of June or early in July, it escaped general notice.

Then the President made his position clear on corporation gifts to charities, which brought the people interested up standing, and resulted in an immediate barrage of protests being received on Capitol Hill.

Started Them Thinking

This got them to thinking about the whole tax program, and its possible effect not only on the things in which they were interested but, in many cases, on their jobs.

Church leaders began to realize that if the heavier income taxes on big incomes, and heavy imposts on inheritances proposed by the President, were imposed—there might be a serious falling off in their donations and bequests, as the first place the rich would start to cut "would be on their charities, when it came to readjusting their expenses to conform to the new taxes.

Very prominent churchmen of four of the largest denominations in this country have already moved into action, writing their senators and members of the house at length about what the new taxes would do to their churches. In many instances these letters were the second to be received by the same legislators from the same writers within a month.

First came the protests about the President's desire to eliminate the exemption for corporation gifts to charities. Then, within three or four weeks, came the second letters protesting about the higher taxes on the big incomes and inheritances.

One very important figure in church circles in this country wrote his senator that he believed the whole system of financing his church, and for that matter all other churches in this country, would have to be changed if the policy of "sharing the wealth" is carried out.

Incidentally, a few of these protest letters also strike at the idea of the sliding scale corporation taxes, pointing out that the same curtailment of gifts to church and charities would follow reduction of corporate dividends as would follow higher income and inheritance taxes.

Indications are that if the tax bill fight is long drawn out in the senate, this church and charities influence may become one of the potent elements in the final votes on amendments.

Cut Relief Costs

Real pressure to cut the relief costs of federal government has been under way since May, and effects are beginning to show. This is not being accomplished, as some seem to think, by any surveys the federal men are making. On the contrary it is being accomplished exclusively—so far—by state and local agencies.

But it is being done because of federal pressure. Very few people realize what a car the four-billion-dollar relief bill made of Harry Hopkins—always allowing for the fact that President Roosevelt can tell him what to do. But he has the power to say to any state: "Cut your relief rolls by so many by the first of the month, or next month you get no federal money whatever."

When congress was passing the relief bill, giving the President four billion dollars to prevent suffering and spend our way out of the depression, the senators and representatives were much concerned about how part of the money should be apportioned as between the states. They laid down the old, exacting formula arrived at in days of good roads aid appropriations. They applied this not only to such money as should be spent for roads, but also to the money to be spent for eliminating grade crossings.

It simply did not occur to them that it might be a pious idea to decide how the relief money should be distributed. The idea was, if people were hungry they would be fed. That is still the idea, of course, but the national legislators never thought of the possibilities of Harry Hopkins' saying to their state governments that if they did not proceed according to his ideas, he would cut off their federal aid.

All this really goes back to President Roosevelt's ideas in January, when he was explaining his 1936 budget (for year beginning July 1, 1935) and talking about the four-billion-dollar appropriation he was then asking. At that time the idea of the White House was that everybody who could work would be given work, and everybody who could not work would be thrown back on the states and local communities for support. In short, that the federal government would be taken out of the relief business as soon as the works-relief projects got under way.

What, a few weeks ago, was considered prospects for the finest crop in years, has vanished, and no amount of rain can bring the yield up to the amount at one time promised. The pastures are burnt up and stock subsists on dry grass and weeds. A good rain is much desired and greatly needed.

They tell a pretty good joke on mine host of the Boone House. It is this: One day last week two fellows (one of them as black as the ace of spades) wanted their dinner. He made the black fellow eat in the kitchen, while the white one occupied a seat at the table in the dining room. After they had enjoyed a hearty meal it was learned by Cy that they were both negroes.

BARNABAS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 4:36, 37; 11:19-30.

GOLDEN TEXT—He was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith.—Acts 11:24.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Barnabas' Love Gift.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Friendly Barnabas.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Barnabas Used His Possessions.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—In Partnership With God.

The explanatory title given by the lesson committee, "Barnabas (A Consecrated Man of Means)," is not entirely satisfactory, as it emphasizes only one of his many excellent qualities.

I. Barnabas the Man (Acts 4:36).

His original name was Joseph. When he became a Christian he was by the apostles renamed Barnabas, which doubtless signifies the change from the old life to the new. This is common custom, e. g., Simon to Peter and Saul to Paul. The name means "son of prophecy" or "son of exhortation and consolation." This shows not only the nature and spirit of Barnabas but indicates that he possessed a gift of hortatory preaching.

II. Barnabas the Philanthropist (Acts 4:37).

So fully had the divine love permeated the very being of Barnabas, that, seeing the need of his fellow believers, he sold his property and brought the money and laid it at the apostles' feet. He was in no sense obliged to do this as there was no such binding law of a community of goods in the early Church. Private ownership of property was recognized (Acts 5:4).

III. Barnabas the Christian Statesman (Acts 9:26-30; 11:19-30).

1. Befriended Saul (9:26, 27). After Saul's conversion he came to Jerusalem and tried to join himself to the disciples, but they were afraid of him. Barnabas saw that Saul was really a converted man. Being a good man he could see there was good in Saul. To be able to judge personality is the first mark of a Christian statesman.

2. Sent to Antioch (Acts 11:22-24). Violent persecutions of the Church sent many disciples to the regions about the Mediterranean sea. As they went they preached the gospel and churches were established. The most conspicuous of these was at Antioch, the capital of Syria, becoming the most important center in the spread of Christianity. Everything went well as long as the gospel was preached to the Jews only, but certain of these disciples deliberately preached Christ among the Greeks. They announced to them that God had become incarnate in a man, that that man, after a ministry of love and grace, had died a sacrificial death on the cross, and that salvation was now offered to all who would accept him.

Tidings having reached the ears of the Jerusalem Church that a great work of grace was expressing itself through the Grecians who were preaching the Lord Jesus Christ at Antioch, Barnabas was sent to look after it. Barnabas was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and faith. He, therefore, had spiritual discernment and broad sympathy. Those who have grace in themselves will be able to see grace in others. He exhorted them and urged them forward in their work.

3. Goes after Saul (11:25, 26). The work at Antioch so prospered that help was needed; therefore, Barnabas went after Saul. Barnabas thus introduced Saul to his great work as the apostle to the Gentiles. The gifts of both of these men were needed on that field. Different temperaments when brought into harmony by God's grace are needed in the church.

4. Disciples called Christians first in Antioch (v. 26). After a year of teaching by Paul and Barnabas, the name "Christian" was given to the disciples. Observe that the name was associated with the teaching. Paul taught the vital oneness of the believer with Christ; therefore, it was natural that the disciples should be called Christians. The notion that the name "Christian" was given in derision has no factual basis.

IV. Barnabas the Dispenser of Aims (vv. 27-30). Because of the oneness of Christians with Christ and with one another, the distress of the brethren at Jerusalem must be relieved by the gifts of believers at Antioch. The Spirit of God, through Agabus, made known the coming dearth which was to prevail throughout all the world. The disciples were therefore moved, according to their ability, to send relief unto the brethren in Judea. These gifts had a powerful effect in removing the suspicions of the brethren at Jerusalem.

A Strong Will

If we have need of a strong will in order to do good, it is more necessary still for us in order not to do evil; from which it often results that the most modest life is that where the force of will is most exercised.—Count Mole.

Lies

One lie in word or act opens the door to a thousand. Truth is the magician's circle, to cross which is to break the spell and turn all to darkness.—O. S. Marden.

SOME HINTS ON SUMMER BAKING

Demand Is on Increase for Oven-Cooked Dishes.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THE general belief is that women do less cooking in summer than in winter. The many letters, however, which I have received during the last few weeks asking for recipes, many of which are oven-baked and some of them needing a long baking, seem to contradict this. Perhaps the fact that modern stoves do not heat up the kitchen the way the old wood or coal range did in an earlier day explains some of this interest.

Among the requests is one for Danish pastry and another one for cinnamon buns which can be made from the same mixture. Danish pastry is a rich yeast dough. Part of the shortening is mixed into the dough and the rest is rolled into it after it has risen the first time.

Manhattan Clam Chowder
2 dozen clams
1/2 cup boiling water
2 quarts cold water
4 cups diced potatoes
3 onions, sliced
1/2 cup minced celery
2 cups tomato pulp
4 slices salt pork
Pepper
3 broken soda crackers
Scrub clams and steam in boiling water until the shells open. Drain, reserve liquor, remove clams from shell and chop hard parts. Add vegetables, salt and pepper to cold water and cook 15 minutes. Pantry the pork and add with the clams and clam liquor to the vegetables and cook over a low fire one hour.

Chocolate Roll
5 egg yolks
1 cup powdered sugar
3 tablespoons cocoa
5 egg whites
Beat egg yolks until thick, add sugar and beat well. Add cocoa and fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Spread in buttered, floured dripping pan and bake about ten minutes in moderate oven, 350 degrees F. Turn out on floured cloth, trim off crusts with damp cloth. When cool spread with whipped cream and roll. Serve with chocolate sauce.

Old Fashioned Jelly Roll
1/2 cup sifted cake flour
1 1/2 teaspoons baking powder
1/4 teaspoon salt
4 eggs
1/2 cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup jelly, currant, grape or any flavor
Sift flour and measure, combine baking powder and salt with eggs in a bowl. Place over a small bowl of hot water and beat with a rotary egg beater, add sugar slowly until mixture becomes thick and lemon colored. Remove bowl from hot water, fold in flour and vanilla. Turn into a pan 15 by 10 inches, lined with a greased paper and bake in a hot oven, 400 degrees 12 to 13 minutes. Quickly cut off the crisp edges of the cake. Turn from pan at once onto a cloth covered with confectioner's sugar. Remove paper, spread with jelly and roll. Wrap in cloth and cool on rack.

Danish Pastry
2 cakes compressed yeast
1 cup milk, scalded and cooled to lukewarm
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
4 egg yolks
4 cups flour
1/2 cup melted shortening
1/2 cup hard butter
Crumble yeast into a bowl, add milk and stir to dissolve yeast. Add sugar, salt, beaten egg yolks and flour. Mix, add melted butter and mix well. Turn out on floured board, knead quickly into a smooth dough and put in a greased bowl. Cover with a towel and let rise over hot water until double in bulk. Roll the dough one-quarter inch thick. Cut the hard butter into small bits. Put half the pieces in the center of a strip of dough. Fold one end of dough to cover the butter, place the remaining butter on top and fold over the other end of dough. Press together and roll as thin as possible, lifting it frequently to keep it from sticking. Fold each end to the center, pat, fold to make four layers. Roll and fold again. Roll one-fourth inch thick and spread with the following mixture:

2 egg yolks
2 tablespoons sugar
1/2 cup chopped nuts
Blend well the egg yolks with the sugar and add the nuts. Spread on pastry, fold, press with a rolling pin, cover and let rise 20 minutes. Shape in crescent or coils and let rise one-half hour. Bake five minutes in a very hot oven, 500 degrees, reduce heat to moderate, 350 degrees, and bake 15 to 20 minutes, according to size. Brush with confectioner's sugar mixed to a paste with cream or water and sprinkle with nuts if desired.

Wellington Loaf Cake
1/2 cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1/2 cup milk
1 1/2 cups cake flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
2 squares unsweetened chocolate
1/2 teaspoon vanilla
Cream the butter with the sugar, add the well beaten yolks and flour, mixed and sifted with the baking powder. Add egg whites beaten until stiff, then melted chocolate and vanilla. Turn into buttered cake pans and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees 25 minutes. Frost with boiled icing.

"THAT'S her!" rumbled Big Un Beasley, raising a huge arm to point across the gay flutter of the dance floor.

Peewee Pruitt swung his one hundred and forty pounds upon the big arm and pulled it down. "Civilized people," he admonished, "don't point. And they don't say 'That's her'." Then he turned to look in the direction the big man had indicated. "My savage protegee desires the paleface medicine in big gulps!" he whistled softly as his eyes lighted upon a glorious blond.

"Cut the kidding and start calling signals for my play," the giant urged. Pruitt shook his head sadly. "Start calling signals for your play! Just like that! Big Boy, the play hasn't been doped yet that will carry a man across that goal line!"

Something in his tone caused Beasley to glance down quickly. "Has she thrown you for a loss, too?" he asked. "Every Romeo in school has tried to rush her," Pruitt responded lightly. But his dissimulation did not deceive the big fellow.

"If she's your girl, that lets me out," he stated decisively. "She's not wearing my brand, as you would say," Pruitt answered. "She's what you would call a maverick—there for anybody who can rope her. All she has ever given me is permission to hope."

Beasley shook his head. "There'd be no chance for a man like me, against you, anyhow."

Pruitt dropped his air of mockery. "Big Un, that won't go between us. I'm going to call your play tonight and give you an even break. Then let the best man win. That girl has seen hundreds of men like me. And there's only one man in the world like you. Your play is to be yourself and not try to imitate."

The David and Goliath act had been introduced at State university a half dozen months before when Pruitt had crouched between the legs of the big center who had handed the ball back to him and ploved ahead, with the little quarterback following between the protecting legs.

A month later Beasley had marveled, "You certainly can run interference on this math stuff."

"Concentration is the secret," the little man had snapped. "Jam your nose back into the book, and keep it there." Examinations, which would determine eligibility for the basketball team, were due the following day.

Beasley's father had gone West when land was just something between a man and where he wanted to go. When Beasley came to State he could read a cattle brand a half mile away better than he could read math symbols under his nose.

Pruitt was from a long line of lawyers who spared enough time from acquiring culture to garner their share of the coin of the realm.

Their act drew more applause when the big man tipped the basketball to the little one, who dribbled it in dazzling circles until the other was in position for him to pass for a score.

Beasley was on hand to catch Pruitt when he staggered after breaking the tape in the hundred-yard dash and the little fellow lugged the hammer and the big shot to the ring for the giant.

By now the students generally referred to them collectively as David and Goliath. But a few of the more discerning ones had changed to David and Jonathan.

Then the two three-letter men were ready to break training.

"It's time you were getting civilized, you woolly son of the West," Pruitt had declared. "Have a dress suit ready for the hop tomorrow night, and I'll break you for society."

The mentor decided the following evening that Beasley's first course of introduction should be to leave him on his own with a group of girls to whom he had been introduced. But it was not long before the big man came seeking the little one to declare, "Half-pint, I've found the girl who makes all of this fuss worth while. Come on. I'll show her to you. I want an introduction."

That had led up to the conversation which carried the two to the coat room. "Stand still," Pruitt ordered, while he pulled Beasley's tie around to the front. There were sundry adjustments before the final survey and he murmured, "Well, that's the best I can do. We'll go find her. And, remember, after the introduction it's every man for himself."

"I wouldn't do it if it were any girl except that one," the giant apologized. "Can't we still be friends?"

"Sure," snapped Pruitt. "Damon and Pythias were—in the book. It's a pretty story. Better read it."

Pruitt sought the largest group in the big hall and dragged Beasley to its center. He performed the introduction gracefully and added, "My best friend, and the finest fellow who ever came to State." Then he turned to leave.

He was halfway across the room when he was roughly seized from behind. Beasley wrapped his left arm about the little fellow and jerked him about. As Pruitt looked up into the grim face above him, the giant growled, "You fumbled with your damn politeness." He held Pruitt powerless, while his long huge arm came up to point openly and defiantly at a girl with a shock of dark curls above saucy eyes. "That's her!" he said again.

Three Old Cities Recall

Crimea's Ancient History

Three ancient cities lie near the Crimean shore of the Black sea. Until recently they were seldom visited by travelers abroad, observes a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer. The three cities represent distinct eras in the life of the little-known peninsula of Crimea. One remembers it largely for Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade" at the battle of Balaclava, commemorated by extensive cemeteries in the vicinity of that coastal town.

Khersones, founded by the Greeks, Chufut-Kaleh, the "Dead City," and the once palatial capital of the Tatar Khanate, Bakhchissarai, are ruins of absorbing interest.

Khersones is only several miles from Sevastopol, a land-locked harbor reminiscent of some Mediterranean shore city, red tiled and white-walled dwellings rising on terraces from the sea. A large part of the city has sunk into the sea.

Over the mountains towards the southern shore lies Bakhchissarai. It is a Tatar word signifying "Palace of the gardens." It is situated in a deep valley. Here the Crimean Tatars obeyed the law of their Khans and worshipped in numerous mosques.

Bullet-Proof Glass

Bullet-proof or shatter-proof glass is made from two sheets of plate glass with a transparent plastic material such as pyralin or cellulose between. The layers are cemented together and heat and pressure are applied to every part. The Britannica cyclopedia gives a description of this laminated glass and mentions that it is retardant but not proof against rifle and revolver shots. An article on glass in "Chemistry in Industry" mentions re-enforced glass, made by working wire screening between two layers of molten glass, or by fastening several layers of plate glass together with some plastic or gummy cement under pressure. This authority states that one can stand in perfect safety behind a plate an inch thick and let some one fire a .45 caliber steel-nosed bullet at the plate, while a 2-inch plate withstands a 30-30 machine-gun bullet.

Pressed Wood

Pressed wood, especially the tempered grade, has almost unlimited uses in home improvement and decoration. One woman used it effectively to replace the bottom of a piano bench that had fallen out long ago; and now the music is no longer scattered in window sills and on chairs. This same material was used to cover the unsightly top of a general utility table. Made entirely of wood and being warp-proof and moisture-resistant, pressed wood is sturdy; it yields easily to the saw and does not chip or crack under pressure of nails or screws.

Stringtown Pharmacy, which has just been opened at Florence, will be a great convenience to the people of this county. Most everything that is usually handled in a first-class pharmacy can be found with courteous people to wait on you. When in Florence give them a call, or on your way to the city stop—you will be more than pleased.

Earth Is Not Finished

Like Sculptor's Model

The earth is not "finished," in the sense that a sculptor would apply the word to a statue of his, asserts a writer in the New York Times. The force that began to shape the earth when it was but a liquid ball are still at work, although they are not as violent now as they were then. It is as normal for the earth to shake as it is for clouds to sweep across the sky.

The process of faulting, which means the redistribution of the earth's materials in an effort to establish equilibrium, is not likely to end for many million years. And when it does the earth will be "finished" in the slang sense of the term. It will be a mere cinder drifting in space around the sun, with no heaving oceans, no green trees, no life. When stability comes man will be extinct.

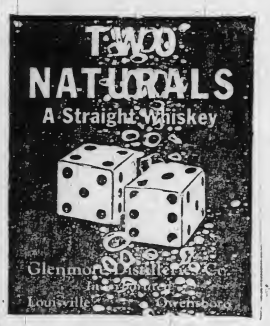

To a seismologist earthquakes reveal the internal structure of the earth. They are somewhat like X-rays that make the bones stand out on a photograph of the chest. The records reveal the character of the waves that course through the trembling earth plainly enough. They are highly complex—these earthquake waves. They move up and down like waves in the ocean, crosswise like those in a fluttering flag, back and forth like sound waves.

THE GARDEN

THE WINTER VEGETABLE STORE VI

(By John S. Gardner, Ky. College of Agriculture)

In the past few weeks have been discussed measures for all-winter storage of those vegetables that may be so stored. Today, emergency methods for saving for a time those crops which, because of their nature, cannot be stored for long periods, will be covered. They are tomatoes, peppers, the melons, Chinese cabbage, beans and celery.

At frost time, every year, finds many gardeners with late tomato plants heavily laden with fruit that has reached good size, but which is still green, or perhaps at the "white" stage. The obvious thing to do is to pick whatever tomatoes are large enough to use and spread them out on window-sills to ripen, but this is messy. A better way is to use the hot-bed or the cold-frame, usually unoccupied at this season, spreading a layer of straw over the bottom, then the tomatoes, no more than three deep, and then loose straw, covering the whole with the sash. Following either of these methods, the fruit, particularly the larger specimens, will take on the color of ripeness but lacking in quality and flavor.

A way to save tomatoes and really ripen them, is to pull the entire plants, and hang them to ceiling rafters in the house cellar, or to studding in the farm buildings. The sap of the plants will be drawn into the fruits which will ripen quite satisfactorily with a minimum of meanness and with much of the fresh-tomato flavor retained.

Peppers are another crop that presents the same kind of difficulty, their period of heaviest bearing coming just as frost threatens. A "warm" crop, even a mild frost will destroy them. Any of the methods just enumerated for tomatoes will serve to keep peppers, but inasmuch as peppers need not be "ripe," but may be utilized still green, the problem is simplified to the extent that only wilting or freezing need be guarded against. Peppers may be kept usable merely by putting them in baskets or boxes in a cellar or other room where the atmosphere is not excessively dry and where temperature below freezing does not occur. If they lose turgidity it may be restored by wrapping them in damp clothes, or immersing them in water.

The melons, too, are warm crops, injured by even light frosts. While it is true that melons fully ripened on living vines are the best, they can be ripened quite satisfactorily off the vine, by plunging them in boxes of sand or fine sawdust, observing the precaution that they do not freeze. Watermelons will ripen, almost whatever their size, but cantaloupes must have reached their "half-slip" stage, recognized by half of the stem breaking clean and leaving a scar when the stem is snapped. Another gauge is the netting; the veins should be full. The last planting of beans is sometimes caught by frost, and although the vines may be stripped and the beans brought under cover, they must be promptly used. This is not always desirable or even convenient. Beans may be saved at least to the extent of lengthening their using by putting the pulled vines in circular piles, built in layers, the tips toward the center of the piles. Turgidity is preserved by the beans drawing the sap of the plants, and even growth may take place.

Chinese cabbage may be stored in the same manner in which ordinary cabbage is kept, but only for a short time. A good way to lengthen the fresh Chinese cabbage season is to re-set the plants carefully lifted with all the roots, in boxes of earth, or into the earth in cellar floor direct, and watering copiously, but only the roots. If the cellar is dark or almost so, a lovely bleached product will result. The same method may be followed in storing celery, particularly of the short-season varieties, which keep poorly in "trenches," the orthodox manner of storing.

CENTERVIEW

There will be a fish fry in the grove at Big Bone Baptist church all day Thursday Sept. 5th. Everybody invited to come and enjoy the day with us. We urge you to attend and we know you will come again.

Quite a number from here attended the funeral services of Miss Rebecca Taylor at Richmond Friday, August 16th. She was one of our best members at Big Bone for 65 years, always loyal and faithful, and will be greatly missed by those who knew and loved her. We extend our deepest sympathy to the sorrowing sisters and brother.

A number from this locality are planning to attend the 4-H Fair at Harvest Home Saturday, which we know will be enjoyed by all.

B. Y. P. U. Social will be held at the home of Jim Bob Wilson Saturday evening, August 24. All members urged to attend.

We are sorry to hear of the serious illness of Mrs. Jane Stephens and Mrs. John Feldhaus at this writing.

Geo. Horton and wife were the Sunday guests of Bernard McNeely and family.

Harold Johnson, of Covington, spent a few days with Joe Aylor and family, last week.

Nile River Floated the

First Boat Built by Man

The Nile river in Egypt is supposed to have floated the first boat ever built, according to a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. There, 3,000 years before Christ, a man learning to swim sat on a floating log and paddled about with his hands. The log was the first ship. Later, perhaps a century or more, two logs were lashed together, making the first raft. From such beginnings have come our great ocean greghounds.

Naturally the first navigators knew nothing of sails for their boats. In fact, all the boats of ancient days were nothing but huge rowboats, where tiers of men were placed, one above the other, with long-handled oars. Even the Phoenicians' boats, which are spoken of in the Bible, depended on man power to move over the water.

These first ships were thought to be living gods. Instead of building a plain bow as we do today on our ships, the first mariners built a large head upon a bow, supposed to protect the boat and the sailors' lives. Later this head, encased in gold or bronze, was used as a battering ram to puncture other ships. The stern of the boat was a huge tail, which curved over the back decks. No doubt when the ship was seen in the distance it did look like a mammoth animal crawling along with its rows of oars for legs and the big curved tail and head standing high above the rest of the ship.

Believing that unless the ship had eyes it would become lost, the ancients also painted eyes on each side of the bow. And, strange as it may seem, we still have eyes on our ships in the form of hawse holes for the anchor cables.

Hydrocyanic Gas Is Used to Suffocate Murderers

Hydrocyanic acid is the gas which has been adopted by some of the western states for killing condemned criminals, a single inhalation of it having the same lethal effect as the high voltage current used in electrocutions, relates a scientist in the New York Herald-Tribune. Hydrogen sulphide is the well-known "rotten egg" gas that is commonly considered more unpleasant than deadly, but its power to produce fatal results is almost the same as that of hydrocyanic acid.

The relative powers of the various gases and vapors to produce death in a short time, together with the percentage by volume in the air required to produce this effect on animals, are listed as: 1—hydrogen sulphide .06 to .3 per cent; 2—hydrocyanic acid, .048 per cent; 3—nitrogen oxide, .07 per cent; 4—sulphur dioxide, .2 per cent; 5—carbon monoxide, .5 to .75 per cent; 6—ammonia, .5 to 1.0 per cent; 7—gasoline, .24 per cent; 8—carbon dioxide, 12 to 30 per cent.

Slavery in Senegal

Once the streets of Senegal, now a coastal colony of French West Africa, were witness to a strange and horrible traffic, the slave trade. While the slave trade was in progress, local tribal chieftains foraged the interior for fresh victims. Entire villages were captured, their inhabitants marched to the coast to be bartered for beads, hatchets, bright clothes with brass buttons. When the practice was outlawed by the world, peace came to the land (about the size of South Dakota) and its 1,400,000 mostly Mohammedan population. Instead of human flesh, chiefs now deal in peanuts, which the sandy soil grows well, cotton, rice and copra. St. Louis is the capital; Dakar, the largest port and farthest westerly tip of the "Dark Continent," is where the French governor general makes his headquarters.—Washington Post.

The Pituitary Gland

At the floor of the brain lies a gland called the pituitary body. It is divided into three parts—the anterior lobe, the posterior lobe and the pars intermedia, which as its name indicates, lies between. Somebody has called the pituitary the "master gland." It is a good name, for the pituitary seems to control all the other glands in the body. One of its many important functions is to regulate growth. If you are a giant you may have an overactive pituitary. If you are a dwarf you may have one that is inactive or sluggish. At least this is the convenient explanation generally accepted, though experts contend that there is much more to growth-control than this.—New York Herald-Tribune.

Chinese Collection Scheme

With characteristic ingenuity, the Chinese long ago evolved a pleasant little way of collecting a debt when the borrower fails to pay. The lender moved, bag and baggage, into the borrower's home and remained there until the borrower was reduced to beggary by the added expense, or a more fortunate relative took over the debt. And while he entertained his lender-guest, the borrower was forced to go about with a disgraceful yoke about his neck.

Time Element in Murder Cases

Up to a short time ago, nearly all states followed the old common law that a person cannot be indicted and tried for murder if the victim lives for "a year and a day" after the assault. Today, however, many states have penal laws which do not include such a time element. Recently a man was convicted of murder in the state of New York although the victim lived for four years after being shot.—Collier's Weekly.

Horseshoes for Luck

By CLIFF WALTERS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

"THIS entire venture," spluttered old Rodney Cassells fidgeting in the rear seat of the open car, "is the acme of asinine! I repeat: It's infinitely worse than looking for the needle in the haystack."

"Repeat is right," called his pretty blond offspring, bearing down on the accelerator. "We've driven a hundred miles this morning, Dad; and you repeat the needle episode every ten—so figure it out."

"Jean!" shrieked Aunt Martha who shared the rear seat with her gray-haired brother. "Will you please stop careening around these curves at such a giddy gait?" Then, in a more supplicatory tone: "Oh, why—why did they have to build automobile roads in these Rocky mountains when they should have been left to the billy goats and—and jackasses!"

"Hmp!" Rodney Cassells grunted. "The jackasses are still roaming them." The application of brakes, so sudden that the two passengers in the rear seat were tipped forward, cut short any further parental tirade.

"Pardon, folks," the driver explained, hopping out of the car, "but I just saw another horseshoe back there."

"Another horseshoe!" echoed the flabbergasted father. "She nearly hurls us headlong from the car so she can pick up another horseshoe?"

"Here it is." The sprightly Jean came running back with her prize. "Now don't look like that, Dad. You know I'll need all the luck I can get if I'm ever to find Clell."

"Horseshoes!" the disconsolate parent stormed. "There's enough of them in this car to start a blacksmith shop. Jean, I'm sick of this wild goose chase. I'm telling you again—"

"Won't you let up on that, Dad?" his daughter pleaded. "As I've so often reminded you, Clell wouldn't have come West in the first place if you hadn't played the big bad wolf and called him a fortune hunter, among other things. Can I help it if he's the only lad I've ever loved? . . . No! Furthermore, I didn't drag you and Aunt Martha along. You wouldn't hear of my coming alone."

"Indeed not!" Aunt Martha contributed. "Hmp! A girl your age chasing around over the country alone, looking for a man."

"She wouldn't have to if the young scamp loved her as much as she thinks he does," Mr. Cassells argued loudly. "He wouldn't let my few harsh words—"

"I feel no embarrassment whatever," Jean countered. "Beverly made a long trek to find her Gabriel, and she went down among the Immortals."

Jean drove serenely on until, meeting a procession of honking cars descending a steep side road on to the main highway, she swerved sharply to avoid hitting the lead car.

"Pooh!" roared old Rodney Cassells brandishing his cane.

"Gangway for the bride and groom from the Clell Prospect!" shouted a hilarious youth in the rear car.

"Clell?" Jean's voice broke on a whisper. "Hurray for the boss and his bride!" came the words of the lad in the rapidly vanishing rear car.

"Oh!" said Jean. "Oh!" It was the hiss of escaping air that roused her. She stepped out of the car, saw that she had skidded upon a rusty horseshoe.

"Another puncture!" groaned her father. Then he spied the horseshoe. "Hah! I guess this blasts the horseshoe theory! A thirty dollar tire all gored to—and the spare still deflated from that puncture yesterday! Horseshoes . . . bah! Well, what now?"

Jean looked up the short steep road which the cars of the bridal procession had just descended. Those building up there on the hill must be the Clell Prospects. Tears welled to her eyes as she gazed:

"I'll walk up there and see if I can't get someone to fix our tire, Dad. And to think that Clell—damn the horseshoe!" She jerked the rusty article from the deflated casing, hurried it away and started plodding up the hill, arriving at the group of buildings huddled on the edge of a placer claim. Jean dabbed the tears from her eyes and knocked on the door of the first house she came to. Footsteps sounded within. Presently a tall young man, carrying an armful of shirts, opened the door. He took one look at his visitor and dropped the shirts.

"Jean!"

"Clell—Clell!" Jean clutched the door jamb weakly. That is, until the young man's strong arms swept around her waist.

"Gosh!" she murmured when at last she gained articulation. "I thought you were racing down the mountain in that bridal car, fellow! They said—one of the men—that the boss of the Clell Prospect—"

"My partner, Andy Jackson, got married!" Clell Sherwood hastily explained. "Yours truly was just packing his grip, getting ready to go back East—to get you!"

"Oh!" said Jean. "Oh . . . Clell! If it hadn't been for that old horseshoe . . ." Suddenly she broke from his arms and raced back toward the edge of the hill.

"Horseshoe?" inquired the startled young man as he raced after her. "What on earth—"

But Jean, trembling little hands cupped megaphone-like to her mouth, was calling down to the car below:

"Find that horseshoe, Dad! Find that horseshoe!"

THE FARM AND HOME (Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station)

Nature prevented soil washing or erosion by covering the land with a growth of vegetation. Man has not been able to improve upon this system. Cover crops still offer the best solution to the problem of controlling erosion on land left bare when the crop season is over.

A statement issued by J. B. Hutson, director of the AAA division of tobacco, sugar, rice and peanuts, says food costs are 14 per cent below the general level of living costs, and still the best bargain in living with the exception of rent.

That alfalfa depletes fertility is indicated by top-dressing tests at the Western Kentucky Experiment Substation. Top dressing with superphosphate increased the yield by 6,482 pounds in three years, and adding potash to the phosphate, jumped the yield still more.

Excessive use of hot water tends to destroy the fiber in tooth brushes. They should never be boiled. Soaking in a strong solution of cold salt water for two or three hours will help make the bristles flexible and pliable.

The revival of work horse and mule breeding is said to be the greatest in 10 years, with an estimated production of 900,000 foals this year. Even this is 200,000 less than the yearly death-rate of farm work stock.

In a program to remove surplus dairy products from the market and also to provide food for relief purposes, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has begun the purchase of more than 8,000,000 pounds of butter, cheese and dried skim milk.

Several hundred ewes were purchased by Union county farmers through an Evansville, Ind., livestock agency.

Members of the Boyd county dairy committee are selecting fifty high-grade animals for demonstration purposes.

Thomas S. Rhea of Russellville, who was victorious at the first State-wide primary August 3, Friday proposed to A. B. Chandler, his opponent, in the run-off primary, that all political quarrelling be banned during the remaining weeks of the campaign by mutual agreement of the two candidates. Mr. Rhea pointed out that "much can be gained or a great deal lost if bitterness shall be left unbridled and continued through the run-off primary to be held Saturday, Sept. 7," and surmises that such a plan will "meet with the enthusiastic approval of voters who have become sickened and disgusted with one needlessly bitter campaign." Mr. Rhea reminded Mr. Chandler of the "just intent" of the double primary plan in providing an opportunity for a nomination by "a clear majority of the voters" and likewise that through the means of a run-off primary that Mr. Chandler "is indebted to me, after having been defeated to face the Democratic voters of Kentucky once more in the effort to prove himself worthy of the nomination for Governor."

Text of Mr. Rhea's Statement
"First of all I want to thank the Democratic voters of Kentucky for the confidence they have shown in my candidacy by according to me a record-breaking primary vote of approximately 200,000. It is not true, as Mr. Chandler alleges, that his vote is the largest ever received by a primary candidate. My total vote, when the count is completed, will be approximately 20,000 greater than Mr. Chandler's total vote."

"This support has been given me in spite of a campaign of vilification, slander and abuse conducted by Mr. Chandler and his principal mudslinger, Ben Johnson. We have succeeded in defeating these would-be party-workers in this first fight and we will defeat them again, but far more impressively, in the run-off primary, on Saturday, Sept. 7."

"Even in defeat, it would seem Mr. Chandler is unable to resist his mudslinging impulses. It would be far more becoming, it occurs to me, for Mr. Chandler to accept gracefully the opportunity presented to him by the run-off primary and undertake to evaluate at its true worth the double primary plan. That plan presents a truly democratic method of selecting the party's nominee for Governor in providing that such nominee shall receive a clear majority of all the votes cast."

"Every fair-minded voter in Kentucky, I believe, will appreciate the just intent of the new law and on September 7 will demonstrate conclusively for Mr. Chandler's benefit that they approve of it. It is scarcely necessary for me to remind Mr. Chandler that through my efforts (according to his own statements) he is indebted to me for a second opportunity, after having been defeated, to face the Democratic voters of Kentucky once more in the effort to prove himself worthy of the nomination for Governor."

"It is regrettable that the recent primary engendered so much of bitterness but I believe it should have a wholesome sobering effect in pointing an obvious lesson—that much can be gained or a great deal lost if such bitterness shall be left unbridled and continued through the run-off primary to be held Saturday, September 7."

"With this thought in mind I propose to Mr. Chandler, my opponent in the run-off primary, that each of us shall, during the remaining weeks of the campaign, mutually pledge ourselves to end all political discussion and to spend the time formulating a constructive, forward-looking programme for the future upbuilding of our Commonwealth. I propose that we pledge ourselves further to do our utmost to allay the fires of political passion to the end that party success may be endangered in November and that Kentucky's indorsement of our matchless President may not be periled in 1936.

"I am moved to make this suggestion because of my belief that the Democratic voters of our State are sufficiently apprised concerning Mr. Chandler's ideas about administering the State's affairs, and likewise my own program in this matter, to enable such voters to ballot intelligently at the run-off primary without further suggestion from either my opponent or myself."

"Such a plan, I confidently believe, would meet with the enthusiastic approval of voters who have become sickened and disgusted with one needlessly bitter campaign. A repetition of that contest would in no way serve the best interests of our people or the advancement of which our State is capable under proper leadership."

"Finally, let me say that it has been my observation that any man who insistently demands a quarrel, sooner or later, is always accommodated. I promise Mr. Chandler that if he persists in his quarrel he will be no exception to this thoroughly understood rule."

Louisville, Ky., August 20.—Works Progress Administration projects in both the Danville and the Madisonville Districts will get under way during the current week Geo. H. Goodman, administrator, announced today. Mr. Goodman expressed hope that projects would be started in every county in the state at a very early date and with a minimum loss of time.

The change from Kentucky Emergency Relief Administration to Works Progress Administration, Mr. Goodman pointed out, has involved considerable unavoidable delay but the various "kinks" attendant to the change has about been ironed out. Future delay, if any, Mr. Goodman felt would come from failure of various units to file their projects with dispatch.

"We are going to attempt by November 1," Mr. Goodman said, "to have every workable man in Kentucky on a constructive job at a fair rate of pay. Whether we do this or not depends, in a manner, on the various county and city officials throughout the state whose business it is to submit to us projects acceptable to Washington. If they are lax and fail to submit projects and to meet the necessary requirements it will be no fault of the Works Progress Administration."

"Pauper counties and communities should go ahead and submit projects. No such locality will be penalized because we propose to pay the entire cost in such instances. But counties and municipalities able to assume a part of project costs will be expected to do so. The ability of any community to pay is decided by sworn financial statements. There is no guesswork about it."

"It is my belief," Mr. Goodman continued, "that there will be no more relief in Kentucky after November 1. After that time those communities that have failed to provide sufficient projects to care for their workables may be in an embarrassing position. There will be nothing we can do about it because Washington will have stopped the 'dole' we now have."

"Now is the time for officials of the various communities to take stock of the situation and act accordingly. I would suggest, if asked, that they ascertain the number of relief workable in their localities and set about to furnish projects on that basis. By so doing they certainly will supply a backlog for the future in more than one way that is obvious."

LET'S ALL GO TO KENTUCKY'S GREATEST SHOW

Unquestionably the Kentucky State Fair is Kentucky's greatest show of interest to all Kentuckians. More particularly is it for the farmer, the stockman, the horse fancier and the women of the state. The Horse Show, is the acknowledged world's greatest array of blooded horse flesh ever gotten together. Same may be said of the show of colts known as the American Saddle Horse and Breeders Futurity event.

In every way the State Fair this year will be so fine a show for everyone that all who can possibly do so should attend. There is no place in all the world where so many Kentuckians can get together for annually meeting and greeting their old friends and making new ones.

Come, and let's all have a good, big time together. It's your Fair—Be There!

Garth K. Ferguson, Secretary, KENTUCKY STATE FAIR, In Louisville, September 9-14.

"It Was Somebody's Birthday"

By JAMES BOSTON

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

JOSEPH WHITING was having a nervous breakdown. It was quite simple, really. Nerves like guitar strings, a dull "thump-thump" where his heart should be—and then, hallucinations!

That had decided the matter. Cold sweats and twanging nerves were one thing—seeing things that didn't, and shouldn't exist, was another.

So Joseph Whiting was setting out for a peaceful sojourn in the wilds of the Canadian Rockies. His doctor had advised sternly that it was "the only thing"—and Joseph Whiting was beginning to feel that "the only thing" wasn't such a bad thing, after all.

He almost felt himself relaxing as he reclined luxuriously in the comfortable lobby of one of Toronto's finest family hotels. The trip from New York seemed really to have rested him.

Languidly he watched the people passing in and out of the revolving front door. He observed with awakening interest the graceful progress of a young girl who swung in gaily with her escort, and watched her until she passed into the sumptuous banquet hall at the other end of the lobby. He noted with a feeling of pleasure and appreciation her tall, graceful figure, her vivacious smile and the delightful quality of her fresh, brunette beauty. He appraised her evening attire approvingly; the striking contrast of red spangled evening dress and red satin slippers against a black velvet evening wrap.

Other immaculately dressed couples entered and strolled into the banquet room; evidently there was a formal dinner scheduled for the evening.

Joseph Whiting turned his head back sleepily toward the revolving door, then started.

Another young girl was entering, chatting merrily with her male companion—a young girl, tall, delightfully brunette, and attired in a red spangled evening dress, red satin slippers and a black velvet evening wrap.

The victim of nerves and hallucinations stared wildly, fixedly, at the beautiful apparition until it disappeared into the banquet hall.

Grimly trying to keep his nerves under control, Joseph Whiting again turned his head toward the revolving door.

Two young girls were entering. They were tall, beautifully brunette—and garbed in red spangled evening dresses, red satin slippers and black velvet evening wraps. They were as alike in appearance as two peas, and identical with those other two young girls who had just passed into the banquet hall!

Joseph Whiting groaned—and collapsed.

An elderly gentleman in full evening dress was brought hurriedly from the banquet room. He asserted his professional authority by taking the bundle of nerves by the wrist. The rest was routine.

"There," he said finally, as he took off his glasses and surveyed his rueful patient, "how do you feel now?"

Joseph Whiting cast an apprehensive glance toward the revolving door then managed a sickly smile. "I guess I'm all right now, doctor," he murmured, embarrassed. "Thanks for fixing me up—"

Suddenly, Joseph Whiting stiffened and jerked erect. He gripped the arms of his chair and turned a wide-eyed stare full on the revolving door.

A young girl of tall, brunette loveliness was entering with her escort. She was attired in a becoming ensemble of—red spangled evening dress, red satin slippers and a black velvet evening wrap.

With a cry, the victim of "thump-thump" sprang to his feet and swooned over a smoking stand.

Resignedly the good doctor again opened his little black bag.

Some minutes later, Joseph Whiting ventured to open one eye, then the other. But what he saw caused him to close them with a groan.

Slowly he opened them again and gazed unbelievably at the five young girls grouped solicitously around his chair. He observed, with a sinking feeling, that they were attired in red spangled evening dresses, red satin slippers and black velvet evening wraps. He couldn't help noticing, too, that they were beautiful, tall and dark—and as maddeningly, unreasonably alike as five peas!

Joseph Whiting felt himself a wreck, and about to break up.

"You have quite a case of nerves," commented the good doctor. Then, as he observed his patient's fascinated gaze and its fair objects, the doctor paused.

"Perhaps you would like to meet the young ladies who helped to bring you to?" he suggested pleasantly. "May I present—Marie, Annette, Yvonne, Emilie and Cecile Dionne? I am Doctor Dafoe."

As the five charming "hallucinations" curtsied prettily and smiled at him, their lovely dark eyes soft with concern, Joseph Whiting, nervous wreck, felt something go "thump-thump" inside of him.

"I'm sorry you can't join us for the party," continued Doctor Dafoe sympathetically, as he steered his furiously "thumping" patient toward an elevator. "I'm sure the girls would be delighted to have you. I suppose you know," he concluded proudly, "that we're giving them a grand birthday party tonight—it's the Quintuplets' eighteenth birthday—!"

C. L. KIRKPATRICK

VICE-PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER OF GAS CO., PASSES AWAY—LONG PROMINENT IN INDIANA UTILITY FIELD.

Clarence L. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Citizens Gas Company and long a prominent figure in the utility field in Indianapolis and Indiana, died at his home 2942 Pennsylvania street, Death following an illness of a year.

Funeral services were held at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon in the Flanner and Buchanan mortuary. Mr. Kirkpatrick was born May 6, 1865, in Burlington, Ky., the son of Augustus and John Kirkpatrick. His father was a carpenter and contractor in this seat of Boone county, one of the northernmost counties of Kentucky along the Ohio river, near the Indiana and Ohio state boundaries.

Mr. Kirkpatrick lived in Burlington until he was about 19 years old. Because there were no public or rural schools, his parents co-operated with other residents of the community to "importing" teachers to instruct their children. The schooling was conducted only at intervals because often the condition of the roads made it impossible for the schoolmaster to reach his pupils.

He obtained employment with the Monon railroad as a telegraph operator. His first position with the Monon was at a telegraph station at Roselawn in northwest Indiana. He remained there for a while and then was transferred to a similar position at Broad Ripple.

Associated With Store While residing at Broad Ripple Mr. Kirkpatrick and a group of other young men became interested in a lumber yard and a general store. Mr. Kirkpatrick was a member of the firm about a year.

Mr. Kirkpatrick had been associated in the utility business approximately thirty-five years and was generally recognized as one of the ablest public utility men in the United States. In 1900 he was employed by the Indiana Trust Co. of Indianapolis, which was receiver for the East Chicago and Indiana Electric Light Company, to take over and manage that utility. After managing this utility more than a year, he reported a gain of some $17,000 profit in the plant's operation.

It was while Mr. Kirkpatrick was in this position that Clarence H. Geist, of Philadelphia, Pa., bought the Indiana Harbor Water Co., and named him vice president and general manager.

Studies Local Utility In January, 1913, Mr. Geist acquired the Indianapolis Water Co., and brought Mr. Kirkpatrick to Indianapolis as its vice president and general manager. Prior to taking over this utility, Mr. Kirkpatrick made a comprehensive study of its past operation and possibilities for future development. It was upon his recommendation that Mr. Geist decided to buy the plant.

Mr. Kirkpatrick assumed his present position with the Citizens Gas Company July 1, 1923. During his business and social life in Indianapolis he had formed many friendships with leaders of the city and his employees. At all times he steadfastly refused to seek the limelight in any business or civic endeavor, but preferred to lend his counsel and support without receiving public recognition. He was interested in all civic and religious movements of the city.

Two sons and a daughter by a former marriage also survive. They are Purcell F. Kirkpatrick and Mrs. Helen A. Klemperer, both of East Chicago, and Bennett R. Kirkpatrick of Indianapolis. A brother, Calvert Kirkpatrick, lives in Ludlow, Ky.—Indianapolis Star.

The Indianapolis Star has this to say in an editorial, of Mr. Kirkpatrick:

A leader of national prestige in the public utility field has been lost in the death of Clarence L. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Citizens Gas Company, who succumbed at his home here after an extended illness. Many Indianapolis citizens may not have appreciated Mr. Kirkpatrick's unusual abilities as director of utility projects because he studiously avoided public attention. Only the business and civic leaders with whom he came in contact and a wide circle of personal friends appraised adequately his contribution to the organizations he represented and to the general welfare of the community.

Mr. Kirkpatrick was by no means reticent. He was a charming gentleman and a genial companion, but he never relished a place in the limelight. He was interested in civic and religious movements and willingly devoted his time and judgment to worthy efforts for the betterment of human welfare. He belonged to a number of clubs and fraternal organizations and took delight in the company of friends. The general public heard little of him, however, beyond the inevitable news values created by his prominence in local utility management.

Industry and perseverance enabled Mr. Kirkpatrick to overcome educational handicaps of youth, when his somewhat isolated Kentucky home made regular schooling difficult and uncertain. He early had decided to become a physician, but did not complete his studies at a Cincinnati medical college. Employment as a telegraph operator, interests in a lumber yard and general store at Broad Ripple, then a remote Indianapolis suburb, and other activities preceded his entry in the field which won such prominence.

Assignment to represent the Indiana Company, receiver for an East Chicago electric property, gave Mr. Kirkpatrick an opportunity to display his peculiar fitness for utility management. His record in rehabilitating the company attracted the attention of Clarence H. Geist, Philadelphia utility operator, who made Mr. Kirkpatrick vice-president and general manager of the Indiana Harbor Water Company. In 1913 he came to Indianapolis to occupy a similar position with the Indianapolis Water Company. He assumed his present position with Citizens Gas in July, 1923. Mr. Kirkpatrick's career with utility projects covered a period of thirty-five years, during which his reputation throughout the United States rose steadily. His passing is a civic loss, as well as a personal sorrow to many friends.

FARM LOANS

FARM MORTGAGE LOANS MADE THROUGH BOONE COUNTY NATIONAL FARM LOAN ARE NOW PAID IN CASH.

The proceeds of all farm mortgage loans made through the Boone County National Farm Loan Association and The Federal Land Bank of Louisville are now paid in cash instead of bonds as heretofore, reports A. B. Renaker, Association Secretary-Treasurer at Burlington. "This procedure has now been effective for several days," said Mr. Renaker, "and simplifies the handling of loans, particularly where made for the purpose of refinancing the debts of farmer borrowers."

For the past year and a half loans closed through the Federal Land Bank and the Land Bank Commissioner have been paid principally in bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. In refinancing debts the agreement of the creditors was requested in advance to accept bonds rather than cash. Certain items such as taxes and insurance and fractional amounts of debts meanwhile have been paid in cash. Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds are guaranteed by the Federal government both as to payment of principle and interest, and have met with a ready acceptance, with the result that now there will be no difficulty in selling them, so that the proceeds of their sale may be used in making Federal land bank and Land Bank Commissioner's loans in cash.

One of the principal reasons for using bonds in lieu of cash in the first place was to obtain a widespread distribution of these securities throughout the country and small towns as well as in cities. This has been done thru the nearly half a million loans that have been closed since the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation was organized. During most of this time Federal Mortgage Corporation bonds have sold above par. The most recent issue bearing but 2-3-4 per cent interest is quoted currently at around 101½, the 3 per cent issue at 102½ and the 3½ per cent bonds at 104.

National Farm Loan Associations throughout the state report keen interest among farmers in the new 4 per cent interest rate on all loans of The Federal Land Bank of Louisville through associations. Authorities explain that this low rate reflects the current price of money available for this purpose, and while there is no assurance as to how long loans will continue to be made at that low rate, all loans so closed will not bear a greater rate during the entire life of the contract, which may be as much as 33 years.

Dr. J. Northcutt, of Florence, purchased the Tying farm located on the Florence and Burlington pike, which was sold at auction Saturday by the Tri-County Realty Co.

BOOST GIVEN

STATE-WIDE BOOST GIVEN TO STATE FAIR—WHICH PROMISES TO BE BEST EVER HELD IN ITS HISTORY

Louisville, Ky., Special — The Kentucky State Fair was given perhaps the greatest boost of its thirty-three year's existence by more than 500 leading business men, of the city of Louisville, and scores of big breeders, farmers and others from out in the state, at a luncheon given the Fair officials by the Louisville Board of Trade of nineteen principal luncheon and civic organizations of this city at the Brown Hotel Friday, August 23rd. Numerous speakers, including Horace A. Taylor, acting Mayor of Louisville; Frank Rodenhever, of the Round-Table Clubs; William A. Stoll, President of the Board of Trade; Col. James T. Barney, Commanding Officer of Fort Knox, and D. D. Stewart, of Louisville; Commissioner of Agriculture, Eugene Flowers, pictured the State Fair as one of the greatest educational factors in the state, and the stimulus to more successful agricultural, breeding and industrial activities throughout the state. Mr. Stewart, held that the State Fair's influence does not stop in the State, but was actually nation-wide and that the State Fair should not be considered as a making institution for the State, but is expected of a commercial concern, but its an investment beyond measure, in dollars for the people of particularly rural Kentucky, and joined with all the other speakers in urging the greatest attendance this year in the institution's history.

LOSS TO NATION

PASSING OF HUMORIST SEVERE LOSS TO NATION. ROSE FROM AN OBSCURE COWBOY TO ONE OF NATION'S LEADING ENTERTAINERS

The tragic death of Will Rogers removes from American life a beloved figure who has brought much pleasure and entertainment to the world.

His great charm with his homespun philosophy—his rugged Americanism—which so impressed the public that his motion pictures were in demand and his box-office appeal was tremendous.

Friends of Presidents, statesmen, and the man-in-the-street, Mr. Rogers' ready wit and ability to charm won him a secure place in the affections of the Nation, a place seldom achieved by an artist of stage and screen. He presented to the public true picture of rugged Americanism at its best; his homely humor, barbed at times but always innocuous, was appreciated and enjoyed by a great public. His work before the footlights and motion picture camera was of a constructive and entertaining order.

Always plain-spoken and unassuming, he rose from an obscure cowboy to one of the Nation's leading entertainers, political commentators, and press syndicators. His tragic passing at the very peak of his popularity removes from our life a kindly, helpful, plain and sagacious friend who seemed in his every gesture to typify the rugged spirit of honest and unassuming endeavor that is essentially American.

HOPEFUL LADIES AID

The Ladies of Hopeful church met Tuesday for another day of work and business. Several members present, together with visitors, some of whom had visited once before with the members for that nice chicken dinner and home made pies, cooked in "Old Kentucky style" as they call it. Hauser, Mrs. A. S. Wernit, Miss Kinney, Mr. and Mrs. P. Maran, of Hollywood, Cal. All enjoyed the day, and an invitation given by the ladies for the out of town guests to call again. Hazel Lucas, Publicity Secy.

Mr. John Holbrook returned to Galena, Illinois, after a week's visit with his family in Burlington. Mr. Holbrook is the mechanic on the Government Dredge Boat, the "C. B. Harris."

BETTER TOBACCO IS BEING GROWN IN INDIA

That tobacco grown in India may eventually offer considerable competition to American tobacco in the British market is indicated in a report to the Louisville district office of the Department of Commerce. The quality of Virginia leaf being produced in Southern India is reported steadily improving. While this is not a serious factor at the present time, a fair quantity of this Indian tobacco is being shipped to England for blending and it is reported to be proving increasingly satisfactory. The United Kingdom is one of the two most important foreign outlets for American leaf tobacco. During the past six years annual leaf tobacco shipments from the United States to the British market have averaged approximately 175 million pounds.

JULY RURAL RETAIL SALES ABOVE LAST YEAR

Sales of general merchandise in small towns and rural areas for July decreased about 20½ per cent in dollar volume from June or somewhat more than the usual decline at this season of the year, according to preliminary estimates received by the Louisville district office of the Commerce Department. Sales for July were, however, about 28½ per cent higher than for July, 1934, and were 36 per cent above 1933.

LISTON HEMPHILL, OF TAYLORSPOUR, REPRESENTS ASSOCIATION IN NORTHERN KY.

Mr. C. Liston Hemphill, living at Constance, Kentucky, represented the Northern Kentucky Production Credit Association in an all day conference of secretary-treasurers, officers and directors of the eight central and eastern Kentucky associations at Lexington on August 23. Mr. Hemphill is a director in this farmers' credit association at Williamstown, representing the county of Boone. Present were the executives and directors of the Production Credit Associations of Danville, Flemingsburg, the Falls City Association of Louisville, the Nolin Association at Elizabethtown, the Big Sandy Association at Paintsville, the Northern Kentucky Association at Williamstown, the Cumberland Association at London and the Central Kentucky Association at Lexington. W. F. Gahn, President, and J. Walter Brown, Association Supervisor for Kentucky, represented the Production Credit Corporation of Louisville in the meeting and led the discussion as to policies and methods of procedure in the further development of these cooperative credit organizations which have been built up under the Farm Credit Administration during the past two years.

"Mr. Gahn stated that the forty-four production credit associations of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee, which are under the supervision of the Production Credit Corporation of Louisville, have closed over a million dollars more loans so far this year to the farmers of that territory than during the entire loaning period of 1934," said Mr. Hemphill. The year's total for the district is expected to be more than double last year's loans. The total loans made in the district since organization early in 1934 now exceed eight and one-half millions of dollars.

Mr. Hemphill reports that up to August 1 the Northern Kentucky Production Credit Association has made 172 loans for $41,027.97, and that it is fully prepared to satisfy the credit needs of farmers of this territory in the summer and fall livestock purchases and other items of farm operations. ## EDUCATION VITAL PART OF AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

It has been repeatedly stated that the structure of American democracy rests on four cornerstones—freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of the press and freedom of education. It has been emphasized time and again that to maintain our democracy, not one of these stones may be removed. The first three were placed in the first Amendment to the federal constitutional structure, and the fourth appears in the structure of the organic law and statutes of all the states and in the laws of the various other governments under the federal Constitution.

The fourth cornerstone—freedom of education—was a rough Ashlar, quarried and brought to its present fitness by the hewing of 300 years of American history. The best work was done during the last 100 years, the period in which the cutting and shaping was no longer performed under sectarian directors. Kept free from such influences, the finest work—the polishing of all surfaces—is yet to be done in this cornerstone of our democracy.

Although the last to go into our democratic structure, education is the most important; for, without it, a dead weight of ignorance, intolerance, and prejudice will chip and mar the beauty and weaken the strength of the other three foundation stones of our political institutions.

"The marks of an educated man are, that he keeps his mind open on every question until all of the evidence is in. The second mark is he always begins by learning the fundamentals; that is, he begins at the bottom of a subject and works his way up instead of beginning, as the average persons want to do, at the top and slides down.

"The third mark of an educated man in this time is, he knows when not to think, and when to get a wiser man to do his thinking for him. Fourth, he never laughs at new ideas. Fifth, he learns that he is never too old to learn.

Approximately 160 students were graduated from the University of Kentucky at Summer Session commencement exercises which were held Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock in Memorial Hall on the University campus. This is the annual commencement held for students who complete their requirements for degrees in the Summer Session. Dr. Archibald Henderson, Chapel Hill, N. C., head of the department of Mathematics at the University of North Carolina, was the commencement speaker, his subject being, "The Need for a Higher Scholarship in a New Age." Dr. Jesse E. Adams, director of the Summer Session presided at the commencement exercises.

Among those who were graduated from this county was Chester Goodridge, Hebron.

FIRE TRAPS CALLED SCHOOLS

Some of the most tragic fires in American history have occurred in schools. Thousands of children have been cremated, and thousands more have carried the marks of disfiguring burnthrough life—because schoolhouses were improperly constructed, inefficiently protected, or inadequately equipped with fire escapes, staircases and fire doors.

The lessons of the past have had relatively little effect on the present. Survey after survey, conducted by responsible experts, have demonstrated that hundreds of our schools are fire traps. And these schools are not all in the "little red schoolhouses" classification—some of our handsomest and most superficially modern institutions of learning contain great and unnecessary dangers.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters, representative organizations of the nation's principal stock fire insurance companies, carries on an aggressive campaign in the interest of safer schools. When possible, it makes inspections of school buildings, and offers suggestions for changes and additions—often National Board experts have pointed out serious and unnecessary hazards which had been overlooked for years. And, beginning last year, it widened its field of action by issuing self-inspection blanks for schools, whereby any capable school official can systematically check the buildings and equipment involved, discover dangers and inadequacies, and make or suggest the necessary corrections. The blank, which has been adopted and officially approved by the National Association of Public School Business Officials, is to be sent this year to 1,700 secretaries and presidents of boards of education and fire chiefs of 7,000 and over. Officials in smaller towns can doubtless obtain the blanks from the National Board on request.

The school building which houses your child may be a menace to his life and health. Inspect it—and make it safe. No communal activity could be more important.

"CAR NUMBER 20"

According to an advertisement of a large life insurance company, the driver of every woman or child before the year is over—if the accident experience of 1935 duplicates that of 1934. And statistics for the first six months of the year indicate that little if any progress has been made in curbing the dangerous driver.

Every driver should decide for himself whether he wants to be at the wheel of "car number 20." The decision is really within his power. He can drive carefully, in accordance with the law and good judgment—he can keep his speed to reasonable levels, maintain his car in first-class mechanical condition so far as safety devices are concerned, and work on the basis that it is better to give up his right-of-way than risk a trip in an ambulance. Or he can take chances—he can regard crowded streets and highways as play grounds, where his reckless and adventurous instincts may be indulged to the full without regard for others or himself.

The laws of chance are immutable—and every motorist who is deliberately careless, can be certain that eventually he will come a cropper. He may get away with reckless acts a thousand times—the thousand and first time he will pay the price. Gambles with death always lose—the dice are loaded before you start the game.

One car in twenty will be the cause of someone's death or maiming this year! Are you going to be the 20th driver?

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—Herbert Hoover is not going to say anything about his possible candidacy for the Republican nomination next year for some time to come. That may be accepted as a fact, regardless of various stories to the contrary. This statement is based on the impressions obtained from the former President by one of his close friends, who had a long talk with him.

While no single word can be put in quotation marks of what Mr. Hoover said to this friend, the impressions the friend obtained are highly significant. In a word they are:

1. That Mr. Hoover craves a vindication.

2. That he therefore wants the nomination very badly.

3. That he would prefer to have the nomination come to him without effort, either on his own part or that of his friends.

4. But that if it becomes apparent that the nomination will not come that way, very little coaxing would be required to induce him to get out actively for it.

As this is written—anything can happen to change it—the famous public utility holding company legislation seems destined to die, so far as this session is concerned. Strangely enough, a mere lifting of a hand by the President would result in Mr. Roosevelt's getting more than half a loaf—really nine-tenths of a loaf. Even without the death sentence the bill is terrifically drastic. There would be no trouble putting the measure through both houses of congress if the conferees of the two houses should report the bill back without the death sentence.

Very Much Exaggerated

Actually the importance of the death sentence has been tremendously exaggerated by the publicity over this fight between the President and the utilities. The utilities concentrated on this one objective, and as far as congress is concerned, they won this fight. But its importance can best be illustrated by the simple statement of the alternative, or house, provision. The senate draft forces the end of the certain holding companies on a certain day. The house provision leaves discretion as to whether the sentence shall be executed in each particular case by a commission—members of which are appointed by the President.

So that Mr. Roosevelt could obtain his objective without the slightest difficulty—if he would acknowledge defeat in this spectacular battle. The utilities would emerge with some glory, but without the fruits of victory. The President would have the fruits, but little glory.

Yet betting odds at the moment are that he will wait until next year, when he expects to win both fruits and glory.

Downward Revision

Processing taxes and farm benefit payments are both due for a sharp downward revision next year. High AAA officials, in private discussions, explain this on economic grounds. Actually President Roosevelt will force their hands on political grounds.

Experts who have studied the Rhode Island situation—so disastrous to the New Deal in its implications—bring back a remarkable story. They say that the price of ham and bacon had more to do with the result than even the cotton processing taxes, although the latter are blamed, together with Japanese imports, for the closing of so many textile mills.

These reports flabbergasted the administration and delighted the Republicans. Both the New Dealers and G. O. P. leaders had figured that while the conditions affecting the first Rhode Island district extended to Massachusetts and New Hampshire, they were not general. On the other hand, resentment against high prices for pork products, it is figured, would be just as apt to be strong in California or Michigan as in Rhode Island.

In this connection there was much interest in the apparent healing of the breach between Governor Davey of Ohio and the New Deal. All the bitterness against Davey following his caustic comments on Relief Administrator Hopkins was carefully concealed. Davey had in his power to force a state-wide election in Ohio to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Representative-at-large Truax, and most political observers believe that if an election were held today in Ohio the state would go strongly Republican.

Must Cut Food Prices

In the first place, Ohio was never very strong for Roosevelt. Its delegation did not even vote for him on the final ballot at Chicago. On election day, when most states were piling up record-breaking majorities, Ohio gave Roosevelt only about 73,000. Moreover, resentment in Ohio, which has considerable state pride, is rather strong over the failure of the President to put an Ohioan in an important place.

The administration is now faced with almost the necessity of reducing food prices before election. On the particular items on which there is now the most resentment, pork products, no difficulty is anticipated. Pigs are usually marketed at the age of nine months, so it should be possible to have a plentiful supply of pork for the nation's housewives well before November, 1938.

Reduction of benefit payments on hogs would naturally have the effect of enormously increasing hog production. Similarly, reduction of processing taxes on pork would help to reduce prices on ham, bacon and other pork. But danger threatens from several other angles as far as the grocery bill is concerned. Reports from the Northwest and Canada about the ravages of black rust on the wheat crop are alarming. Some of the AAA experts are fearful that wheat may touch $1.50. This would be fine for farmers not affected by rust but would bring the same kind of clamor from housewives. So a sharp stop peddling of the wheat reduction program, accompanied by a reduction in the processing tax on wheat, is in order.

In fact it may be taken for granted that regardless of all past theories, the administration will do its best to have food prices down by next summer.

To Make Concessions
President Roosevelt will make concessions in the present labor war on relief projects. The concession will not be to pay union scale wages on work relief projects. The President's jaw is firmly set on this. It will be to remove present restrictions which limit jobs to people now on relief.

Very little has been heard from union labor sources on this last phase, but it has been vitally important to the unions. Not only to the rank and file, who need work in many instances, though they may have had sufficient pride and sufficient savings to stay off relief, but to the leaders. For men out of work are not apt to be regular in paying their dues, and thus the union treasuries get hurt. Especially as union leaders have been forced in the check-off system wherever possible for years now, with the result that use workers, in more than a majority of cases, are not used to paying dues. They are educated up to having their dues deducted from their pay envelopes. Hence, no pay envelopes, no dues.

Work relief jobs, under the original formula to which the union leaders object so strongly, were to be given only to persons on relief rolls last May. The job could not be obtained unless the United States employment service so certified.

In the near future orders will go out from Washington that the employment service must certify union men who need jobs, whether they were on relief last May or not.

This will meet a very important point in the present controversy between the government and union labor, but it will by no means leave a good taste in the mouths of the union men.

May Cause Feeling
The situation makes for artificial discriminations—likely to raise bitter feeling. For example, two groups of bricklayers may be working across the street from each other. One group will be on a public works project—one approved by Ickes under the old "spend our way out of the depression" theory. Those men will be drawing the prevailing wage. The other group will be working under a work relief project—approved by Harry Hopkins. They will be drawing relief wages. Under the Hopkins schedules the highest rate permitted at present is $34 a month!

Obviously every man drawing the lower wage will be sore for they will be union men in each case; the administration may be fairly brave at times but it is not going to employ many non-union bricklayers in big city projects. The man drawing the lower wage will have a grudge against the government to start with.

But John Taxpayer also enters the situation. He is being taxed for relief, and knows it. The average middle class taxpayer has more or less of a fixed opinion that union wages in the building trades are too high. He represents the day wage rates for carpenters, bricklayers, plasterers and plumbers, though he thinks it fine that Henry Ford has raised minimum wages in his plant to $6 a day.

The answer to this prejudice is that the average automobile buyer thinks he gets his money's worth when he buys a car, but thinks he gets stuck every time he has a tidy repair bill on the home. He also thinks the price of building homes is too high and blames it on high wages for the building trades.

It is not important for the moment whether there is any justice in this view or not. But there is no doubt whatever that it is very widely held. Hence it is politically important.

As to Huey Long

All this talk about Huey Long is food and drink to conservative critics of the administration. There is nothing they would like better than for Huey to be an independent candidate for President, and to run in as many states as possible. They figure he would not get any electoral votes, save possibly those of Louisiana, where his machine controls the election machinery. But they also figure that in certain radical states, particularly in the West, every vote he would draw would come from Roosevelt's strength, thus aiding in the election of the Republican nominee.

No one takes seriously Huey's alleged statement that he would support the Republican ticket if Borah were the candidate. Politicians think this would never happen. Long before election day the Kingfish would discover certain issues on which he could not possibly go along with Borah.

MEETING THE MULE SHORTAGE

Every farmer who has had to replace or add to his work stock knows from the prices asked that a horse and mule shortage is upon us. Can the Southern farmer raise his own mules and avoid the high prices? An interesting reply to this question may be found in The Progressive Farmer for July, written by Dr. Tait Butler, who says in part:—

"To breed a mare and raise a mule to three years of age ready for work requires four years, so it will be four years before those who are now buying for mule breeding can make replacements by that method. This has always been the practice of Southern farmers. They too often only think of producing any kind of livestock, even for home use or consumption, when prices are relatively high and then after buying breeding stock when prices are up they often sell out and quit when prices become relatively low.

"No one can jump into livestock production of any kind when prices are satisfactory to breeders and then go out when prices become lower without loss. But I would not advise against the purchase of mares now for mule breeding for replacement of the work stock needed because prices are higher than they were a few years back. The only caution I would suggest is that mares and jacks of the right sort be bought and that preparation be made for suitable care and breeding. This latter is all-important.

"Most farmers, regardless of their expressed preference for the light, active mule, would prefer a mule weighing 1,100 to 1,200 pounds rather than one weighing 800 to 900 pounds. If one wants a 1,100-pound mule he should buy a 900-pound mare to produce it. Of course there are 900-pound mares, with a greater weight inheritance, that will produce 1,100-pound mules with good care and feeling, but if the jack does not weigh more than 1,100 pounds, and most of them weigh less, he will not produce many 1,100-pound mules from 900 and 1,000-pound mares, especially with the usual Southern feeding. I would not buy a mare weighing less than 1,100 pounds for breeding mules to do farm work and I would prefer that she weighed 1,200 pounds or even 1,003 pounds, if she was trim and neat, with good quality of bone and muscle.

"Of course, for high priced mules larger mares are used, but for Southern farm use a 1,200-pound mare of the right type, mated with a good jack, with the usual Southern feeding, will not produce a larger mule than needed to do good work on Southern farms."

Paper Making Progresses

From Art to an Industry

The early process of paper making consisted of beating or grinding cellulose material in water until the fibers were completely separated and then straining the fibers out of the water by means of a flat screen. The resulting felt of cellulose fibers was then pressed out and dried. As a raw material the only one source of fairly pure cellulose available then was linen—and later cotton—in the form of old rags or textile waste. And since each sheet of the paper had to be hand made, it was expensive according to modern standards, although much cheaper than anything previously used.

The development of newspapers, observes a writer in the Chicago Tribune, has been attributed to many things, such as the human thirst for knowledge and the spread of literacy. In all probability, however, it was due to none of these, but to the invention by Fourdrinier in 1804 of machinery which made paper much cheaper by changing its manufacture from an art to an industry. Until then a newspaper was a luxury of the intelligentsia. With the advent of cheaper paper it became everyman's necessity.

As subscription lists expanded during the Nineteenth century, a paper shortage threatened. Men would not wear out their shirts fast enough to supply the rags necessary for paper making. But the profession of journalism was saved by the scientists who invented the process of making paper from the cellulose of wood.

Whole Ship Crews Wiped

Out by Bubonic Plague

Rats like the warm holds and abundant food of ships so well they are constantly trying to stow away when a ship is docked, says a writer in the Washington Post. To discourage them much money is spent rat-proofing modern liners, and when the vessel is tied up at a wharf rat-guards are slipped over the hawsers to keep them from climbing on board.

A rat is an unwelcome visitor anywhere, and especially on ships, for he makes his nest in precious silks and other valuable cargo and carries one of man's most deadly diseases—bubonic plague. Whole crews of ships have been wiped out by this dread scourge, the vessel being unmanned, a helpless derelict until wrecked on some rocky coast or found by a passing ship.

Bubonic plague has been one of the worst curses of mankind since before the time of written history. Repeatedly it swept across medieval Europe, killing millions, one of the greatest epidemics occurring in London in 1664. Although two-thirds of the 400,000 inhabitants fled to escape it, 75,000 died in a short time. It is found on all seas.

Cormorant Good Fisherman

The cormorant, a sea bird with a long neck, which has a cosmopolitan distribution, has been trained to fish for hundreds of years. In England the master of the cormorants was formerly one of the officers of the royal household. The practice is nearly obsolete in Europe, though still common in Japan and China. A strap is fastened around the bird's neck, so as (without impeding its breath) to hinder it from swallowing its captures. The activity the bird displays under water is almost incredible. It dives for fish from the boat its master is fishing in and catches as many as 100 fish an hour, bringing them back and delivering them to the boat.

Reactions of Plants

The reactions of plants are similar in many ways to those of animals, writes C. H. Quimmet, Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts, in Collier's Weekly. Plants are benumbed by cold, stupefied by chloroform, intoxicated by alcohol, excited by electrical stimulus, hurt by external blows and killed by poison. They are even affected by noise. A vase of carnations, placed near a dance orchestra, will, after several hours, be found leaning away from it.

Most Intelligent Animals

The chimpanzee leads the list of the ten most intelligent animals compiled by Dr. W. Reid Blair, director of the New York zoological park. The list, based on tests to which animals have been subjected in psychological laboratories, placed the orang-utan second, elephant third, gorilla fourth, domestic dog fifth, beaver sixth, domestic horse seventh, seal-eighth, bear ninth, and domestic cat tenth.—Literary Digest.

Most Feared of All Deities

Madame Pele, goddess of old Hawaiian mythology, was once the most feared of all deities in the Hawaiian Islands. The goddess was invested with terrifying powers under the old "taboo" system. In 1824 Princess Kapulani of Hilo successfully challenged the power of the goddess and the native fear of her died. The volcano lies in the United States National park of Hawaii.

First Roller Skates

Wheeled skates were used on the roads of Holland as far back as the Eighteenth century, but it was the invention of the four-wheeled skate, working on rubber pads, by J. L. Pimpton of New York, in 1803, that made the amusement popular. Still greater advance was made by the Ray and skate with ball and cone bearings. The wheels of rollers were first of tapered boxwood.

Ancient Maya Calendar

Had 18 Months, 20 Days

Students of history who have noted the difficulty ancient civilizations had in arranging a calendar, and who know that our present system of measuring time did not receive its final touches until late in the Sixteenth century, might be somewhat surprised at the perfection of the calendar used by the ancient American Indians.

From about the First to the Sixteenth century the Mayas of Central America, who had few apologies to make to any one for their civilization, had a calendar which has hardly been equaled even by our own, says Pathfinder Magazine. A bit more complicated than ours with its 13 months of 20 days each and with a different name and number for each day of the month, it presents a much more precise system. There was a supplementary period of five days each year to make up the full 365 days and a correction for the six-hour variation of the solar year from the calendar year. This calendar, which was later imperfectly copied by the Aztecs, was based on a good knowledge of astronomy. The Mayas were able to calculate eclipses and they determined the synodic periods of Venus, Mars and Jupiter.

"Beefeaters" Is Oldest

United Kingdom Regiment

The "Beefeaters" in the tower never fail to attract the attention of visitors to London, but few who have seen them know they are the oldest regiment in the United Kingdom, and founders of the British army, says a London correspondent in the Indianapolis News.

The first British standing army, instituted October 30, 1485, by King Henry VII, consisted of fifty officers and men. They were archers known as the King's Bodyguard of the Yeomen of the guard. That happened shortly after the battle of Bosworth in which Richard Crookback lost both his life and his throne. Owing to public sentiment, King Henry announced that the newly created bodyguard was for show and not to be used for fighting.

The "Beefeaters" picturesque uniform is exactly the same today as it was when the original members of the guard attended the person of Henry VII and waited upon him at meals.

The "Beefeaters" are summoned to attend all state functions, and one of their traditional duties is to search the vault of the house of commons before the opening of every new session of parliament.

Sheepdog Walks Like Bear

An old English sheepdog is a rare sight anywhere, but once this dog, standing 22 inches or so from the ground, is seen, it can never be forgotten, nor its ambling, bearish walk, writes Ruth Mansfield in the Washington Post. The outstanding characteristic is the profuse, shaggy coat of gray, grizzle, blue or blue merled with or without white markings. The eyes, beneath shaggy hair, are dark, although the most coveted among breeders are dogs with one wall eye and one dark brown eye. The skull is large, rather squarely formed, the whole well covered with hair. The nose is always black and large, while the ears are small and carried flat to the side of the head. The tail is minus, either naturally or by docking. The whole appearance of the old English sheepdog is for rugged compactness.

"Fake" Eve

For years the "tomb" of Eve, the progenitress of mankind, stood in a graveyard outside of Jeddah, Arabia. The fact that it was 500 feet long and 40 feet wide, and that Eve would answer any question—through a tube—for a small fee, never taxed the credulity of the thousands of Mohammedans who visited the spot each year. In 1927 the tomb was destroyed and the woman who ran the racket from an underground crypt retired with a fortune.—Collier's Weekly.

Where Gray Hair Is Honored

In the Far East patriarchal beards and white hairs are associated with dignity and honor. Possession of a "mustache of magnificent proportions" merely adds to the éclat of its possessors. To this it may be added that a beardless chin does not command respect. In fact, a man who has lost either his mustache or his beard seems to lose his face with it, in the East. Not so, however, with the hair, for a bald man is sure of his place in society and honor in the Orient.

Whale's Spouting Mystery

It is still doubtful whether the whale spouts vapor or water. There is some contention that the animal fills its lungs with air before making a descent, and when this is exhausted it comes to the surface and discharges it. There are others who quote the laws of nature to disprove this and claim that the whale accumulates a quantity of oxygen to carry it through the underwater descents and that the spouting consists of vapor and water mixed.

Really "Beautiful" Men

On Mindanao Island in the Philippines live a Malayan tribe called the Bagobo, the men of which are remarkable for their effeminate faces, it being difficult to distinguish them from the women. In fact, many of the men are far more beautiful than their wives. Incidentally this happens to be one of those tribes in which the women are allowed to have several husbands.—Collier's Weekly.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

CHAISE longues and reclining chairs of different types are among the fascinating portable pieces of lawn furniture. These would be unwieldy in folding furniture so they become chairs on wheels, not wheeled chairs in the ordinary sense, for this term is too closely allied with invalidism. These modern pieces are for the hale and hearty rather than the infirm or sickly. They are the essence of lawn luxury in chairs, especially when equipped with canopy awnings that form decorative hoods for the backs of the lounges.

The shape of the chairs is so cleverly contrived that one scarcely realizes that the curved legs at the end of the chaise longue make just the right handles by which to trundle the chair about from one spot of beauty on a lawn to another, as the sunlight shifts or the fancy dictates. Unlike the usual wheel chair, the novelty chair on wheels is not pushed about from the back, but is trundled about by lifting the wheelless foot, the light end, by the legs and then pulling the lounge, or reclining chair, whichever you wish to call it, which rolls along easily on the rather small wheels positioned under the back. This is the heaviest part, and yet so well balanced is it on the wheels, that its weight is not realized as you trundle the reclining chair over the grass.

Portable Chairs

The latest innovation in these wicker lounges and chairs on wheels is the awning top. This is attached to the slanting back which is invariably at one end of the piece of furniture, and not along one side as is the case with sofas, love seats, and regulation lounges. In fact, the difference between the lounge and the chaise longues is immediately recognizable by the spelling. The "u" comes in a different place in the words. The lounge is a long chair with a seat sufficiently extended to include the foot rest, and so permit the occupant to recline, although not precisely to lie down. The shape is classic. The development in portable form is modern.

The awning top adds an element of utility to the chairs, softening the light as well as shielding from the sun. It permits a steady light to fall on a book, rather than the intermittent light and shadow through trees swaying in a breeze. And when cool autumn days come, the chair can be in the warm sunshine, if desirable, and the occupant be able to read without a glare from the sun on the whiteness of the printed page. There is also protection from too strong a wind. The awning is a utilitarian luxury.

Care of Silver

In summer time, above all other seasons, does the homemaker put away her extra pieces of silver and so save herself care. And if she closes the town house to take up residence at a summer resort, she further protects it and eases her mind about it, by putting it in a vault in her bank. This is a wise precaution, and costs very little. If there is much sterling silver, and this is the only kind that requires this looking after, it is seldom left in a home. It would be costly in dollars and cents to replace it, and many pieces would probably be impossible of replacement—such as family silver, and other articles of sentimental associations. If the quantity of sterling is large it may be treasured all the more because of its scarcity, plus its associations. So in both instances it deserves to be well looked out for.

Whether one puts the silver in the bank or not, and whether it is sterling or good plated ware, cases to put the silverware pieces in are needed. Silver scratches when one piece rubs against another. The finish is impaired. If laid in a cloth-lined silver drawer in a sideboard, each piece should be allowed room so that it does not come in contact with those next to it. However, silver articles should be in cases, and some homemakers use cases in any event.

172 LOANS

more information about production credit loans may call upon Mr. Walton or may contact the association office at Williamstown, according to Director Hemphill. "Our organization is a farmers' cooperative association for supplying short-term credit for farm operations," he stated. "It gets money to lend by discounting the sound secured notes of its farmer-members with the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Louisville, and at present makes loans at 5 per cent. Each borrower becomes a stockholder. Our's is the only type of credit organization I know of where the voting stock and management is entirely in the hands of the borrowers."

An excellent repayment record has been made by members on all loans that have fallen due to date, according to Director Hemphill, who states that the association is in a sound and satisfactory financial position.

Old Time Splendor Seen in Japan's Aged Temples

It seems that every important city of Japan has been the capital and seat of government of the nation at some time in the 2,500 year reign of the present imperial house, notes a writer in the Chicago Tribune.

Jimmu Tenno, founder of this old existing dynasty, who took over the rule of the country in 660 B. C., is buried in Nara province. Nara was the first permanent capital of Japan, but succeeding mikados have changed the seat of government many times to various cities. Moving the capital did not cost the people so much in this land of typhoons, earthquakes, and fires as it would in countries where government buildings are constructed on a more costly scale with a view to permanent occupancy.

At the height of its glory Nara was rich in palaces, temples, public buildings and residences of noble and wealthy families. It established arts and crafts and encouraged literature and religion. Many tokens of Nara's former splendor still survive in the magnificent temples and shrines erected in bygone centuries, carefully preserved and loyally cherished.

British Isles Possess

Most Temperate Climate

The Bahama Islands, lying a few hundred miles southeast of the coast of Florida, were settled by Loyalists from the United States after the American Revolution, notes a writer in the Montreal Herald. The islands have the most temperate climate in the world and the crop season extends throughout the whole year.

The land was at first divided into large plantations using slave labor, after the fashion of the southern states. Cotton and tropical fruits were the great export crops while corn and live stock were produced for local needs. Cotton was abandoned after a few years since it rapidly exhausted the thin soil and with the abolition of slavery the land was gradually broken up into small holdings, cultivated by both white and colored farmers.

The big limiting factor in the agriculture of these islands is the peculiar nature of the soil. Generally speaking it is not more than a few inches deep, with coral and other rock outcroppings frequent.

First Tile From Scotland

The first tile laid in this country were imported from Scotland in 1835 by John Johnston and laid in clay soil on his farm near Geneva, N. Y. The success of this venture prompted him to import patterns and have tile made by hand. In 1848, a neighbor, John Delaford, imported a tile machine from England. The success which these men had with a horseshoe-shaped tile soon encouraged the rapid spread of tile drainage in this country. The first drain tile ever used were probably used in northern France about 1620. Not until England took up the practice, however, were tile used extensively.

The Song "Sweet Adeline"

"Sweet Adeline" was written by Harry Armstrong and Dick Gerrard. It was published in 1903 after an ignominious career as "Sweet Roalie." While the composers were trying to sell the song, Adeline Pettit began her farewell tour. A publisher suggested the change in title. The song was sold, but even as "Sweet Adeline" failed to become a hit. About that time the Quaker City Four, a vaudeville quartette, tried out the ballad on a Broadway audience and stopped the show. In a few weeks it was a national rage and since then over 2,000,000 copies have been sold.

Wood Rings Indicate Strength

Any wood with unusually narrow growth rings may be expected to be weaker for its kind. The wood of pine and other conifers, however, with unusually wide rings is generally weaker than when of average width. Therefore, very fast-growing pines usually are inferior in strength to virgin growth. The opposite is true of most hardwoods when wood with wide rings usually ranks the highest. Thus wood from second-growth hardwoods is, on the average, stronger than from virgin growth.

Thermite Process of Welding

Thermite (also thermit) is a mixture of aluminum in fine grains or filings with some metallic oxide, usually iron or chromium. On being heated by priming with magnesium powder and barium oxide the aluminum combines violently with the oxygen of the oxide, setting free the iron, producing a fluid slag and generating sufficient heat either to melt or bring adjacent parts to the welding temperature. It is used on welding steel rails and for other purposes.

Patriots Secret Society Men

Nathan Hale, the martyr, who gave his life for his country in the American revolution, was a member of St. John's Lodge of New York. He was also a graduate of Yale university. Maj. John Andre, who met the same fate as a spy for the British army, was also a Mason.

Castle Is Famed

The tiny city of Eisenach, Germany, famed for historic Wartburg castle, is also the place where Martin Luther retired under the pseudonym of "Junker Georg" to translate the Bible into German.

Lesson for September 1

PAUL THE APOSTLE

LESSON TEXT—Acts 20:33-35; Philippians 4:4-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak.—Acts 20:35.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Happy Worker for Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul a Good Soldier for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Find Happiness in Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Church and the Teller.

The explanatory title given by the lesson committee, "Paul (A Worker With Hand and Brain)," is unsatisfactory. His pursuit of a trade was incidental, as well as working with his brain. He was in debt and in truth the apostle of Jesus Christ and his entire person was dominated by his passion to serve his Lord.

I. His Birth (Acts 22:3; cf. Phil. 3:7).

He was born in Tarsus of pure Hebrew stock. He could with lawful pride boast of a godly ancestry.

II. His Home Training (Phil. 3:5).

His parents were pious people and carefully reared him according to Jewish standards. Most religious leaders spring out of such homes, as for example, Moses, Samuel, and Timothy. Stern principles of integrity were inculcated in him, thus giving him the strength of character to impress the world.

III. His Education (Acts 22:3).

1. His patriotism. He was brought up to love his nation. He proudly affirmed, "I am a Jew." Paul was a nationalist of the true type.

2. A love for the Bible. The Scriptures were to him the very Word of God. What was found written therein was the final word for him. Loss of love for the Bible and implicit faith therein is a tragedy.

3. Zealous for God. He says, "I was zealous toward God." The word "zealous" literally means "to boil." It means that his life was inflamed with passion for God.

4. He was conscientious. His supreme aim was to have a conscience void of offense. Conformity to the dictates of conscience is demanded. It is the law of life for every man, but because of the blight of sin the conscience needs to be taught by the Word of God.

5. He had a trade. Every Jewish boy, regardless of his father's wealth, was taught a trade. It was a saying among them that he who failed to teach his son a trade taught him to steal.

IV. His Conversion (Acts 22:6-10).

1. On the way to Damascus (v. 6). He was filled with hatred of Christ and was on his way to Damascus with authority to bring to Jerusalem to be punished such Christians, men and women, as might be found.

2. A light from heaven (vv. 6-9). As this light burned through the sky he fell to the ground. Accompanying the light was a voice saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" In response to his inquiry as to who was speaking, the Lord declared that it was Jesus of Nazareth whom he was persecuting.

3. An honest inquiry (v. 10). This is shown by his declaration of his willingness to do what the Lord willed. The Lord, therefore, instructed him to go to Damascus where fuller light would be given him.

V. Paul's Philosophy of Life (Phil. 4:4-13).

What men do and say expresses their philosophy of life. In order to induce right living, there must be created right thinking, for truly, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

1. Unceasing joy in the Lord (v. 4). The one who knows the Lord Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour and who knows that in the providence of God all things work together for good to them who love God, cannot help but persistently rejoice in spite of personal circumstances.

2. Be careful for nothing (v. 6). The word "careful" means "concern which leads to distraction." This does not mean that such a one will be hazardous in his living or fall in the exercise of common sense. He will not be disposed to depend upon himself, but cast himself upon his Lord for everything.

3. Think on right things (v. 8). The one who thinks on truth will be true; the one who thinks on honesty will be honest; the one who thinks on love will have love flowing from his person. Things honorable and of good reputation among the people will not be neglected.

4. All sufficiency is in Christ (vv. 10-13). The one who is thus in harmony with his Lord will be content in whatever circumstances he may be placed.

Health

"The first wealth is health. Sickness is poor-spirited, and cannot serve anyone; it must husband its resources to live. But health, or fullness, answers its own ends, and has to spare—runs over, and innuendoes the neighborhoods and creeks of other men's necessities."—Emerson.

Need of Self-Control

But take my word for it. This is the time to see the world in its Sunday clothes, and without money and without price.—Exchange.

$40,000 in Pearls

By SPENCER A. SPENCER

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

ARNOLD MILLURN had worked every confidence racket from the artificial eye dropped into a gullible fruit dealer's basket of grapes, to selling mythical oil wells to wide-eyed tourists in California. Of medium height, was Arnold Millurn—suave, and with a face so honest that it fooled astute judges of human nature. Conscience, he had none, taking the insurance money of widows with dependent children as readily as he did the Broadway playboy's allowance. Strolling in the environs of Times Square one late afternoon, he stopped before a shabby bookshop and idly examined the dusty volumes on the outside display rack. While glancing through the grimy pages of a tattered expose of card tricks, his alert eyes were arrested by a sealed envelope. It was addressed to Mrs. Cynthia Rodgers in Brooklyn, but bore no stamp or sign of postmark. He studied the envelope furtively. Perhaps it contained something of value. With one deft movement that defied detection, he transferred the envelope from the book to the inside pocket of his coat.

When he was alone in his hotel room he brought it forth for closer inspection. The envelope which had once been white was yellow and brittle. Carefully he tore off the end and shook out the letter. It had been written from Pago-Pago, and was dated July 14, 1929.

"My dear wife Cynthia (the letter began):

"It seems at this time to be the will of God that this letter must be my last. My ship is at anchor here, undergoing repairs. Upon arrival it was carried ashore suffering from tropical fever. The port doctor, a worthy man, has advised me to put my worldly affairs in order.

"At one time, having lost considerable monies in a bank failure, I secretly constructed a small vault in our home. It is directly above the carved figure on the left side of the mantel in the back parlor. By pressing the right eyeball of the figure you will release a spring which will cause the door of the vault to open. Inside you will find $21,000 in American gold, and pearls whose value is estimated to be $40,000. It is my earnest hope that these monies and jewels, with God's help, will protect you from want all your remaining days.

"I am sending this message to you by my loyal and trustworthy mate, Mr. Jack MacDonald.

"Your loving and faithful husband, "Captain Peter Rodgers."

Arnold Millurn's hands were trembling as he finished reading the letter. It was evident to him that since Cynthia Rodgers had not received her husband's letter the gold and pearls were still in the vault.

As he taxied across the long bridge to Brooklyn doubts crept into his mind. Perhaps the house had been razed to make room for a modern structure.

All doubts slipped from him, however, when a half hour later he found it. A weather-worn brownstone it was, in a once fashionable neighborhood where the streets sloped sharply toward the busy waterfront. He walked slowly past the house, then catching sight of the ROOMS FOR RENT sign in the window, retraced his steps and rang the doorbell. Luck was with him! The great, heavy door was opened by a little, white-haired lady whose lively blue eyes and quick smile beamed up at him.

"I'm looking for a room," he said. "Something on the first floor, if you have it."

"The only room I have vacant at present is the back parlor," she explained, stepping aside for him to enter. He struggled to keep this good news from showing in his face. "The back parlor has a lovely view of the harbor," the little woman continued. "My husband was a seafaring man. Captain of the Silver Swan, he was, before she was lost with all hands aboard." He had followed her into the back parlor. "I used to watch for his ship through these windows, but that's been a long time ago." As she talked he saw nothing but the marble mantle above the fireplace with the carved figures on both sides.

"How much is this room?" he asked. "One hundred dollars a month. Rooms with a view of the harbor are scarce. You'll find there's a breeze, even on the hottest nights."

Reluctantly he selected five twenties from his wallet and gave them to her. The moment she was gone he hung his hat over the doorknob, closing the keyhole to prying eyes. Then he pulled down the shades. Walking to the mantle he pressed the right eyeball of the figure on the left. Instantly a small section of wall swung outward. With a moist, shaking hand he reached into the opening. It was empty! No—there was a piece of letter paper inside. He carried it to the window, and pulling back the edge of the shade, read: "My dear Treasure Hunter:

"The envelope which you found in the book was only one of many that I placed in several bookshops. I find this an excellent method of advertising my rooms. I hope that during your sojourn under my roof you will be comfortable and happy. In the event, however, that you decide to leave before you decide to see me again, please refrain from slamming the front door.

"Yours truly, "Mrs. Cynthia Rodgers."

THE GARDEN

CHINESE CABBAGE

(By John S. Gardner, Ky. College of Agriculture)

This succulent fall salad is already quite popular among Kentucky gardeners, but its piquancy and its general excellence are the best kind of reason for its inclusion in every garden. With its starting time in August, it fits in admirably with the plans of the gardener who wishes to keep his plot fully occupied as long as there is growing weather. Quite frost-hardy it is among the last of the vegetables to succumb to frost.

As with other leaf crops, its main fertility need is nitrogen. The best way to fill this need is to apply manure, particularly the poultry manure, whose nitrogen-content is exceptionally high. The application of manure takes care, automatically, of the other growing requirements, that of moisture, for manure renders soil spongy. If not enough manure can be got really to serve the soil, at least a side-dressing should be given, after active growth has begun. Lacking manure entirely, nitrate of soda should be used as a side-dressing, a pound to 100 feet of row, when active growing starts, and again two weeks later, with the amount of nitrate doubled.

The seed may be started in a plant-bed, and the seedlings transplanted when there are two true leaves, or the seed may be sown sparsely in drills and thinning done to a stand of 10 inches or so. The latter method may need a trifle the more seed, but it circumvents the hazard of transplanting.

Chinese cabbage is subject to the attack of several pests, particularly dangerous while the plants are still small. One, most aggravating, is the black-beetle beetle, the minute insect that riddles the leaves with small holes. The control is spraying with Bordeaux Mixture, starting before the beetles have become numerous enough to effect any damage, for riddled foliage is permanently handicapped.

Another pest is the cabbage worm, it is regretful to have some times to say, on the early cabbage stubs that have been left in the garden. Up until the time the Chinese cabbage begins to head, arsenicals may be used, as for the cabbage worm on ordinary cabbage, but after that rotenone dust or spray should be substituted, for the rotenone is non-poisonous to humans. Still another insect that is sometimes troublesome is the cabbage louse, another heirloom from the early crop of ordinary cabbage. Signs of its presence are the curling-under of the leaves and the general stunting of the plants.

Tobacco, either in the form of home-made "tobacco tea," or a spray or dust made from commercial nicotine sulphate, Black Leaf 40, is the means for stopping lice. Inasmuch as the work almost always is on the undersides of the leaves, they are hard to see, and difficult to reach with remedial measures. However, with a sprayer or duster having an up-turned nozzle, and with a temperature of 60 or higher, and the material properly directed, 100 per cent killing should ensue in 30 minutes or less.

There are two varieties of Chinese cabbage, both well suited to Kentucky climate. They are Wong Bok and Pe Tsal. All seedsmen carry one or the other.

THE FARM AND HOME

(Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station)

Children's school clothing should be of practical, durable materials. Cotton is good, as it is easily laundered and is durable. Gingham, chambray, broadcloth and percale are satisfactory cottons. Design and color should be selected for the particular child that is to wear the garment.

So plan the company meal that not more than one dish will have to be prepared at the last minute. Such as broiling the steak, making croquettes, or arranging the salad. Simple meals are best, the kind that do not worry or tire the hostess.

Fall is an ideal time to paint, preferred by many persons to any other season. Weather conditions are usually good, and there are few gnats and other insects to bother. Two thin coats are better than one thick coat or even two thick coats.

Many fruit growers follow the practice of sowing a cover crop of rye, barley, oats or vetch among grape vines, raspberries or other small fruits. A rye-vetch combination has been found satisfactory on the Experiment Station farm at Lexington.

Pullets eat more and more grain as they grow older, even though mash is kept before them. If changes are to be made in the ration, it is well to make them some time before the laying season, so that the birds may not be disturbed after they are laying.

Apple sauce may be made and canned from windfalls or green apples. Pack boiling hot, completely seal and process containers in boiling water for 15 minutes.

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

KEEPING cool in these hot days is not an easy thing to accomplish either by adults who have work to do, or by children engrossed in their play, which is active a good part of the time. There are certain things that aid in fulfilling the need, and at the same time are so simple that they can be done by anyone. And there are other ways which can be followed when one's tasks are adaptable, or after they have been finished. For instance, keeping in the shade out of doors where the air is circulating is not feasible all the time, but it is a pleasant method when work is through, or when tasks can be done under such circumstances. Shelling peas, stringing beans, and preparing some foods can be done under these comfortable conditions. Sitting in a room where light is well shaded, and the atmosphere is as cool as possible permits sewing to be done in the best environment available. Occasional cooling baths are wonderfully refreshing also and may be sufficiently invigorating to speed work up afterwards.

Apart from these ways, there are little things which lower the effects of the hot temperature. Dousing the face in cold water is refreshing, and as it takes but a few moments, it interferes not at all, or but slightly, with work that must be done. Most persons find wetting the wrists with cold water or the back of the neck and under the ears lessens the heat appreciably. Which method is most effective depends upon the person. Some persons find nothing quite so reviving as cold water under and around the ears while others prefer it on the wrists or neck.

Inactivity Not Enough

Inactivity keeps the blood circulating vigorously and is a great aid to keeping cool. If, during this period, however, the person keeps the mind working all the time with the thought of how hot he or she is, the inactivity does not prove the help desired. One should let the mind dwell on pleasant things, not disturbing ones, since pleasant thoughts keep the mind placid, while the other ferments it.

There is no use combating the fact that the mental attitude influences the hot or cool physical feeling. Persons are said to be in a heated argument, or a white heat of rage, or cool as a cucumber, etc., and the terms are not figurative but literal. So keep a good rein on the thoughts and see that they follow your guidance into, refreshing lines of reflection, if you would keep cool.

Children on the Beach

In summer the desire of little folk to dabble in the water can be permitted to the good of their health, when they are at the seashore. It is seldom that they will venture too far into the ocean, for the rim of the sea satisfies very little children. However, some older person has to be on guard lest the youngsters stumble and fall.

So while dabbling in the brink of the water on seashore, lake, or river, is recommended both for health and pleasure of children, let it be under protection. The youngsters should not be made to feel fear, as this robs the sport of its joy, but they should have enough supervision on the beach to insure safety.

It is when children get beyond the age of such watchfulness on the part of adults, when they have reached an age of self-reliance that makes them feel perfectly competent to look after themselves, whether they are sufficiently able or not, that they must be impressed with the necessity of carefulness when they go swimming.

The pleasure of swimming is increased by companionship. So also is the safety of it. So encourage the children to go bathing in groups. This can be done without any idea being conveyed that safety as well as enjoyment is considered.

New Mahogany Finish

Back in the naive decade, when everything had to match, the practice developed of staining all types of mahogany so dark that the color of mahogany was made uniform. George N. Lamb, in "The Mahogany Book," speaks of the many types and shadings of mahogany that are now being introduced. Nowadays, mahogany is being given natural or only lightly stained finishes. These not only reveal the real beauty of the wood but are most practical from the standpoint of upkeep. They also permit the natural aging of the wood which enhances its inherent beauty. Much of the furniture today is finished with lacquer, a finish that will stand much abuse.

Preparation of Wood

Close-grained woods, such as cherry, birch, white wood or maple, require an undercoat, or primer, to fill the pores of the wood before applying the final finish. This prevents the final coats from sinking in and disappearing in spots.

"Thinking I See Thee Smile"

By VIRGINIA G. MILLIKIN
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

THE scrub woman picked up her pail and mop and stood aside for Mr. Horne to pass.

"You are early tonight, aren't you Mamie?" he asked pleasantly as he pressed the elevator bell.

"A little early, maybe," she answered with a smile that showed nearly toothless gums. She watched the elevator shoot downward with him. Then she made a vigorous slushy sound with her mop on the tiled floor.

A few minutes later as she ran her dust cloth over Mr. Horne's mahogany desk, radio music came to her ears from one of those apartments across the hallway. She leaned on the desk, half sitting, and fingered a small gold-framed picture of his wife. A beautiful face. Beautiful.

Mamie set the picture down gently. Her pale eyes looked dreamily out through the high window toward the square foot of sky. It was touched by the afterglow of the ending day. In such a setting she listened to the song coming through the radio:

"Sometimes between long shadows on the grass,

The little truant waves of sunlight pass.

My eyes grow dim with tenderness the while,

Thinking I see thee, thinking I see thee smile."

She glanced again at the small photograph. She, too, had been pretty once a long time ago. If only—but what was the use of thinking? But—if only one thing of beauty could be hers! Not physical beauty, of course; that was gone forever. Not something you bought with money and wore to show off.

The afterglow grew fainter in the square foot of sky as she remembered a boy in her class in school that long time ago. She wasn't Mamie then. She was Mary Young with cheeks like roses. Always she had realized she was not as clever as the boy. She was pretty in a common sort of way but dumb when it came to getting good grades. Her mind had never been very alert about things in books. The boy used to laugh and pull her hair and help her with the problems. He never let his friends know about his close friendship with her. He would come down across the tracks late at night to see her. At school he would pass her with a casual nod as the other fellows did. It was all right. She would never be a fine lady.

That last time they were together before he went away to Europe, he had held her very tight as they stood before the grate fire she had kindled in his honor. He had asked her if everything was all right. There had been an anxious note in his voice and she couldn't bear to hurt him. She had lied and said yes, of course. The glad light had come back to his eyes and he had kissed her very tenderly. She was glad she had lied. She wanted him to go away with a happy heart; even if her own did break. He would be gone four years. She knew he would never come back to her. She had smiled up at him with her eyes full of tears.

"Mary, I love your smile," he had said. Then he had looked down at the flickering flames. She remembered she had been so afraid the small amount of wood she could gather would not last that wonderful evening out. He had said, "Darling, an open fire will always remind me of you, and in its flames I think I shall see your smile."

Six months later her baby was born. He was sweet and scrawny. Such a helpless tiny tyke. But he looked like his father away off in Europe. She loved the little fellow wildly—savagely. Soon after he had learned to clap his thin little hands when she came near, he had died.

The scrub woman shivered as the song from the radio ended.

Now it had been a long time since anything sweet had been hers. Queer how she should be thinking of all this tonight.

When she finished her work it was late. It had begun to snow. Spiteful icy flakes which stung her hollow cheeks. She yielded to a stronger impulse and took a hillside car. She would have to walk six blocks and face the wind this way. But she could pass Mr. Horne's big new home on the avenue. There had been a picture of it in the Sunday paper. She liked to see where the big folks of her office building lived.

She alighted from the car at Elm and walked up the wide street. Her heart was beating faster than usual. Her breath came in little gasps. She was even with the grand new house. Splashes of light came from the windows. She was glad the curtains were not all drawn. She stopped and leaned eagerly over the low stone wall. She smiled. No one was near to see that it was a nearly toothless smile.

Before an open fire she saw Mr. Horne sitting in a great easy chair, his head comfortably relaxed, his eyes fixed dreamily on the flickering flames. And while she watched she saw him smile.

She was suddenly trembling. Here was the lovely thing that would be hers alone forever. He had said when he looked at an open fire he would remember her. As she walked the weary blocks against the icy wind, her heart was singing:

"My eyes grow dim with tenderness the while,

Thinking I see thee, thinking I see thee smile."

AUGUST FIFTEENTH

Few of us will ever forget the first two weeks in August of 1914. Every major government in Europe had already tumbled into war, or was on the verge of it. And at Washington our own officials were frantically working to keep us out of it.

During all that excitement two things happened here that everyone forgot. Long ahead of schedule and costing less than the estimates, our army engineers had finished the Panama Canal. On August 3, 1914, the morning when Germans first invaded Belgium, the first ship ever to use the canal was successfully put through. Twelve days later, on August 15, we formally opened the canal to traffic.

Today it is a commonplace. Thousands of ships use it every year, carrying apples from Oregon, movie queens from Hollywood, rubber from Java, nitrates from Chile, and just plain tourists by the thousands. Few of them stop to think of what went into the making of the Canal. That blood-soaked isthmus had been a pest hole of disease and iniquity ever since Pizarro crossed it to conquer Peru, about 60 years ago.

Disease was the first thing the engineers had to fight—pirates and buccaners having gone out of fashion. But disease was more deadly than plunderers, and malaria was, and still is, the greatest problem in the tropics. It might have stopped work on the canal as it did years ago when the French attempt failed. But the U. S. doctors kept the canal dosed with quinine until the swamps were drained and there were no more mosquitoes. That is still the only way. Kill mosquitoes, where that is possible. But kill malaria with quinine even if mosquitoes cannot be killed.

Old Grad Week

By JAMES BOLGER

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

"A S I live and breathe, it's my old pal and classmate, Matt Brown. . . . Meet my son, Matt."

"Charley Davis! Meet my boy, too, Charley."

Old Grad week in Pleasantville, and that scene was repeated hundreds of times during the day.

Matt Brown wandered about the old grounds. A huge smile on his face, he kept chuckling and always that right hand was ready and willing to clasp the hand of an old classmate.

By his side strode his boy, Jerry. He ran the mile in the fastest distance clocked, and the other boys pointed him out to their fathers as Jerry Brown, that sensational miler.

Jerry seemingly didn't hear the comments but Matt did, and his heart was warm within him that his boy had done so well.

"I tell you, Jerry," he said, "there's nothing like it. To come back to the old school and march along with your old classmates. Just wait till you've been out as long as I have and then see how you feel about it."

He chuckled again and glanced at Jerry. But a shadow had crossed Jerry's face and there seemed to be a look of pain in his eyes.

"I guess so, dad. I'll probably feel the same way."

Matt faced the boy squarely. "Tell me, Jerry," he said, quietly, his broad face set in determined lines, the same determination that had enabled him to reach the top in a hard fighting world.

"There's something wrong, and I want you to let me help you. Is it your exams?"

"No," said the boy. "I'm third man in my class."

"Well, then, what else can it be? Is it a girl? Money? I can't think of anything else. You know, Jerry, that I'm willing to back you to the limit. You don't have to hesitate around your old dad."

"I'd like to ask a favor of you, dad," Jerry said suddenly, swiftly. Then: "But—no, I guess I'd better not."

"Jerry!" There was startled surprise in the older man's voice. "Jerry, haven't I always loved you and helped you? Have I ever failed you in any way whatever?"

"Dad, you've been the best dad to me that anyone could have been. That's why it seems so small to find fault now."

He seemed to swallow a lump in his throat. "It's about your introducing me to everybody as your boy. Couldn't you change it? It would mean so much to me."

Jerry tried to see his dad's face but it was turned from him. Matt Brown seemed very interested in a group of grads across the street. Strange how they seemed so dim and shimmery.

"I understand, Jerry," he said slowly, thickly. "I—I guess I've been selfish, my boy. I'll try not to be that way again."

Jerry threw out his hands. "I knew it would hurt you," he cried. "But, I thought—" his voice faltered for a moment. He was thinking of the boy he'd never known. He went on after a little silence. "I know and realize all you've done for me, dad. I can never repay you. You never hid from me the fact that I was your adopted son. It never was a shock to me to find out later. But you don't know how I envy the fellows around here."

He looked at Matt again to see how he was taking it. But Matt stubbornly kept watching the group on the other side. Jerry shrugged his shoulders. There was a hopeless note in his voice now.

"Gee, dad," he said, "I didn't realize that you would take it so hard. Can't you see it my way? But as the other still did not answer, he seemed to sense the futility of his hopes. "Just say anything," he muttered, "it doesn't matter now."

Matt faced him with stormy eyes that had a vague hurt in them. He spoke quietly. "I'll call you anything you want, Jerry," he promised. "Just tell me."

"Will you, dad? Just once, at least?" Jerry's eyes were averted, his face was flushed with some inner joy. "Dad, just once call me your son when you introduce me?"

"Jerry!" There was a hushiness in Matt Brown's usually controlled voice, a mistiness in his eyes that made Jerry seem blurred and indistinct. "And all the time I thought—" his voice broke. He held out both hands. "Jerry, my son!"

They stood there, soul to soul. Suddenly a hand was placed on Matt Brown's shoulder. Matt turned. Could he trust his voice not to break?

"Dan Morrison! Meet my son, Jerry!"

Dan Morrison wondered at the fierce pride that was in good old Matt's voice as he introduced his son. Then he remembered. After all, it isn't everyone who has a son who is such a famous track man. No sir!

Spanish Moss Harmless;
Plant Is Not Parasitic

Spanish moss, which is so common throughout the far South, is technically not a moss but a bromeliad of a member of the pineapple family. Says the United States forest service. It is known botanically as Tillandsia usneoides and has many popular names such as Florida moss, New Orleans moss, tree-beard, and vegetable wool.

Spanish moss is commonly used for stuffings for mattresses, horse collars, automobile upholstery, and packing material. Seeds of bromeliads are produced in enormous numbers and are scattered far and wide by the wind, for the seeds have attachments for floating in the air, similar to those of milkweeds and dandelions.

Spanish moss is found principally growing on cypress and the broad-leaved trees. However, on wet sites, it occurs on several species of pine and cedar. Spanish moss, being a green plant, is not parasitic as commonly believed and, as far as is known, is harmless to its host tree. It belongs to the group of plants known as "epiphytes," meaning those which grow on the surface and depend upon their hosts for support but not for food. This explains why Spanish moss often grows on telegraph wire and wire fences.

Hornless Cattle Helped British Isles to Fame

Of the three breeds of hornless cattle for which the British Isles are famous, the Galloway, the Red Poll, and the Aberdeen-Angus, the latter are by far the most numerous. They have spread to the far corners of the earth and their peculiar blockiness of form and easy-fattening propensities have made them the outstanding beef breed of today. Scientists sometimes dispute as to whether the first ancestors of modern domesticated cattle were horned or hornless.

Historically cattle with distinct and dominant hornless characteristics were being bred true in parts of the counties of Aberdeen and in adjacent sections of Angus before 1800. In those days, says an authority in the Montreal Herald, the Aberdeen cattle were called "humies" and the Angus stock "doddies"; some were red and some were brindle but black predominated. The first pure-bred herd of Aberdeen-Angus cattle in North America was founded at Guelph, in the summer of 1876 when two heifers and a bull were imported to what is now the Ontario Agricultural college.

Origin of London

The few facts available indicate that London first rose out of obscurity early after the Roman occupation of Britain, in the First century of the Christian era. Its geographical position was the determining factor. A British oppidum, or stronghold, of the Catuvellauni that became known as Londinium and is today St. Albans was sheltered behind the Middlesex forest when Julius Caesar, having landed in Kent in 54 B. C., made his raid. Upon that he marched, crossing the Thames at some point that remains uncertain. Caesar makes no mention of London, the inference being that it did not exist. In A. D. 5 Cunobelin or Cymbeline succeeded to the throne of the confederated tribes in southern Britain. Early he transferred his seat of government to what became Roman Camulodunum (Colchester). London's site was well placed for the service of both cities. Its emergence was due to service as a landing stage for Continental trade with Britain. Tacitus refers to it as having been in A. D. 61 a place much frequented by merchants. The name London is not Roman but Celtic, and the Romans adopted it in their own Londinium.

"When in Rome," Etc.

The expression "When in Rome do as the Romans do" is nowhere to be found in the Bible. It is attributed to St. Ambrose, bishop of Milan, in the Fourth century. In a letter of advice to St. Augustine he wrote: "When I am here (at Milan) I do not fast on a Saturday; when I am at Rome, I fast on a Saturday." As quoted by Jeremy Taylor, his advice was: "When you are in Rome, live in the Roman style; when you are elsewhere, live as they live there." St. Augustine also refers to this in his own writings.

Ikon Painting Russian Art

Ikon painting is one of the few original Russian arts. Before the revolution every household, no matter how poor, had at least one religious picture before which an oil lamp constantly burned. The most famous center of ikon painting was Palek. A remote little colony, 30 kilometers from the nearest railroad line, produced works of rare art. These paintings found their way all over Russia; into the palaces of czars and princes; as well as the homes of common people.

Tombs Show Paint Durability

In ancient Egyptian tombs, wood furniture and mummy cases have been discovered that are still in good condition, although painted over 5,000 years ago. Wall paintings often are found intact, where unpainted wood and stone have disintegrated.

Cathedral Dancing in Seville

Seville is one of the few spots in the Christian world where ritualistic dancing is a feature of religious service. At the festival of the Corpus Christi, ten choir boys dance before the altar to the accompaniment of castanets.

Mastodons Once Numerous in the American Section

One of the many mysteries which still baffle scientists is the question of why the mastodon, American ancestor of the elephant, suddenly disappeared from the American continent. Mastodons, creatures about the size of Indian elephants, were plentiful in this country about 10,000 years ago. The skeleton of one of these huge, long-tusked fellows was dug up in Manhattan not many years ago, says the Washington Star, when workmen were excavating to build an apartment house. Many other skeletons have been found in eastern and western United States, fewer in the southern and central regions.

Why did these powerful animals, covered with long hair in northern climates, and armed with heavy tusks nine feet long, disappear? So far as we know, there was no change of temperature which would make life difficult for them. And, judging from the skeletons and the stomachs which have been preserved through thousands of years, there was no scarcity of food. For many of these mastodon stomachs are well stocked with food, still undigested, when they are found centuries later. Bones and stomachs and food have all been preserved in the ancient bogs where so many of the mastodons seem to have been trapped. It is, at any rate, these prehistoric bogs which have yielded most of the mastodon remains for modern study.

The gulf between mastodon and our modern elephant seems to be partly bridged by a creature whose bones were found in Texas. Judging from the parts of this skeleton, he was an elephant-like mastodon.

Another relative of the mastodon which inhabited America in about the same age, or even before, is the mammoth, another of the elephant's ancestors. He differed from the mastodon chiefly in the kind of teeth he had.

Pomeranian Dog Blessed

With Two Coats of Hair

The Pomeranian in build and appearance should be a compact, short-coated dog, well-knit in frame and exhibiting great intelligence in expression, activity and buoyancy in deportment, writes Ruth Mansfield in the Washington Post. His head and nose should be foxy in outline, the skull being slightly flat, large in proportion to the muzzle, which should be rather fine and free from lippiness. The hair on head and face should be smooth and short-coated. The eyes should be medium in size, not full or set too wide apart, bright and dark in color. In white, orange, shaded black and cream dogs, the rims around the eyes should be black. The ears should be small and carried perfectly erect like those of a fox. The tail, a characteristic of the breed should be turned over the back, carried flat and straight, being covered with long, harsh spreading hair. The dog may be white, black, brown, blue, orange, beaver, cream or parti-colored.

Made Generals Fight First

When an invading army entered Ireland in the olden days, the natives suggested to the enemy that a series of duels should be fought between the champions on both sides during the short winter days and that a general fight might begin between the two armies when the summer days would come and the light would be better for the encounter. This was an attempt to reduce war to a sort of parlor game and, in those old days, there was no artificial opposition to the suggestion by interested parties. The single combat events were so successful that the soldiers of the two armies fraternized and a peace conference was called. The invaders were given a part of Ireland to colonize and they and the Irish lived happy ever after, according to the age-old story handed down as part of the history of Ireland.

Podunk Was Indian Name

Podunk is a name which has long been used in a derisive sense to indicate a small or out-of-the-way rural town or village. Happily there is no such place listed in the United States Postal Guide, an authority on villages, towns and cities. It is found, however, that a small tribe of Podunk Indians lived in the Indian village of Podunk, Conn., during the Seventeenth century. But the whole tribe disappeared soon after the close of King Philip's war.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Original Claimants to Canada

Russia did not own Canada. The original claimants to Canada were the French by virtue of the voyages of Jacques Cartier, French navigator, as early of 1534, but the claims of France to Canada were not undisputed by Great Britain. The struggle for supremacy terminated in 1763, under the treaty of Paris by the cession to Great Britain by the French of Canada with all its dependencies, except the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Red Admiral a Butterfly

TOBACCO LOOKS GOOD AND HARVESTING IS STARTING
SAYS THE WEEKLY BUSINESS REVIEW

Retail trade in the greater part of the country continued to show improvement over the corresponding period of last year, according to the Department of Commerce weekly reports from 35 cities, just received by its Louisville district office. A feature referred to in several of the reports was that retail trade was being curtailed to some extent as the result of the exodus from trading centers of an unusual vacations. Wholesale trade, for the most part, made more favorable comparisons with last year than was the case in retail lines. Wholesalers were feeling the stimulant of demand for fall and winter merchandise. Reports from many of the important industrial centers gave evidence of improvement in the heavy industries.

The Louisville office reported: Retail sales for the week were about 10 to 20 per cent over the 1934 volume, increasing steadily.

Tobacco and corn crops showed great improvement during month, although rains are needed in some scattered smaller sections. Probable corn production forecast Aug. 1, at 60,214,000 bushels, compared to a July 1 prospect of 3,260,000 bushels, due to favorable weather conditions. State wheat production estimated at 3,097,000 bushels compared to 4,250,000 bushels last year. Harvesting of dark and Burley tobacco expected to begin during the coming week. Large number of fields topped, many have had first crop of suckers taken off. Ideal weather encouraging to tobacco farmers in Western district. Peach crop now being harvested in three western Kentucky counties expected to yield $150,000.

Kentucky Canning Co., of Paris opened last week, 125 persons given employment.

VITAMIN D LAMP

IS BUILT BY DR. GEORGE SPERTI FOR ANY AILMENT THAT CAN BE TREATED BY SUNLIGHT

Development of an electric light bulb to irradiate vitamin D for the prevention and cure of rickets and beneficial for any ailment that can be treated by sunlight, has been completed by Dr. George Sperti, director of the Institution Divi Thomae, Mt. Washington, it was announced today.

The new lamp duplicates ultraviolet vitamin D rays of the sun without danger of sunburn and is the result of more than 10 years of research, he said.

A new company, to be known as Science Laboratories, will be formed here to manufacture the bulbs and will be located at 426 East Fourth street. The lamp will be exhibited this week at the national convention and exposition of the Electrical Illuminating Engineers of America at the Neherland Plaza.

Dr. Sperti, former director of the Basic Science Research Laboratory of the University of Cincinnati, declared the new lamp, in addition to producing this form of vitamin D, will furnish visible rays for reading and workers.

The lamp consists of two parts, a small bulb within a larger one, and eliminates waves under 2800 units. Waves under the 2800 unit level are harmful according to physicians, except when used under the care of a physician for a limited exposure. The two bulbs are constructed of a special glass that acts as a filter and eliminates harmful rays.

Dr. Sperti, internationally known in the scientific world, is recognized as an authority on solar radiation. Several years ago while at the University of Cincinnati, his discoveries relating to solar radiations and vitamins were sold to a national food corporation for $300,000.

EGYPTIANS MAKE MOVIE OF PRINCESS' MUMMY

JERSEY SALE

WILL HOLD THEIR FIRST ANNUAL SALE IN RECENT YEARS ON THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24.

Boone County Jersey breeders through the Boone County Jersey Cattle Club will hold the first annual Jersey Sale in recent years on Thursday, October 24th. The sale will be open to all breeders of the county and should be a splendid stimulus for the further local development of the breed.

Mr. Chester Folck, of Springfield, Ohio, has been employed as Sales Manager. The sales catalogue will go to press September 20. All breeders wishing to enter animals for sale should contact Franklin Huey, Secretary, Boone County Jersey Cattle Club, Burlington, Ky., R. D. 2, not later than September 15th.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 31.—An intensive drive to secure ample projects by September 12th, to keep Kentucky's workable, unemployed on jobs for a period of a year was inaugurated Friday by Geo. H. Goodman, Administrator for the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. Goodman's action came directly upon the heels of an announcement from Washington setting September 12, as the deadline for submission of all Works Administration projects. He communicated directly with officials of all local governmental units within the state and with all Works Progress Administration district offices urging the importance of immediate and definite action. In addition, Mr. Goodman dispatched into the state a corps of officials from the Louisville office to expedite the procedure and to insure full cooperation between Works Progress officials and those of the various cities and counties.

Regulations governing the submission of projects were somewhat modified by Mr. Goodman to meet the emergency. Heretofore, it has been necessary to file complete plans, specifications and estimates on each project with the application. Until the deadline Sept. 12, Mr. Goodman said, rough estimates on projects will be acceptable to the Louisville office and to Washington, leaving more accurate details to be worked out at a later date.

Counties ble to assist financially with a given project, Mr. Goodman said, still will be required to do so on the basis of a sworn financial statement but in the instance of pauper counties it may be possible for the government to bear all of the expense of the project. Projects should be set up, he continued, showing all Federal costs allowable up to the limiting cost per man-year for the sponsoring unit concerned. The balance necessary for the prosecution of the work will be shown as a contribution.

All work that can possibly be combined should be so submitted, Mr. Goodman said. All road work within one county should be submitted on a single application form describing work to be done, estimating mileage of roads to be worked. The same applies to school projects and any other kind or type of work that can be set up on a county-wide basis, sponsored by one governmental unit.

City and county officials throughout the State, Mr. Goodman said, have been notified of the September 12, deadline. These officials, he said, are in a position to know what kind of work is anticipated and will cooperate to the fullest extent with the Works Progress Administration. At the same time Mr. Goodman has offered the services of his own organization in assisting various city and county officials in preparing their estimates, and obtaining the necessary funds from Washington.

Finally, Mr. Goodman said, and before funds are allocated by the Louisville office to a city or county for a given project all detailed data pertaining to the project, as previously outlined, must be submitted and approved.

In order to comply with the Sept. 12 deadline set by Washington Mr. Goodman pointed out that it would be necessary for all Kentucky applications for projects to be in the Louisville office not later than September 9.

"I repeat," Mr. Goodman said, "that all of the various classifications of labor are to be provided for and all types of work and progress must be anticipated. This will necessitate a wide variety of projects and for the assistance of the various sponsors I enumerate a list of some suggested types of work that should assist in planning a well rounded program for any given community: Roads, Streets, alleys, sidewalks, curbs and gutters, sewers, bridges, dams, municipal buildings and grounds, county buildings and grounds, hospitals, schools, stadiums, swimming pools, gymnasiums, playgrounds, parks and park buildings, golf courses, insect pest eradication, disease eradication, publicly owned utility buildings and grounds, airport, hangars, landing fields, education, clerical, library, research and statistical surveys, recreation, music, sewing, canning, gardening, tool and equipment, landscaping and public health.

"If Kentucky ever had a golden opportunity," Mr. Goodman said, "it stands in that position today. All any city or county has to do in order to secure improvements of a permanent nature is to file the proper application with the Louisville office by September 9, and then meet with the requirements Washington has set up for the program.

"This certainly is an opportunity for diligent and wide awake city and county officials to make a record for civic improvement that will stand as a monument to all of us for years to come. I have instructed my organization to leave no stone unturned to be helpful in securing these projects. They are willing to work night and day until the deadline is reached, so naturally the cooperation of the officials is all we ask.

"And speaking of cooperation, I should like at this time to express my appreciation to the press of the state for the wholehearted spirit of helpfulness it has shown since I became Administrator. We, at all times, shall attempt to merit a continuation of this feeling in the future. After all ours is a joint mission of improvement and good for Kentucky."

Concluding, Mr. Goodman, said, the Works Progress Administration was authorized to handle all projects up to $25,000 in cost to the Federal Government. All projects above that amount fall within the scope of the Public Works Administration, a separate and distinct government organization. There has been some confusion, he said, in some localities in distinguishing between the two organizations.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilford Rouse made a trip to Venice, Ohio, Sunday.

COMPLETE PLANS FOR CELEBRATION AT THE EXPERIMENT STATION

Plans have been completed for the celebration on September 25 of the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, according to Prof. J. D. Turner, head of a committee arranging the commemorative services.

Principal speakers include Dean F. B. Munford of the Missouri College of Agriculture and Senator Perry Gaines of Carrollton, Kentucky. Attending will be a large number of distinguished Kentuckians, agricultural leaders, scientists, educators and other interested persons.

Following a program of speaking, music and a historical review of the founding and development of the Experiment Station, visitors will inspect the laboratories, plants equipment, experimental plots, the herds and flocks at the station buildings and farms.

The Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station is one of the oldest and best known institutions of its kind in the country. It was founded in 1885, and has had three noted directors: Dr. M. A. Scovel, its founder, and Dr. Jos. H. Kastle and Dean Thomas P. Cooper.

Lillian G. Faber, well known music teacher and graduate of the Cincinnati Conservatory, has been appointed teacher of adult education in Boone county, through the office of Supt. Norris.

Mrs. Faber's appointment is in line with a nation-wide campaign conducted by the Government. She has just returned from Lexington where she attended training school at the State University as a preparation for her duties in this field.

Any person in Boone county who is interested in chorus, orchestra or class lessons for their community should get in touch with Mrs. Faber or the local school superintendent. The directors salary is paid by the Government. The community furnishes the holding for classes and each individual pays for music used. Classes are now being organized in Hebron, Burlington and Florence.

Mrs. Walter Brown, Mrs. Carroll Cropper and Mrs. Earl Smith, were snopping in the city Tuesday.

AAA COMPLIANCE

COMPLIANCE FORMS ARE COMPLETED ACCORDING TO H. R. FORKNER, COUNTY AGENT

716 AAA tobacco acreage compliance forms were completed the past week according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Eighty-four more regular compliance forms are being rapidly completed and should be submitted for payment the last of this week or the first of next. There are eight hundred 1935 regular contracts and more than a hundred special base contracts on which acreage compliance has been checked. Regular contract signers will receive in about six weeks, the 1935 acreage rental payment of twenty dollars per acre on forty per cent of the acreage base. Two additional payments designed as the first and second adjustment payments will be made at a later date.

Mrs. Ora Ross spent Tuesday night with her sister, Mrs. Ruth Aylor, of near Florence.

Charles Hughes was in Burlington a short while Labor Day. Charles is located at the C-C-C Camp at Ft. Thomas.

STATE FAIR

HAVE HAD THE GOOD FORTUNE TO HAVE SOME OF THE BEST ADULT PROJECT AND COMMUNITY LEADERS

Several Boone County 4-H Club members are entering their 4-H work at the State Fair this year. Among those members competing are Marcella Bradford, Hebron; Unit 1, Sewing; Helen Bradford and Ona Burton, Hebron, Unit 2, Sewing; Lola Mae Walton, Hebron, Unit 3, Sewing; Jeanette Edwards, Hamilton, Unit 1, Sewing; and Ella Ruth Black, Hamilton, Unit 3 Sewing, and Unit 2 Canning.

Boone County 4-H Club members have had the good fortune of having some of the best project and community leaders. The work for the most part reflects the splendid local adult leadership.

Robert F. Spence recently completed 21 years of county agent work in Kentucky. This makes him the oldest county agent, from the standpoint of service, in the state, and one of the oldest in the United States. He is agent in Rockcastle county and Southern Madison Co.

Breckinridge county fruit growers report a good crop of both apples and peaches, with prices returning fair profits. One orchard company has 8,000 bushels of apples, and several growers have been selling good crops of peaches.

Trigg county farmers who used the slow firing method of curing dark tobacco last year sold a total of 245,518 pounds of tobacco for a total of $38,159, or an average of $15.50 per hundred pounds. As a result many farmers will use this method this year.

A check-up made by County Agent W. E. Wiedburg shows that Christian county farmers shipped out during the fall of 1934 and the spring of 1935 a total of 452 carloads of lespezeza hay for which they received $54,240.

Developments shown at a field meeting of McCracken Co., fruit growers included a spray outfit giving spray material under 400 pound pressure to all parts of a 65-acre orchard; results of top grafting and "bootcutting" in pollinizing apples; terracing in orchards, etc.

Harrison Gross, of Stanton, has been improving the soil of a field that was almost worthless in 1933, and this year it will yield about 100 bushels of corn an acre. He used burnt lime and superphosphate, and seeded it to legume crops.

Bell county farmers, who used 1-200 bushels of soybeans for a good seedling, are still nooping for a good crop. Lee S. Creech seeded 10 acres late last year and had a plentiful yield. About 400 bushels of cowpeas were also planted this year.

BASE BALL NEWS

The game of ball at Midway Park Sunday, played with the Big Bone team was called on the 6th inning on account of Ray Payne, one of the Midway boys getting his knee hurt, when he fell at home plate. The score was 6 to 5 in favor of the Big Bone team.

The next game, Sunday Sept. 8, will be played at Midway park with Walton. Game will be called at 2:30 (fast time).

Midway Ball Club

KOREAN HAY

HAVE MADE SPLENDID GROWTH THIS YEAR AND TURNED OUT ONE TON AND A HALF TO THREE TONS PER ACRE

Korean lespezeza, the newest hay and legume crop in Boone County, has made splendid growth this year, and has turned out for numerous farmers from one and a half to three tons of hay per acre according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

Smith Bros., of near Burlington, the past week put up sixteen big loads of hay from eight acres, seeded last year. Dr. M. A. Yelton also reports that he cut a large acreage this year. Numerous reports on the crop from all over the county are coming in the office daily. Korean probably should not be cut later than August 20th in an average year, if the crop is to be ready for another year or else it should be cut after the seed are mature enough to shatter off for reseeding when cut. Cutting too late for the seed crop or mature may kill the stand for another year.

Korean lespezeza circular number 258 is available at the County Agent's office upon request.

LAWSON-DAVIS

Dr. L. W. Lawson, of Burlington, and Miss Alice Davis, of Williamsburg, Ky., were married Sunday, September 1st at the home of the former's sister, Mrs. N. M. Hill, by the Rev. F. F. Drowata.

The bride wore a Navy blue ensemble with a shoulder bouquet of pink tulleman roses.

Only the relatives and intimate friends were present.

Dinner was served by Mrs. Hill. Immediately after the dinner the bride and groom left for their home in Burlington.

CONSIDER RYE THE BEST COVER CROP

Soil experts connected with the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station give rye first place among cover crops for Kentucky. It will grow on almost any soil, may be sown early or late, grows through most of the winter, and makes good winter pasture. It also is a fairly satisfactory nurse crop for young grass and clover.

Wheat and winter barley and winter oats or other small grains that make satisfactory cover crops, but generally are not considered as good as rye.

Dr. Fergus points out that small grains intended for cover crop purposes only should be sown about a third heavier than when sown for a combined grain and nurse crop. Late seedings should be heavier than early seedings.

Other crops sometimes used for cover purposes and in addition for pasture include crimson clover, hairy vetch, and the mixed grasses and legumes.

Crimson clover makes a heavy winter cover that furnishes a lot of winter and early spring pasture. In addition to covering the soil it tends to enrich it, especially a soil builder and a good green manure crop.

The soils and crops men at the Experiment Station are insistent on the value of cover crops under Kentucky conditions, to protect the soil from losses of plant nutrients by helping to control erosion and leaching.

COLLEGE TO STRESS SOIL CONSERVATION AT THE STATE FAIR

A banner reading "When soil is lost all is lost" will strike the keynote of the soil conservation exhibit of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture at the Kentucky State Fair Sept. 9-14.

In the exhibit will be pictured two farms—one badly eroded and the other protected by terraces, contour plowing, cover crops and other methods of saving the soil.

The soil conservation theme will be further developed in an animal husbandry exhibit about methods of making poor land pay thru pasture improvement. This exhibit will show some of the work done in the development of bluegrass pasture on poor sandstone land at the Western Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Sub-station at Princeton.

The college's State Fair exhibit, which will be in its regular place in the Grandstand building, also will include 4-H club work, home demonstration work, weed control, potato growing, poultry raising, dairying, insect control and farm management.

Sixty to 70 counties will send trained teams to enter the 4-H club livestock judging contest on Wednesday, sponsored by the College of Agriculture. The Courier-Journal, the Bourbon Stock Yards Company, the Ewing-Von Allmen Milk Company and the Kentucky Hatchery. Fat cattle, swine and sheep, dairy cattle and poultry will be judged by the club members.

Courtesy and condescension is a happy quality, which never fail to make its way into the good of opinion and into the very heart; and allows the envy which always attends a high station.—Atterbury

SCHOOL OPENS SEPTEMBER 9

The Boone County Schools will open Monday, Sept. 9th. We hope that all pupils and teachers have had a very pleasant vacation, and are ready to return to school. Every effort has been made to have the schools repaired and in readiness for the opening of school.

All the state required text books will be furnished to the first five grades. Only one third of the books for the grades and high school were changed this year. Children will be given a list of books needed the first day of school which they can obtain from local dealers.

Teachers will be in conference Thursday and Friday, Sept. 5th and 6th at Burlington.

D. H. NORRIS, Supt.

W. B. Cotton and family were shopping in Covington, Friday.

SEPTEMBER 7

IS LAST DAY FOR VOTERS OF KENTUCKY TO CAST THEIR BALLOTS FOR THEIR CANDIDATES

Saturday September 7th is the day that the Democratic voters of Kentucky will cast their ballots and thereby select the candidates that will represent the Democratic party at the regular November election. As Kentucky is a Democratic State the candidates so selected, will be elected to all the different state offices for the next four years. The candidates for the office of Governor are known to nearly all of the voters out the candidates for the other state offices are not well known and taking the result of former elections the vote cast for offices other than that of Governor will be materially less than the vote cast for Governor. This is easily accounted for as the candidates for Governor have made a speaking campaign and their names are familiar to all. The Recorder has taken no part in advocating the cause of any candidate for any office as it is a Democratic paper and expects to support the nominees of the Democratic party at the regular November election. At the close of political campaigns quite a lot of political propaganda is circulated by the opposing factions and we regret to say that such is the case in this campaign. The voters should in exercising their right of suffrage for the best interest of the state, weigh well the statements of the candidates and their friends and see if they can fulfill the promises made in the heat of a campaign. You know that promises made that this, or that will be done, without expense to the taxpayers, is purely bunk, and can not be accomplished without money being provided for carrying into effect, overstatements and improvements in governmental functions such as improving our school system and constructing our state buildings and roads. These things can not be done without providing the money necessary for all those improvements and betterments of county and state. Taxes must be levied and collected in order that our schools, roads and other state and county improvements can be made. Nothing is free but the air we breathe, regardless of what any candidate or other persons say. Do not be fooled by any statement to the contrary.

C. L. HEMPFLING

HARVESTING ONE OF THE FINEST PEACH CROPS EVER PRODUCED IN BOONE COUNTY

Mr. Charles L. Hempfling, of Taylorsport, is completing the harvesting of one of the finest peach crops ever produced in Boone county. One block of 600 trees have turned off more than 3,000 bushels of the largest and finest quality of peaches to be found any where at any time.

The very best of orchard management practices including a complete spray schedule, cultivation and harvesting have been followed throughout the year. Twenty men were busy last Tuesday harvesting the crop. Practically all peaches on hill land were killed this year by the late freeze. Mr. Hempfling had just the right set of fruit to secure the maximum crop.

The young couple will make their home in Athens, Ky., where the groom is a teacher in the school.

The Recorder joins their many friends in wishing them a long and happy married life.

MORE ENCOURAGING SIGNS

Two encouraging items have recently appeared in the press.

One is the statement that farm families in the Middle West that have been on relief are again becoming self supporting, due to good weather, good crops and improved prices. In Kansas, Minnesota, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Wisconsin and Illinois the number of farm families on Federal relief is steadily diminishing and in some of these States it has dropped to the hundreds. The figures point to two conclusions—first, the dogged tenacity of farmers who have hung on in spite of misfortune until they became once more self supporting; and, second, the fairly small amount of short-time public relief that was necessary to enable them to tide over their troubles.

The other item is the reply of George Dock, Jr., a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to a statement that wholesale foreclosures were being made on properties on which HOLC loans had been granted. According to Mr. Dock, there have been 712 foreclosures on some 883,000 loans or less than one-tenth of one per cent. He admitted there will be more, but he insisted that all but a negligible majority of borrowers are meeting their installments, and added: "The 712 foreclosures to date largely represent deliberate delinquents, and include no cases of genuine distress."

WALL PAPER MADE EASIER

Wall paper manufacturers in convention New York have displayed for the benefit of the present generation samples of wall coverings in the mood of the nities of sacred memory, but with the cruelty left out. There must be many samples of that cruder age in wall paper still left for inspection, especially in furnished rooms of the more forthright type in which youth ascends and age descends in the journey through life. But Modernity has had its hand even on that survival.

It was the era of the cabbage rose, the "horder" to match. It was the heyday of reds and greens and eventually tarnished gold with "folding doors" separating front parlor from back parlor, both turned to utilitarian pursuits. The cabbage rose has returned, but stripped of its virulence. It has become of a pastel shade, soothing to the eye. The hall bedroom, once an abode of wretchedness, of ambition or decadence, has been neutralized. Wall paper designing has become "sane" in tone and fruit. Even the benches of intensely purple grapes have become milder and the clusters of leafage are less violent in demeanor. As for the gold trimmings, they have disappeared, to no one's loss.

Assumption is fair that the carpets of that strenuous day also have become subdued, to the gain of the aesthetic. It is possible for those of more than tender age to recall green roses and other horrors. If even a green cabbage rose has become, in the new wall paper, a tenderly vernal thing acceptable to restless sleepers, it is a step ahead. Let us properly venerate the past, but extract the bitterness from the draught. This seems to have been done, to the credit of a kinder generation.

We have a Mother's Day and a Father's Day and almost every day is Children's Day or a Grandmother's Day, because these folks are also fathers and mothers. But what about Uncles? Aren't the telegraph companies missing a bet by not insisting on an Uncle's Day?

There has never been a time when an Uncle was not esteemed an asset. Not by chance was the patron saint of the United States called Uncle Sam. It is always the Uncle in the story who shows up with a box of candy, a watch, base ball, or spending money, at the home of his nephews and nieces. Uncles spend all their spare moments doing good.

There is the Uncle at whose place one pawns the overcoat for ready cash, and there is the Dutch Uncle who sternly reproves ill-doing, and guides the young in the way they should go. There was Uncle Tom, with his cabin, Uncle Remus, Uncle Joe Cannon, Tristram Shandy's Uncle Toby, Uncle Wiggily, and many more, all good sound men, big-hearted, excellent citizens.

Although we are strongly opposed to any more marred days to be celebrated, we submit that the noble Uncle has been shabbily neglected.

RECOGNITION

Ordinary human beings recognize their friends and acquaintances, as a rule, by mental comparisons of the faces seen. The particular personality it represents. There are other ways, however, to recognize individuals.

The blind Senator from Minnesota, Thomas B. Schall, depends upon the hands and voices. "The feel of a man's hand bespeaks the character of his face," says the Senator, "and the voice is an instrument of the soul. It doesn't lie." And, almost everyone can recognize the identity of a friend when they see the absent one's handwriting on an envelope.

FAMILY REUNIONS

This is the season of reunions and homecomings, a custom that is, we believe, primarily a rural one although the attendance at the average assembly of this kind includes many from metropolitan areas.

It is a fine custom for people to gather once a year or every few years to renew family ties, old friendships and acquaintances and to visit old scenes and re-live old happenings.

We note in practically every small-town newspaper received a number of notices to the effect that this or that family will hold annual reunion on a certain date. In most instances, those planning to attend are asked to bring picnic baskets and womenfolk work over hot stoves and packing baskets full of good things for the festive board.

It's a pretty good idea to sample a cousin's cake or an aunt's potato salad once in a while, and to learn how an uncle is getting along with his harvest, and to get acquainted with recent additions to the family tree.

Every now and then someone gets married and the new wife or the new husband is someone new to know, perhaps one who will prove a friend in time to come. And there are likewise this new baby boy and that new baby girl whose resemblance to the family must be determined.

Unfortunately, from year to year some loved members are absent from the circle.

The reunion provides an interlude in everyday life that is unique and quite apart from the usual means of obtaining diversion from the daily grind. Everyone has a jolly good time at reunions and that covers a lot of territory.

We think that anyone who receives an invitation to attend one of these good times should give due credit to the tradition that has been carried out through long years and should do his part in preserving the custom by attending and participating.

We once heard a man of letters remark that it is good for a man's soul to mingle with his family and friends, and the reunion provides an excellent opportunity for such mingling.—Greenfield Times.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington—While congress is off the administration's hands, the courts are still on the job, and the bombardment of New Deal policies along the constitutional front may be expected to continue.

In this connection, AAA officials are confident that, with the new amendments just passed by congress, the processing taxes will be upheld. They think the objections which lower courts have found to the old processing taxes, and which lawyers generally believe will be found by the Supreme court, have been avoided.

Hence the AAA intends to do everything possible to produce a court test of the new processing taxes just as speedily as possible. AAA officials say privately that they have already picked the case on which to make the battle. It is that of the Hoosac Mills.

Washington lawyers who, no matter what their specialty, always figure that they are experts on what the Supreme court may do, and who certainly are more interested in the court than in what might be called the chores of the profession, are divided as to what will be the outcome.

Three possibilities, they admit, are open. The first is for the high court to throw the whole business out the window, holding that the assessment of such excise taxes is beyond the power of congress, in that these taxes are for a particular purpose and for the general need of the government, and that they are not intended to produce revenue, but to achieve a desired price level.

In this case the AAA would have nowhere to turn, but there is little doubt what the administration would do. It would continue to pay farm benefits, and in January it would ask congress to levy special taxes to provide the additional revenue needed.

Or the court might, as AAA officials believe it will, uphold the whole business, which would settle the question for the time being—probably until after the next election, anyhow.

Another Possibility

But there is another possibility. The court may decide that the processing taxes as fixed in the law are all right, but that the formula for changing them agricultural prices approach parity is an unconstitutional delegation of power.

Most lawyers agree that the injection of this "formula" for changing the taxes as the prices of products change was a grave mistake by those desiring to avoid having the court throw the taxes out. For they contend that beyond any doubt the inclusion of this "formula" proves that the taxes are not in fact excise taxes, levied for revenue; that it proves the only object of the taxes is to bring better prices for the farmer.

Now everybody knows that this was the real object. There is no question about that. The only question is whether congress has the right to levy internal taxes for such a purpose.

No one questions that the tariff duties are levied with this end in mind. It has been a protective tariff, and not purely a revenue tariff, for a good many years. In fact, the Republicans used to win elections right along on that plea, and even when the Democrats came into power—the tariff issue, back in Cleveland's time—there was no actual scuttling of the protective idea. It was just modified.

More than that, in recent years there has been a formula for changing these import taxes so as to equalize the difference, in cost of production here and abroad.

The chief difference, the lawyers say, is that there has never been any question of the power of congress under the Constitution to levy tariffs for purposes of protection as well as revenue, but there is grave doubt as to whether congress has the right to levy excise taxes for any other than revenue purposes.

Ways of Candidates

Once a man starts thinking he may become President of the United States, something very curious happens to his mental process.

It is proverbial that this applies to his own estimates of his chances for success. Especially after he is nominated. Men who traveled on the train with James M. Cox in 1920 know that Cox thought he had an excellent chance, right up to the last, though the Harding landslide was overwhelming. But he was not alone in this. Many others on that Cox train thought so too, including some pretty hard-boiled newspaper men. Perhaps the answer to this sort of thing is that people meeting a celebrity of any sort, and certainly a man who just may become President, do not rack their brains to say disagreeable things. They like to say things that the man will remember pleasantly.

But this is not all the picture of what happens to a potential candidate—a man who thinks the lightning may strike him.

Consider the way two men who desire the Republican nomination are going about it. To wit, Senators Vandenberg of Michigan and Colonel Knox of the Chicago Daily News.

Knox, who figured second only to Borah in the recent poll taken by Robert H. Lucas among Republican local leaders all over the country, is harstorming as few candidates have ever done. He is going up and down the country, making speeches every time he gets a chance giving out more or less sensational interviews in between, and generally attracting all the attention he can get.

While Vandenberg has been most cautious in the senate, and is not only declining to go places and make speeches, but is refusing even to give interviews. He has recently refused to repeat his often expressed views on a certain subject for a well-known magazine—an opportunity which few senators would decline, and which Vandenberg would not decline if he were not rigidly holding himself to a cautious line of procedure.

Then Take Borah

On the other hand, Senator Borah, who probably has been talked about for President longer than any living man, and gotten less close to the nomination at convention time than any body who ever aspired—if the roll calls of the conventions are accepted as decisive on this—acts just as though he were not interested. Right after his present boom started he proceeded to cast votes and make speeches which were calculated to alienate the conservative wing of the party. And this came at a moment when he was being considered as an excellent connecting link to weld together the two wings of the party.

Perhaps the explanation is that Borah has been talked about for President so long that he no longer takes it seriously, save in a complimentary way. Nobody knows the answer to that. People do know that he is tremendously interested in the talk. That story is true about his putting the slip of paper with "Borah for President," which a colleague put on his desk as a joke into a drawer, and then taking it out and looking at it half a dozen times within an hour. And it wasn't to figure out whose handwriting it was, either. His face, according to those who watched him, showed distinct satisfaction.

But it was not long afterward that he insured all over the lot, casting ballots and making remarks calculated to cause cold chills down New York and New England and New Jersey spines.

"Maybe he thinks they have got to be for him, and he wants the wild boys too—so his election will be unanimous," said a cynical commentator. He recalled the story of Hoover's asking a prominent North Carolina Republican, after the 1928 election, if he would not have carried the Tar Heel state even without the religious issue.

Gets What He Wanted

Very few times in history has a President obtained a greater measure of what he wanted from his second congress than has President Roosevelt. He actually suffered no important reverses except a few having fundamentally nothing to do with his program and policies.

Critics point to the World Court vote. Every President since Wilson has been for the World Court, and every one—Harding, Coolidge and Hoover—failed to get anywhere with it. Due to a combination of racial groups opposing United States adherence to the court, and to widespread and firmly frozen isolationist sentiment, many senators simply do not dare to vote for it.

Critics also point to the St. Lawrence seaway treaty, which Mr. Roosevelt strongly favors, and which does impinge slightly on his program and policies in that there is a power angle.

But the power angle had nothing to do with the defeat of that treaty, nor the attitude in the senate that made it futile to attempt to bring it up again. It is purely the seaway angle that operates against ratification. Opposition comes solidly from the Atlantic coast and Gulf states, whose ports would be hurt by the diversion of deep-sea traffic to that route. There is nothing partisan about it.

Some critics also point to the votes on the death sentence of the utility holding company bill. This is not to be discounted, for the President staked his whole fight on the death sentence clause—and so did the utilities in their tremulous, letter and telegram writing campaign.

Where Fight Centered

The most interesting point here, however, is that the utilities did not dare attempt to draw their battle-line more to their own advantage. If they had dared make a fight to eliminate any possibility of the holding companies being forced out of existence, for example, that might have meant something. The whole fight between senate and house, and between the President and the house, was over whether a flat day for execution should be named, or whether discretion to commute the sentence might be vested in a commission—a commission named by the President.

The remainder of the measure is drastic, but the utilities, though denouncing it, did not make a real fight. Plenty of lists of the legislation passed at the Roosevelt command are being printed. There is no point to repeating them here. The point is, nowhere did he fail to get pretty nearly what he wanted.

First Efforts to Lay

Atlantic Cable Failed

The American capitalist, Cyrus W. Field, was the moving spirit in the first efforts to establish telegraphic communication across the Atlantic. Shorter cables across the English channel, the Gulf of St. Lawrence and other waters had already been placed in successful operation. Mr. Field was therefore able in 1856 and 1857 to raise capital for his Atlantic Telegraph Co.

The laying of a cable was begun from Valentia, Ireland, on August 6, 1857, but some distance at sea the strands parted, and the effort was abandoned until the following year. The first effort in 1858 was also a failure, says a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, but a third try was begun in mid-July on July 29. The U. S. S. Niagara steamed toward the Newfoundland coast with one end of the cable and H. M. S. Agamemnon toward Ireland with the other.

On August 17, 1858, complete connection with the land lines was made, and the following message was sent over the wire: "Europe and America are united by telegraph. Glory to God in the highest; on earth, peace and good will toward men." Messages and replies from queen to President and between other officials followed and the event was celebrated enthusiastically on both sides of the Atlantic.

After two months the cable ceased to function and this disaster discouraged further effort for several years. In 1866, however, two cables were successfully placed.

Forks Were Being Used in Europe Back in 1603

It is difficult to believe that during the times of Shakespeare and Bacon few Englishmen used the table fork, and that the majority of them knew nothing of it, but a writer of old-time customs tells us that this is a fact, notes a writer in the Montreal Herald.

Thomas Coryate, an English tourist and writer who lived during the reign of James I., fixed approximately the date when the fork first came into use. He set out on a tour of Europe in 1603, and on passing into Italy the traveler encountered the fork for the first time, and listed it as a great curiosity.

In his journal of the tour, he said: "The Italians and also most strangers who are residents in Italy do always at their meals use a little fork when they cut their meat; for, while with their knife, which they hold in one hand, they cut the meat out of the dish, they fasten their fork, which they hold in the other hand, upon the same dish of meat, so that whatsoever he be that, sitting in the company of any others at meat, should unadvisedly touch the meat with his fingers, from which all at the table do cut, he will give occasion of offense upon the company as having transgressed the laws of good manners; in so much that for his error he shall at least be browbeaten, if not reprehended in words."

Bassoon Important Instrument

The contrabassoon (double bassoon) is a large and deep instrument of the double-reed family. It forms a broad and effective bass for the wood wind group, sounding like the tone of a deep-voiced organ pipe. The contrabassoon has a tapering tube about 16 feet long, and sounds an octave below the bassoon, just as the double bass sounds an octave below the cello. The contrabassoon, which is the deepest instrument in the orchestra, is not suited for rapid passages. It was first used by Handel at the coronation of George II, in 1727, and Haydn employed it well in his oratorio, "The Creation." The bassoon is singularly difficult to play; nevertheless, it is one of the most important instruments in the orchestra.

Famous War Songs

"Tipperary," the most famous marching song of the war, was composed on January 31, 1912, and sung the same evening at the Grand theater, Stalybridge, Lancashire. The composer of "Madelon," the French song which was most popular among the "pollus," was awarded the Legion of Honor, though this song never enjoyed the vogue of "Tipperary." The latter was regarded as a "second British National Anthem" by the French, and also, apparently, by the Americans.

Use of Sugar in China

Sugar was used in China as far back as the early part of the Seventh century. Plants were carried to Sicily in 1148. It did not reach Madeira until 1419 and the Canary Islands in 1503. Portuguese and Spaniards carried plants to the West Indies in 1510. It appeared in Barbados in 1641. Sugar cane was first cultivated in the United States in 1751. The plantation was located near New Orleans.

Ritualistic Dancing in Churches

Although ritualistic dancing in Christian churches was generally discontinued many centuries ago, it is still a feature of the festivals of Corpus Christi and the Immaculate Conception in the Cathedral of Seville, Spain. Ten choir boys stage an elaborate dance before the altar, accompanied by castanets.—Collier's Weekly.

The Poison Cup

Ethnologists say that when African medicine men arrange a trial by ordeal, the poison cup given a suspect to drink is concocted for good or bad effect, according to whether the medicine man believes the suspect innocent or guilty.

Dobermann-Pinscher Is

Among the Favored Dogs

The history of the Dobermann-Pinscher breed is unusually interesting, as the dog takes his name from the official dog catcher of the city of Apolda in Thuringia, Germany, a man called Dobermann. Having not much to do as dog catcher, Dobermann experimented around, being assisted by his pals, a grave digger and a bell ringer. The product of these activities was called "Bellings," an aggressive dog feared by all. Whenever Dobermann saw the result of his original work, he'd point proudly to "my dog." Thus, says an authority in the Washington Post, they came to be known as Dobermanns. Since then, about 1860, much work has been done with the original Dobermann, crossing and improving until the thoroughbred is the product. Just what dogs were crossed originally for this breed will probably never be known, although there are many theories—Thuringian terriers, herd dogs, pointers, shepherds and others.

Out of this experimenting has evolved the standard that requires the present-day Dobermann-Pinscher to have a beautiful wedge-shaped head, with medium-sized, intelligent dark eyes and erect ears, clipped to a point. He has a neck of good length, broadening into a well-developed brisket. The tail is closely clipped. The particular beauty of the dog is his close, short, dense coat of a great glossiness. He may be black or with clear and sharply defined tan markings or a symphony of brown and tan.

Maidens Sacrificed to the Indian God of War

Human sacrifice to the gods of war may have been widely diffused in North America. Dr. Truman Michelson of the bureau of American ethnology of the Smithsonian institution, has gathered considerable evidence, linguistic and otherwise, that a practice supposedly confined to the Aztecs and to the "Morning Star" rites of the Pawnee may have extended over the eastern part of the continent.

In the Mexican practice the heart of the victim was cut out with a stone knife. The Pawnee ceremony entailed the sacrifice of a maiden.

Doctor Michelson finds the Ojibwa had a specific word, agonakwe, which was translated as "a virgin whom pagan Indians place on an elevated scaffold in order to obtain success in war." The word, Doctor Michelson finds, can be traced back to two roots which would mean "hanging a woman."

From the vague references of the missionary journals, it appears that the Hurons burned a maiden at the stake on an elevated platform. It was a sacrifice quite different in principle from the burning of prisoners of war at the stake. Because it attracted so little attention a deduction might be drawn that the ceremony seldom was practiced, or may even have evolved into the symbolic burning of the figure of a maiden before any white men came in contact with it.

Henry VIII's Tennis Court

A tennis court at Hampton Court has been in use since 1519, says Tit-Bits Magazine. The court, on which almost every king of England, from Henry VIII to Edward VII, has played, is enclosed by walls and a roof—and has a stone floor. The tennis played upon it is known as royal tennis, and is entirely different from the modern lawn tennis. The net is five feet high at the ends and three feet high in the middle; the ball is made of strips of cloth tightly bound with twine and covered with felt; the method of play entails the bouncing of the ball against a penthouse which runs along one side of the court. Although for generations worn by players, the stone floor—last renovated in the reign of Charles I—had worn hollow in places.

First to Use Natural Gas

Erie, Pa., was among the first towns in the United States to use natural gas. The gas bubbled up through the water of a spring there and it burst into flame when a match was applied. So they called it the "Burning Spring." In 1831 a tower was erected over the spring, with a device for holding the gas as it issued from the water throughout the daytime. A pipe line made of wood conveyed this accumulated gas at night to the lighthouse on the shore of Lake Erie, where it served as an illuminant.—Oil and Gas Journal.

Salt Poison to Octopuses

A method used by some California fishermen to capture octopuses is to drive these creatures out of their hiding places with salt, according to Nature Magazine. The fisherman will pick out a particular crevice among the rocks which he thinks may harbor an octopus and toss a handful of salt into the entrance way. If his guess has been correct the octopus will slowly and reluctantly venture into the open, only to be grabbed and put into a sack by the skillful fisherman.

Use of "Ma'am"

Books of formal etiquette state that "ma'am" has gone out of style. A boy on answering a gentleman still uses the old-fashioned "Yes, sir," or "No, sir," but answers a lady with "Yes, Mrs. Smith" or "No, Miss Jones." A girl answers either lady or gentleman by using their names rather than "sir" or "ma'am." If the names are known. To answer a question with "Yes, Mary" would be proper.

"Killy Hawk" Identified

Slate, Rust-Colored Hawk
It takes boys to name—or nickname—frankly enough to describe a creature so one may easily recognize it; hence, the name "killy hawk." This small, slate and rust colored hawk, somewhat like a falcon or small parrot in shape, may be heard calling "killy, killy, killy-ee!" when alarmed or hunting. So, the name killy hawk often identifies the sparrow hawk most readily.

The killy hawk, says a writer in the Indianapolis News, will be seen perched on the tops of fence posts and telephone poles along highways and byways. She will often fly for a mile or so ahead of a slowly moving automobile, alighting on a pole a little ahead of the car each time until the car draws very near her perch.

She is a friendly little hawk, often seen about the farm home. Very graceful, the killy hawk will hover over a spot in an open field, wings beating steadily. If she spies the mouse or grasshopper whose movement she first glimpsed as she made a short flight from her lookout point, she will dart down and seize it in her sharp talons. Then she will carry her prey away to some favorite perch to devour.

She is a valuable little hawk, because she eats so many mice and grasshoppers, and an occasional English sparrow. Her vice is that she will prey on valuable small birds when other food is not to be found.

Amsterdam on 90 Islands;

Has Hundreds of Bridges

It is difficult to imagine why anyone should have selected the present site of Amsterdam for a metropolis. In the beginning the dam on which Gysbrecht II, Lord of Amstel, built his castle, was a dike almost entirely surrounded by gray ooze slashed with tidal rivulets.

Now Amsterdam stands on 90 islands, connected by about 300 bridges and separated by innumerable canals which are landscaped and regulated with all the exquisite perfection of the waterways of exhibition grounds.

Along these canals, except the most strictly commercial thoroughfares, are rows of hidden trees with branches bending down so far as to sometimes swish the still surface of the water.

The buildings of Amsterdam are of two distinct sorts: the old—none of which seems to have been troubled by carpenter or mason in at least 300 years—and the new.

Next to ancient houses with "step" gables topped by a stork's nest of tangled twigs stand extremely modernistic structures in the building of which Holland has been a pioneer.

The Shetland Sheep Dog

Like the shaggy Shetland pony, the sturdy little Shetland dogs are but a dwarfed version of their larger relatives on the mainland. In conformation they differ from the typical shaggy collie only in minor points, that is, the Shetland sheepdog's head is less long, the face less aquiline and the texture of the coat more silky. The prevailing colors are black and white, golden sable and white, or black, white and tan. The white markings are evenly distributed in the profuse neck frill, the collar, the blaze up the face, on the legs and feet and often at the tip of the substantial, heavily feathered brush. Seen at their best, they are graceful, agile, altogether beautiful little dogs.

"Mocha" Coffee

Coffee was originally shipped from the Port of Mocha, Arabia, on the Red sea, to which it owes the name "Mocha." But for about 200 years nothing has been shipped from that port, which has been closed by drifting sand. This name, however, has clung ever since to a certain kind of high-grade coffee. Abyssinia now ships a grade of Mocha, and much of that kind of coffee is shipped from Aden, Arabia. Traders from Turkey and Egypt go to Arabia, buy the crops on the tree, and supervise their picking and preparation.

Earthquake Zones

The great earthquake zone includes the area of the Mediterranean sea, the Azores, Italy, West Indies, Central America, Japan, China, India, Persia, Asia Minor and various branches leading off the main faults in the earth's crust; also the great mountain ranges contain lines of weakness in the crust of the earth. Professor Montessus, in his great world map recording earthquakes, lists over 100,000 which have been known to have disastrous effects.

Mountain Feared by Wives

Beautiful women whose homes are garden palaces are believed to inhabit the mountains of Hoggar in the heart of the Sahara. Here lived a race of lovely women who are said to survive to the present day. Arabs never try to climb the Gar-ti-Djanoun peak. Their wives forbid them to do so lest they fall into the hands of the beautiful inhabitants and fail to return home.—Pearson's Weekly.

Calavo Trees

Calavo trees are extremely long-lived. Maturity is probably not reached in less than 20 or 30 years. Some trees start bearing oily at eight or ten years. An agricultural explorer of the United States Department of Agriculture reported seeing in Mexico "huge trees, which must have been nearly a hundred years old, bearing excellent crops."

STATE FAIR NOTES

(By Garth K. Ferguson Secty.) Your State Fair program and exhibit entries for the week of September 9-14, in Louisville, are sufficiently advanced at this time as to promise you a fair in almost every respect as interesting and educational as any other great State Fair in the county. As usual, in the Horse Show alone, there will be presented the world's greatest array of blooded horse flesh ever gotten together.

Never, in your Fair's history, has there been so much interest evinced on the part of the women of the State as now. Committees of leading women in nearly every county have been formed for urging more people of their respective counties, not only to exhibit their products at the Fair, but to attend it on Fair week.

Another feature of special interest this year, is the State-wide Beauty Contest to be held on Tuesday night of Fair week. Women's Clubs, American Legion Posts, Motion Picture Theatres, County Fairs Luncheon Clubs, and other organizations, from one end of the State to the other, are conducting local contests for the selection of one of their most outstanding beauties from their counties as a representative in the finals at the Fair, where they will compete for very handsome cash and valuable merchandise prizes.

The exceptional interest manifested throughout the State has led the Fair management to offer, free of charge, a booth in the great Merchants & Manufacturers Building to any county for the display of its products, in which it particularly excels. All counties desiring a booth should at once write the Secretary, care of the State Fair Grounds, Louisville, Ky.

Remember, people of Kentucky, that the Kentucky State Fair in Louisville, is your Fair, so be there!

Two donations of rare books were recently made to the University of Kentucky Library. One, "The American Chesterfield," published by a member of the Philadelphia Bar in 1833, contained selections from letters written by Lord Chesterfield to his son, as well as extracts from other eminent writers. It was given to the University by Mrs. Eva Adams, Ewing, a former student of the University.

The other book was a bound volume of a New York journal, "The Spirit of the Times," published from 1851, and pertains to horse racing, agriculture, field sports, literature and the stage. It was donated to the University Library by Mr. David Knox, Georgetown.

The First Glass Factory

The first glass factory in America was built in the woods about a mile out of the first Jamestown (Va.) settlement. Its purpose, history says, was to make window glass and bottles for domestic use in the colony, and even, some suggest, for the export trade. The glass blowers, eight in number, were Poles and Germans, experienced workers from lands which for centuries had given to this craft a place in the industrial arts. The venture at Jamestown was short-lived, but the needs of the colony were no less than before. The idea of a glass factory had taken root, and in 1621 another attempt in glass-making was made. This time Italian workmen were employed to make beads to be used in trading with the Indians.

Women as Stencil Cutters

One of the first jobs for women outside the home in this country was the cutting of stencils for chairs made by Lambert Hitchcock near Hartford, Conn. Stencils for Hitchcock chairs were made exclusively by women. The decorations were applied with the fingers which were dipped first in oil then in dry bronze or gold powder before the part to be decorated was entirely dry. Fingers of the women which rubbed over the stencils became as hard as the tips as boards. Hitchcock was the first person to make genuine rocking chairs according to a tradition in the family. Previously, rocking chairs had consisted of straight chairs with rockers added as a separate item.

THE GARDEN

TIMELY TOPICS

(By John S. Gardner, Ky., College of Agriculture)

BEANS—In the ordinary course of seasons, frost should come in not much more than six weeks, but on the off-chance that it will be delayed this year, and if home-saved or left-over seed can be used, a planting of beans may still be made. If the frost should get them, not much will have been lost; on the other hand, if even a few beans mature, beginning to use the canned winter supply can be put off just that much. A way to "keep" green beans long after frost was described in these columns several weeks ago.

KNIPS AND LATE GREENS—This is the mid-point in turnip and late greens planting time. It will continue for a month longer, but in order to assure plenty of these things, every opportunity should be grasped to make plantings, whenever and wherever matured and harvested vegetables provide space. It would, in fact, do no harm to cover the whole garden with a mixture of table turnips, turnip greens, kale and mustard, for if they are not used for food they would serve the purpose for which farmers sow their "cover crops" and "green manure crops," material to turn under in lieu of stable manure. If anything, providing humus in this way may be more important to gardeners than to general farmers, for the former sometimes experience real difficulty in obtaining sufficient amounts of stable manure or at least, stable manure of proper quality.

TOMATOES—Backward tomatoes can be made to hurry ripening by pinching off suckers and branches on which as yet only blossom buds have appeared. Six weeks of good weather are needed for buds to become ripe fruit. This applies to tomatoes that have been allowed to run as well as to those that are staked. The pruning should not be done too closely, but only the extreme tips and the bud clusters removed.

WATERMELONS—A few more, and larger, melons than would ordinarily have been harvested, may be had by pruning much after the fashion just cited for tomatoes. Runners on which melons are set should be pinched off, two leaves beyond the melon. The same is true of the cantaloupes of the more vigorous type, Bender and Tip Top, ripening now.

PEAS—In the event there are seed peas it was impossible to plant this spring, or if inexpensive left-over seed can be gotten from seedsmen, a few peas may be planted now. Although the crop may not be as bountiful as one from spring planting, even these few fall peas would constitute a decided luxury, something about which to boast.

STORAGE—This is the time to be about seeing that the storage place is ready to receive the winter vegetables. The philosophy of the contemporary of the leaky roof, who said that when it was raining he couldn't fix the leak, and when it wasn't raining, it didn't need fixing, is not the philosophy of a good gardener. If there is at present no storage means, and if the expense of building one seems prohibitive, at least a "submerged barrel" or two may be provided. This makeshift, but effective, form of vegetable storage is described in Kentucky Circular 266, as are, in fact, several types of storage structures that many gardeners will be surprised to find they can build. This circular is sent free to those requesting it of the Kentucky College of Agriculture, Lexington.

STRANGLING THE BABY

Several million babies in your vicinity ought to be suffocated with in the next two weeks—baby mosquitoes. It won't be done, but the experts tell us it ought to be, and that strangling baby mosquitoes is very easy. Just run a film of oil over any stagnant water, and that's all there is to it.

If mosquitoes were just a nuisance it wouldn't be worth trying to kill their young. But these stinging pests are much more than a nuisance, for they suck up with the blood of their victim the germs of yellow fever and malaria. Yellow fever germs are scarce here, but where you live it's even odds that malaria in some form is carried in no other way but by mosquitoes. Coating water with oil kills the young mosquito as he comes to the surface for air. Most civilized countries try to float as much oil as they can in mosquito regions. But the job is never done completely and in ten days or two weeks the young mosquito is all ready for business.

What then—just a few more mosquito bites? The doctor knows better and so should you. Whenever you've been bitten, and feel the creeping misery coming over you, it's pretty sure that the mosquito has left a dose of malaria in you. The greatest malaria specialist in the world have recently issued a free pamphlet from the League of Nations Malaria Commission at Geneva. That tells us to take 15-18 grains of quinine a day the moment we feel the fever. There's nothing new in this, as any doctor knows, but we are apt to forget it.

Lesson for September 8

LYDIA AND PRISCILLA

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:11-15: 18:1-8, 24-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her works praise her in the gates.—Proverbs 31:31.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Meeting of the Door.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Meeting by the River Side.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Serving God in Our Daily Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Women in Industrial Life.

The central teaching of this lesson does not so much concern Christian women in industrial life as it does the gospel of Christ finding them while in the pursuit of their chosen callings.

1. The Conversion of Lydia (Acts 16:11-15).

So far as recorded, she was the first convert in Europe and in a real sense hers is a typical conversion. Observe the steps therein.

1. Attendance at the place of prayer (v. 13). There being no synagogue here, the accustomed place of prayer was at the river side. The accustomed place today is the church. However, the worship of God is not restricted to set places.

2. Listening to the preaching of the Word of God (v. 14). Paul took advantage of the opportunity afforded him by the assemblage of this group of devoted women to preach Christ to them. He was always alert, and prized highly the opportunity to tell the people about Christ.

3. Her heart was opened by the Lord (v. 14). The individual may place himself near to the means of grace and the preacher may preach the Word of God, but there is no hope of salvation till the heart is opened by the Lord (John 6:44, 45). While the salvation of everyone is dependent upon this sovereign act of God, yet we can be sure that he is willing at all times to do this for those who place themselves in the way of saving grace.

4. She was baptized (v. 15). The ordinance of baptism follows belief in Christ. The invariable rule in the early church was for believers to be baptized. While there is no salvation in the water of baptism, yet hearty obedience should be rendered in this respect.

5. She brought her household to Christ (v. 15). This was as it always should be.

6. Her expression of gratitude (v. 15). She thus showed signs of the new life in showing gratitude to those who had been instrumental in her conversion by constraining them to share the hospitality of her home.

II. Aquila and Priscilla in Corinth (Acts 18:1-3).

1. Why there (v. 1). They were expelled from Rome by the cruel edict of Claudius against the Jews.

2. What they were doing (v. 3). Though recently arrived, they had already settled down to the pursuit of their trade, the making of tents.

3. Paul finding a home (v. 3). While carrying on an evangelistic campaign in Corinth and needing work for his support, he found a job at his trade in the shop with Aquila and Priscilla. It was perhaps as he plied the needle that he related to his fellow workmen the wonderful story of his salvation.

4. Valued helpers to Paul. He more than found a home with them; he found priceless fellow-workers of the gospel. This was a most devoted couple. They are never mentioned separately.

III. Aquila and Priscilla Instructing Apollos (Acts 18:24-28).

Having been instructed by Paul, they were able not only to discern Apollos' lack of understanding of the gospel but to expound to him the way of God more perfectly. Here is a case where an eloquent preacher and mighty in the Scriptures was perfected in instruction by a humble couple of manual laborers.

IV. Aquila and Priscilla Were Active Christian Workers (Rom. 16:3).

Perhaps because of business success they occupied a place of prominence in the community, but they were pre-eminently known as zealous workers for Christ.

V. Aquila and Priscilla Endangered Their Lives for Paul (Rom. 16:4).

They seemed at some critical time to have endangered their lives for Paul's sake. They were so loyal to Paul that they are described as having been actually martyred for him.

VI. Aquila and Priscilla Had a Sanctified Home (Rom. 16:5).

When poverty and persecution made the house of worship impossible, the home of this godly couple became the meeting place of the saints. A private home may be made a sacred edifice and is so indeed when the saints gather there to worship God.

Work

Do your work—not just your work and no more, but a little more for the lavishing's sake; that little more which is worth all the rest. And if you suffer as you must, and if you doubt as you must, do your work. Put your heart into it and the sky will clear. Then out of your very doubt and suffering will be born the supreme joy of life.—Dean Briggs.

True Wisdom

True wisdom is to know what is best worth while.—Humphreys.

Bedlington Terrier Is Friendly and Good Guard

The Bedlington Terrier is one of the many good things that come from Northumberland, writes Maj. Mitford Brice in Answers Magazine. He was originally the long-legged (the Dandie Dinmont being the short-legged) offspring of common stock that owed much to Skye terrier influence.

The difference in those days did not even remotely approximate to the difference existing between those two breeds today. Bedlingtons probably being nothing more than puppies that were "on the leggy side"; nevertheless, the leggy puppies and the low-to-ground puppies found separate admirers, and from these beginnings two distinct breeds were evolved.

Although the Bedlington (this name was conferred upon him in 1825) is recognized as a terrier, he boasts many points that in other terriers would be anathema. His feet, instead of being round, should be long and pointed like those of a hare; while his back, instead of being short and straight, should be long and arched.

But in origin, general conformation, and character, the Bedlington is essentially a terrier. Although he is obviously unfitted for going to ground, he is an exceptional watchdog; and he is same and hardy. This little dog with the "twisty" coat, firm yet soft in texture, is recommended as a loyal friend and an effective guard.

Monte Cristo's Prison
Is Paying Institution

Although Edmond Dantes, dashing count of Monte Cristo, never existed except in the vivid imagination of his creator, Alexandre Dumas, the dark and gloomy Chateau d'If is real—as real as the rocky, forbidding island upon which it stands, asserts a writer in the Washington Post. It is real enough to bring good hard cash into the coffers of the French government, in the form of rent paid for the privilege of conducting the place as an attraction point.

The Chateau d'If had real flesh-and-blood prisoners in its time, but it is the imaginary Monte Cristo who brings sightseers to the little island, two miles southwest of Marseilles, France. To most of the visitors Dantes is real. They insist on visiting the cell where he is supposed to have languished; they want to set foot on the spot from which the future Monte Cristo of fabulous wealth was tossed into the sea tied up in a sack supposed to contain the dead body of the Abbe Faria—and obliging attendants point out these imaginary places.

Gulfs Not Salt Water Bodies

Contrary to general belief, the various gulfs of the Baltic sea are not salt water bodies. Through contact with the Atlantic the water is brackish, but the discharge of the numerous rivers into the gulfs keeps it sufficiently fresh to freeze as readily, or nearly so, as the Great Lakes, according to a writer in the Chicago Tribune. Again, the weather is much colder and ice does or packs 20 to 30 feet in thickness are not uncommon. At Riga the prevailing northwest storms frequently force the cakes of ice one on top of the other until the harbor floor, 25 feet below, is reached. Yet, this harbor formerly had a closed season as long as that of the Great Lakes.

Not Much Like Grapes

Grape fruit are nice to eat, but they aren't a bit like grapes. They belong to the same family as oranges and lemons, just as you would expect. At one time the fruit were called shaddockes, after the Captain Shaddock, who carried specimens of the tree from China to Florida. But that name wasn't thought attractive enough, and the growers sought another. They picked on grape fruit because these fruit hang in large grape-like bunches—unlike oranges and lemons which grow single. There is a legend that the grape fruit was the forbidden fruit of the Garden of Eden.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Mythical Blacksmith

A curious example of the persistence of legends is that of the Cave of Wayland the Smith in Berkshire, England. Wayland was a mythical blacksmith, yet for centuries and to within living memory, hundreds of men, feeling he was there invisibly, have left their horses at the cave's entrance, with twopenny on a rock, in the belief that if they withdrew for an hour, the animal would be found shod and the money gone upon their return.—Collier's Weekly.

A Bonnet Piece

A bonnet piece is a gold coin of James V of Scotland, so called on account of the king's head being decorated with a bonnet instead of a crown. James V was the first Scottish sovereign who placed dates on money and the first who diminished the size of the gold coins by increasing their thickness. In beauty of workmanship they approach the Roman coins. These bonnet pieces are among the most valued curiosities of the antiquary.

"Thumbs Down," "Thumbs Up"

Webster gives the meaning of "thumbs down" as a gesture of condemnation, and of "thumbs up" as a gesture to signify approval. There is some controversy among authorities as to how these signals were used, some claiming that "thumbs down" meant the gladiator's life was spared while "thumbs up" meant death.

Information has been received from the Commanding Officer of the Naval Reserve Aviation Base at Crosse Ile, Mich., that there are several vacancies in the October and November classes for the selection and training of aviation cadets in the Naval Reserve.

These classes are made up of college graduates under 27 years of age who desire to become aviators in the Naval Reserve. Providing they fulfill the various requirements applicants are enlisted in the Naval Reserve training. If they pass this training, they are appointed aviation cadets and are then sent to the Naval Air Station at Pensacola, Florida, for the primary and advanced flight training which last approximately one year. Upon the successful completion of the course then will be appointed Naval Aviators and ordered to duty for three years with the Aircraft Squadrons of the United States Fleet.

During the time they are undergoing training at Pensacola, the pay of the Aviation Cadet is $75.00 per month and after appointment as a Naval Aviator, his pay is increased to $155.00 per month. During his service as a Naval Aviator the Government issues him a life insurance policy for $10,000 and pays all premiums. At the completion of his three years with the fleet, the cadet is given a commission in the Naval Reserve; a flat sum of $1,500.00 and returned to civil life. It is expected that the cadet will maintain his flying efficiency by acting association with the Naval Reserve.

Further details and application blanks may be obtained from the Naval Recruiting Office, Federal Building, Louisville, Ky.

THE FARM AND HOME

Cook pork well. Raw or imperfectly cooked pork and its products may cause a disease known as trichinosis, which often is serious, and sometimes fatal. Pork, when properly prepared, is a highly nourishing food, rich in protein, fat and vitamin B.

Now is the time to do the final culling of low layers from the poultry flock. Feed is too high to keep poor layers. The egg outlook appears favorable to the owners of good flocks, and profits should be good where production is well maintained.

Many farmers do not cut alfalfa after about the middle of September, thus leaving three or four weeks for growth for winter. As cool weather slows up top growth, food material is stored in the roots where it helps to resist injury from heaving.

A tablespoonful of castor oil will often help a turkey come sick by eating green corn, especially if given soon after it becomes sick. It is best to keep turkeys out of corn fields; the early fall, or feed them so heavy that they will not eat the green corn.

Extensive tests indicate that more twin lambs are obtained when ewes are in gaining condition just before a during breeding time. Extra feeding, or turning ewes on good pastures, has proved the best way to get more twin lambs.

Cows on test in dairy herd improvement associations last year produced more than double the average production of all cows. The cost of feeding high producing cows was more than that for average cows, but not twice as much, which means that profits were better for members of improvement associations.

ENGLAND SOON TO HAVE PUBLIC TELEVISION

Television is expected to be in full swing in Great Britain within a year, says a report to the Louisville district office of the Commerce Department. The Postmaster General has just authorized the British Broadcasting Corporation to make arrangements with the Baird Television Company and the Marconi-E.M.T. Television Company for the provision of complete transmitting equipment for the operation of their respective systems. The managing director of Baird Television declared that it would not be long before every radio set in the country would be equipped with a television screen and that vision would be as usual as speech is today. He pointed out that with the ultra-short waves it will be possible to broadcast scenes in much greater detail than can be done with the medium waves. It will not be possible, he stated, to broadcast outdoor events such as air pageants listening in will be able to see all the details as well as hear the commentary.

WILL ROGERS LEAVES EVERYTHING TO WIFE

Los Angeles, August 29.—The last will and testament of Will Rogers, filed for probate here Wednesday, leaves everything to his wife, Mrs. Betty Blake Rogers. It was dated August 3.

The value of his holdings was given as "more than $10,000." Various estimates by close friends have been that the estate was in excess of $2,500,000.

The will, superseding other testaments, was made out by the cowboy philosopher just two days before he flew to Seattle to join Willy Post on the Alaska flight which ended in their deaths.

THE PURPOSE OF SOCIAL HYGIENE

Social hygiene has, as its general purpose, the perpetuation of the family as a social unit in such manner as will enable it to contribute, in the largest measure, to the happiness and usefulness of its individual members and to the best development of the community as a whole. Life and its perpetuation are fundamental to national existence.

Knowledge and understanding of the fundamental principles of social hygiene constitute an important and desirable part of our modern education. This is the common opinion of all leaders, men and women, in the nation's educational movement.

Social hygiene works for the physical, mental and moral health of the individual in his personal relations with other individuals and with the community. It promotes good citizenship, a clearer understanding of life and its obligations. What has the Social Hygiene Division of the State Department of Health to offer that will promote such an understanding?

1. Material, available thru twenty-nine Free Public Libraries in Kentucky, covering every phase of character training and child guidance.

2. Pamphlets, free upon request dealing with various phases of the subject. These include a complete outline on community recreation for adults as well as children, a lecture course for club women and a classified list of books for family reading.

3. Radio talks on parent-education. These are given monthly, from September through April.

4. Recommended lists of motion pictures. These appear weekly in all Louisville papers. Better motion pictures improve public taste and, as public taste improves, better, more wholesome, pictures will result.

5. Motion picture film on sex education, which may be obtained by paying cost of transportation.

6. Complete programs for clubs and organizations interested in making parent education a part of their club activities.

The Social Hygiene Division is always glad to cooperate with any public or private organization working for community health and parent education.

Mrs. J. R. Rouse is improving from an illness. Last week we reported that she had been taken to a hospital, but we were misinformed. We are glad to report she is much better at this writing.

HUEY LONG

HUEY LONG DIES BY ASSASSIN'S BULLET—FIGHT FOR LIFE IS LOST IN LESS THAN A DAY

Huey P. Long died on the dawn Tuesday at Baton Rouge, La., as physicians fought with every modern device to save him from the effects of an assassin's bullet.

The kingfish expired under an oxygen tent at 5:10 A. M., E. S. time in Our Lady of the Lake Sanitarium. He had battled against death for 48 hours, after the wound was inflicted by Dr. Carl A. Weiss, 30 year old Baton Rouge eye specialist, who was killed by alert body guards immediately after he fired the fatal bullet in a corridor of the State House. The bullet from Weiss's gun struck the Senator in the right side, penetrating the colon in two places, injured a kidney and passed out of his body in the back. An emergency operation and five blood transfusions failed to save him. He was 49 years old.

The body of Senator Long will lie in state in the glistening marble walled rotunda of the $5,000,000 Capitol he erected and used as the scene of many of his major political triumphs. From 1 o'clock Wednesday afternoon till 4 p. m. (Central Standard Time) Thursday, Louisianans will be permitted to pay tribute to the man who for eight years ruled them with an iron fist.

After the body is placed in the beautiful rotunda it will remain forever within the shadows of the towering thirty three story state house.

The funeral services, arranged by Seymour Weiss, announced that Rev. L. K. Smith, former Strevesport Christian church minister, who resigned to organize Long's "share our wealth" clubs, would officiate.

Senator Long was a member of the Baptist church. The services will be held at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon followed by interment on the Capitol Grounds at Baton Rouge.

BANG'S DISEASE

BANG'S DISEASE TEST IS AVAILABLE TO DAIRYMEN

Four Bang's Disease tests are now available to dairymen if necessary to clean up the herd according to Dr. Kenneth Ryle, veterinarian, Burlington. The second, 3rd and 4th tests will be made where reactors are found and it is necessary to clean up the herd. Only two tests have been available heretofore.

Dr. Ryle has tested several thousand head of cattle for Bang's Disease the past few months. The reactors are sold for beef and the government pays the difference between the appraised value and what the animal brings for beef up to $25.00 for grades and $50.00 for registered animals.

Boone county and Kentucky is now a modified Federal Accredited Free area for T. B. It is hoped that Boone county will soon become an accredited Bang's Disease Free area. The health and production of our dairy cows and the desirability of milk from disease free cows will be greatly increased.

TOBACCO ACREAGE COMPLIANCE FORMS OFF TO WASHINGTON

The University of Kentucky College of Agriculture announces that tobacco acreage compliance certificates for growers in most of the tobacco producing counties of the state have been checked and forwarded to Washington. As soon as they have been approved at the AAA headquarters the rental payments will be due growers.

Burley growers will receive $20 an acre and dark tobacco producers $12 an acre for land rented to the Government, which is 40 per cent of their bases. It is thought that the total amount of money to be received by growers this fall as rent will be between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000.

Approximately 101,330 tobacco growers in Kentucky are cooperating in the adjustment program this year. These include 75,530 producers of burley, 14,500 growers of fire-cured and 11,300 growers of dark air-cured tobacco.

Glad to report that Mr. John P. Dunoon is improving from a serious burn.

NORTHERN KENTUCKY FARMERS MADE MORE MONEY IN 1934 THAN IN EITHER 1933 OR 1932.

Boone county and Northern Ky. farmers made more money in 1934 than in either 1933 or 1932 according to a recent analysis of farm account records completed by Mr. R. E. Proctor, field agent in farm management from the College of Agriculture.

The average of those farmers who kept complete farm account records in those years made 7.8 per cent net labor income on the capital investment of $10,187 in 1933, 5 per cent in 1933, 4.6 per cent in 1932 and 14.2 per cent in 1929. The 1934 income varied from a loss of $329 to a net profit of $1833 per farm.

The chief point of interest and importance is not the averages but the individual differences and reasons for these differences of farm incomes. Dairying, poultry and truck and small fruit crops were the most important factors in the Northern Kentucky farming system. Dairying with both the number of cows and the yield per cow ranked first in income, poultry ranked second and fruits and truck crops third. The farms with the highest net income had cows that averaged 6591 pounds of milk per cow while the farms with the lowest income averaged only 4375 lbs. per cow. The high farms averaged 201 eggs per hen and the low only 93 eggs per hen; the high farms had 24 animal units per hundred acres while the low farms scored 13.7 animal units; the high farms also scored more acres of legume hay and larger sale of small fruits and truck crops. The efficient control of farm expenses also proved an equally important factor with the average farmer receiving $1.29 for each dollar spent.

The larger the number of various factors the individual farm was the average in the larger the income for that farm. These factors include the number and production of dairy cows, poultry, truck crops, fruits, control of expenses, acres in legumes, etc. In other words the farm had to be good in a number of things rather than specializing in just one or two enterprises.

A separate study was made of those farms in the outlying dairy, poultry and fruit section. This study includes those farms specializing in general livestock and tobacco farming. The results of this study are available for those requesting same. Farmers interested in securing this study for their individual farms should enter their name for the Kentucky Farm Account project which starts January first of each year. Record books are available at the County Agent's Office in Burlington.

LIME STONE

PROGRAM WAS SCHEDULED TO START WEDNESDAY MORNING OF THIS WEEK

The crushing of agricultural lime stone under the Boone County Soil Improvement Program was scheduled to start Wednesday morning of this week at Hubert Conner's of Hebron. R. W. Auton, pulverizer operator delayed because of the rainy threshing season was scheduled to arrive at Mr. Conner's Tuesday afternoon.

Seventy five farmers who have listed orders for more than 6000 tons of stone to be crushed are anxious to get the work started. Many farmers are expecting to spread the stone on wheat and this fall in preparation for the seeding of legumes in the spring.

Joe Broderick, assistant county agent is working on the soil improvement program in the county and will be glad to test individual fields and advise on the lime and phosphate requirements in the growing of legume crops for any farmer in the county. All farmers wishing to have stone crushed or wishing to have their soils tested should notify the County Agent's office in Burlington. Farmers furnishing their own labor may have stone crushed at a cost of 55¢ cents per ton which is the cheapest price ever offered and the price will likely be much higher after the program is completed.

TOBACCO CROP

ONE OF THE BEST CROPS IN THE PAST TEN YEARS PRODUCED IN BOONE COUNTY

Boone county farmers have produced in the field one of the best tobacco crops in the past ten years according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Northern Kentucky with few exceptions today has the best crop in the state when uniform strong growth, and maturity are considered.

Recent rains and likely rainy and unfavorable curing weather that may occur in the near future may cause serious damage to the crop in the barn. Many a crop of tobacco is made or ruined in the barn during the curing process. Boone county growers the past three years have made a number of radical changes in the methods of handling the crop in the field. Greater attention and study needs to be given the handling of the crop in the barn during the curing period particularly in an unfavorable curing season.

The most important factors are a barn with a controlled ventilation system and equipment to use heat to regulate ventilation and moisture content during usual short but harmful unfavorable weather periods. Information on both barn and heat equipment is available at the County Agent's office in the extension circular on these subjects. This circular will be mailed on request.

OPENS NEW STORE

NOW COLONEL W. W. GAINES OF ATLANTA, GA.

Hon. W. W. Gaines a former resident of Boone County and now a well-known Atlanta Attorney has been commissioned a Colonel on the staff of Governor Laffoon of Kentucky. Colonel Gaines was for many years president of the Atlanta Board of Education, having been a resident of that city since he was 24 years of age.

He has many friends and relatives in Boone County and spent several days in this county a few weeks ago.

CARRIES COUNTY BY 241 VOTES

MAJORITY IN STATE IS OVER 25,000

Hon. A. B. Chandler, Versailles, has been nominated by the Democratic party as its candidate for Governor for the term beginning December 9th, 1935. It is now the duty of all Democrats to rally to his support and the support of all other Democratic candidates on the ticket with him. It is to be regretted that the campaign became so intense that the candidates and their friends made statements that would have been best for the party if those statements had not been made and given to the opposition ammunition for the campaign just preceding the regular November Election. The Republicans nominated their candidates at the first primary after first holding a convention that recommended to the Republican voters certain candidates and they were without trouble nominated. A united Democracy will insure the election of Mr. Chandler and the entire Democratic ticket and the friends of all the candidates should now put their shoulder to the wheel, and work for the success of the entire ticket.

Nancy Emily Dickey Hughes, widow of Joseph C. Hughes, died at her home on the Richmond and Beaver road, Monday, Sept. 9, at 5 o'clock in her 93rd year. She was 92 years and four months of age. She leaves one child, Emily Hughes Cleek, and a number of other relatives. Her grandfather, Thos. Kennedy, established and operated the first ferry across the Ohio River between Cincinnati and Covington and he also owned all the land on which the City of Covington is located. She was born in Campbell county and came to this county at an early age with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Fielding H. Dickey, where she has resided all of her long life. Mrs. Hughes made all arrangements for her funeral, selected the funeral service and pallbearers, who were Charles Chambers, Robt. Chambers, John Taylor, John Bedinger, C. C. Sleet, Joe Coidins, John Delahunty and Ben Bedinger.

The funeral service was held at her home Tuesday at 10 A. M. and was conducted by Rev. Cecil Crabo, assisted by Rev. Traynor. Burial in Highland cemetery, where her husband rests. Mrs. Hughes was one of the oldest citizens of Boone county and had been prominent in church and social affairs of her neighborhood, and was looked upon as one of our outstanding citizens.

Work on the Bellevue and Burlington and Florence State Roads is progressing nicely.

Sunday evening callers of J. V. Woollet and family were Mr. Albert Moellman and family, Mr. George Uchtman and family, of Indian Hill, Ohio, and son Lucwell Woollet of Mason, Ohio.

AN EDITORIAL ON EDITORIAL

(Algonia (la.) Upper)

"Newspapers aren't like they used to be," said a friend of ours the other day. "They don't say what they used to say."

Our friend meant that newspapers today do not deal in personalities as they used to do. They take a broader view of situations and deal less in personal broadsides. There is a reason for this public opinion and support, after the advent of advertising as a means of support for newspapers, turned against the "meaner" who could find the misdeeds of somebody else and make editorial comment. In a way we sympathize with those souls, most of whom have departed. They spoke their minds, and let the chips fall where they would.

If a newspaper today dealt more in personalities it would be much livelier vehicle but it would also come to be classified as a place where the editor took out his personal grudges, or had a bone to pick, which he did in public. Occasionally, even today, something will get under an editor's collar which causes him to tarow off restraint and hammer home a good, undiluted editorial. And if the public liked that kind of material, they would get more of it.

But editors have found that they can usually put over a point or an idea without the malice or personal references that were the lot of the "good old days." Once in a while every editor feels the urge to put into print some of the things he runs across, and sometimes he does. Second thought usually slows him down. Maybe the newspaper would be better if editors can't have that second thought.

WEEDS

The impatient gardener, who as at last gets a scientific answer. The times has asked, "Why is a weed?" weeds, it appears, is not an unmitigated evil. It has its place in the general economy.

The question was considered important enough to have place in the discussions of a great international conference of soil scientists in Oxford, England.

Dr. Charles Thom, of the United States department of agriculture, declared that weeds are valuable conservers of fertility in some special cases in farming. They usually are annual plants that take up the fertility of the soil as they grow. When they die in the fall they are decomposed by various organisms and return the fertility to the soil in more available form for succeeding plant growth.

Weeds also have the stamina to make healthy growth on poor soil where other forms of vegetation will not thrive. And thus they offer resistance to erosion where such protection is most needed.

It will be noticed, however, that the agricultural expert did not discourage the use of the hoe in caring for the ordinary garden bed.

Editorial of the Week

ON A SIDE ROAD

People out on the side roads have a little more time to think. They have no long stream of traffic to watch. Or do not show there is anything wrong with the world when he takes a side road instead of the main highways on a Sunday afternoon.

In the time of mental, moral and economic warfare the side road is the calming influence. It is the perfect sedative. There are woody patches which have escaped one vandal hands of the city folk, and the deep, inviting coolness is restful. You have time to look at the fields of growing corn. You have time for much contemplation of nature. If you have time to talk with the man out in front who is sitting in the shade on Sunday you can learn that the hay is about a normal crop, that alfalfa is doing well and gives promise of a good second cutting, that corn is better than for several years past, and that we have had enough rain so we don't have to worry about a drought.

The white hens and strutting roosters in the yard, the horses with grateful shade of a spreading tree, the cattle out in the pasture working their way gradually to the gate through which they come nightly to the barn for milking, the grunting pigs rooting a little among the clover of the new yard into which they have been turned are all unaware that man is struggling with the problem of economists.

Out there on and along the side road people live normally and honestly. Nature is as it was 20 years ago. Men may be down in the mouth, but Omnipotence is going right along in the same old way. He keeps on unsmiling air, water, and earth.

Try the side road for a Sunday drive "far from the maddening crowd" and at the close of the day it will furnish you an almost any late summer evening with a marvelous pageant of the sky.

UNUSUAL ITEMS CLIPPED FROM OUR KENTUCKY
EXCHANGES50-Year Old Terrapin
Found in Caldwell County.

Boone Martin, who lives in the White School Section, near here, found a terrapin last week on which had been cut the initials of Joe White, of this city, fifty years ago. Together with Mr. White's initials on the terrapin was the date "1885."

When asked if he remembered putting his initials on the terrapin Mr. White stated that he formerly made it a custom to cut his initials and date on every terrapin he found, and that during lifetime he had possibly marked seventy-five in this way. He said he worked for some time in the White School Section about fifty years ago.

It is estimated that Mr. Martin found the terrapin within a quarter of a mile of where Mr. White marked it fifty years ago.—Dawson Springs Progress.

Boys Oprating
Watermelon Racket

Hobart Cawood, local undertaker, has discovered a "new racket" on Cumberland mountain. This morning as he was driving across the mountains, a truck loaded with watermelons was heading heavily around the goose-neck curve going south. Three boys were watching. One hopped the truck, and deftly tossed off two melons into the waiting arms of the boys on the ground, and then the three went skinning out thru the woods, to make their getaway.

On Cawood's return journey, he saw the same boys watching for passing trucks, and one hopped another truck coming up the mountain. This time the truck was empty, and in considerable chagrin the boy got off, empty-handed.—Mid-dlesboro Daily News.

Wrecker Crew Is Called To Save Cow

One of these all-night garages had a call the other night to send the wrecker out to a certain place in the county. When they arrived, members of the wrecker crew inquired where the car was. "It isn't a car, it's a cow," said the person who had called them. "She fell in the well." That was a new one on the boys, but they backed their truck up, attached their ropes to the cow and hoisted her up to dry land.—Lexington Leader.

SEEN
HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL
By Carter Field

Washington.—Business is recovering. Reports from all over the country prove this beyond dispute. However, two disturbing questions are in the minds of business men, and nobody really knows the answers. Which may be just as well, for the time being. If there were no disagreement about the answers, the effect might be very harmful indeed.

These questions are:

1. How much is government spending responsible for the present upturn? And its logical sequel: what will happen when government wholesale spending—or what might be called excess budget spending—stops?

2. To what extent will the new tax policy restrain new ventures? And its logical sequel: if new ventures are restrained by governmental action, what will happen as both government excess spending and new ventures shrink?

No. 1 needs no diagramming. Its ramifications, though widespread, are obvious.

No. 2 is very complicated indeed. New ventures have always been financed, in cases where considerable capital is required, either by rich men, or by a flood of investors eager to get rich quick—thinking of the amazing profits made by successful ventures in the past, and willing to risk their stakes on the hope of doing likewise.

So important is this latter classification that many shrewd financial observers have argued that this country—to continue to progress—must have "sucker money." They point to the astounding list of enterprises, today successful, which were started by "sucker money." In many of them the original investors lost their all. A glance at the big buildings, whether they be office structures of hotels or whatnot, in any large American city provides copious illustrations.

"Sucker" Takes Chances

The "sucker" knows the odds against him are heavy. Sometimes he seems to be deceived by the glib talk of the bond salesman or get-rich-quick promoter. But down in his heart the "sucker" knows he is taking a big chance. He does not need that extra thousand dollars, or ten thousand dollars, he has saved so painstakingly, for any pressing family purpose, in most cases. He is the saving, frugal type. But he craves to lift himself to a higher standard of living—to better (as he sees it) chances for his children. In short, to be rich. The only way the average "sucker" of this type has to get rich is to put some money into something which will prove a bonanza.

New Deal policies run counter to this. They have already closed the door to the highly rose-colored prospectus—to the alluring get-rich-quick ads aimed at enticing the "sucker." They would protect him from his own gullibility. But the tax policy goes further. If he does win, the government will take such a large percentage of his winnings that the average professional gambling house proprietor's percentage seems generous, indeed, by comparison.

It must be remembered that the average "sucker" has a theory. He will back hundred to one shots as frequently as he can raise the money, figuring that some day he is going to make a killing. When that killing comes, however, he steps into the upper income tax brackets.

As to those already rich, the higher the taxes are the less incentive there is, obviously, to take any risk in order to make more. The dice are too heavily loaded. The government takes a heavy cut of the winnings, but stands no part of the losses. Does not even permit them—with a small exception—to be deducted from income for tax purposes!

The question for both these classes of investors, or gamblers, if you will, is: where does the deadline come in? Nobody knows the answer to that. But it is known that President Roosevelt got only part of what he wanted in heavy taxes on big incomes, and in his sliding scale tax-against-bigness.

Ordinary business, of course, goes ahead, doing the best it can, regardless of tax policy. It has no alternative. It is in connection with new ventures that the tax policy may prove important. Radicals and die-hard conservatives alike agree that this policy pushes toward government ownership. Roosevelt does not. Only time will tell.

The Ohio Situation

What would a special election in Ohio show?

There is no public talk about it, but down underneath that question is something of more importance, both to administration and "anti" circles, than lots of things that are being openly discussed. It's not just a question of Democratic and Republican—conservative or New Deal. For there is even more concern over how Ohio would vote on bond issues than whether she would elect a Democrat or a Republican to the house of representatives in place of Charles V. Truax, who died some weeks back.

There was considerable publicity for a time over whether Governor Davey would call a special election. He decided against it. Publicly stated the reason was that it would cost the Ohio taxpayers just half a million dollars, as the election would have to be in the entire state, Truax having been congressman at large. Also that no single district of Ohio was being deprived of representation.

It just so happened that at the same time Governor Davey, despite all the harsh words exchanged between himself and Relief Administrator Hopkins, received an allotment of $20,000,000. He had come to Washington to get it, but there was no necessity, apparently, of presenting any arguments for it. In fact, he received word he could have it before he actually got in to see President Roosevelt. By a curious coincidence he also announced, just before he entered the executive mansion, that there would be no special election.

This did not pass unnoticed. Critics had a great deal to say about it, especially as the reverberations from the Rhode Island by-election had not died down. But there was very little comment in Washington, for the simple reason that few people knew anything about it, or the fact that there had to be a lot of fast footwork to prevent a special election on whether Ohio voters would approve a loan to match the $20,000,000 Governor Davey was getting with such ease from the federal government.

The point is that the constitution of Ohio requires that before the state government shall commit the state to any debt exceeding $750,000, it must be approved by a referendum.

Election Not Wanted

Neither Governor Davey nor the administration in Washington wanted any such election. They remembered the enthusiasm with which the Rhode Island voters had rejected loans the federal government was seeking to force Rhode Island to make—to be spent with larger contributions from the federal treasury, which did not have to be repaid—and they did not want a repetition.

So far as Governor Davey was concerned, he wanted the federal gift of $20,000,000, so he wanted the state to borrow its share. He wanted to pose in the role of having brought home the bacon. He was not averse to showing the folks in Ohio that Washington had to come across for him even if he had threatened to put Harry Hopkins in jail, and had to throw in some minor compliments for good measure.

So far as the New Deal was concerned, it did not want to risk another setback. It was willing to overlook Davey's harsh words, or pay almost any other price, to avoid just that.

So a plan to dodge the plain language of the Ohio constitution was devised. A corporation was set up to handle the expenditures, and this corporation is to borrow the money Ohio normally would get by a bond issue. Of course the taxpayers will have to pay just as much, in interest and sinking fund, as though the state had borrowed the money direct, so it would appear to the unprejudiced outsider that at least the spirit of the constitution of the Buckeye state had been circumvented.

But the really interesting thing about it all is that the New Dealers lacked confidence that the Ohio voters would approve the project, even though the federal government was paying more than half of its cost.

Fight Not Over

The Roosevelt anti-utility fight is not over. The inclusion of what is generally admitted to be the death sentence in the utility holding company bill did not mark the end of the administration's drive against the electric business.

In the very near future another blast is coming, which will hit not only the utilities themselves, but the bankers who, according to New Dealers skinned milk for the stock and bondholders, while piling up a capitalistic pyramid on which the customers have to pay "extortionate" rates.

It has been whispered around in New Deal circles for some months now that the next slap at the utilities would be on their alleged costs of distribution. In fact, figures have been mentioned in connection with it. Half a billion dollars is being wrung from users of electricity every year, the New Dealers say, due to what they insist are perfectly fictitious elements of cost in distribution.

Hence the first blast will be—or at least, is expected to be—the opening gun of a fight for rate reductions estimated at half a billion a year for the country.

Most of the attack will be on the interest charges figured as part of the expense of distribution. Obviously, a very large part of the cost of distributing electricity, once it has been brought to a city line, is the original cost of laying the conduits, stringing the wires through them, erecting the transformer stations, etc. To do this work in the first place, the electric companies borrowed the money.

It is the cost of that money that is the milk of the cocoon in the argument about to start.

Private companies in the electric business did not get their money very cheaply, from present standards, though they fared better than some other lines of business. But if the actual money received in the treasury of the utilities companies, and the actual amount of bond interest paid on it is computed, the rate is much higher than appears, on the average, on the engraved certificates.

FORTY YEARS AGO

From the Files of The Boone County Recorder

ISSUE OF SEPT. 11, 1895

The foliage on the trees begin to show signs of the approach of fall. Several of the public schools in the county began Monday morning.

That is not a public reservoir J. M. Lassing is building. It is a cistern.

Hay fever has been annoying Sheriff Roberts much for several weeks. He has it badly.

Benj. Aydelott, an aged citizen of Florence, died of paralysis last Wednesday.

Jeff Morris was tried before Judge Stephens and a jury; one day last week and adjudged a lunatic.

Geo. H. Walton, of the Pt. Pleasant neighborhood, dug 5 barrels of potatoes from a piece of ground 18x23 feet.

Henry and Chas. Clore, Asa Cason and Thos. Garrison delivered some very nice cattle to C. W. Riley of Builittsville, here Monday morning.

Mrs. Legrand Gaines is recovering slowly from the injuries she received last week. The small bone in one of her lower limbs was broken.

E. H. Baker is now sole proprietor of the livery stable on Sixth St., Cincinnati, having bought back the one-half interest which he sold some time since.

There will be no excuse for entering the winter with an empty coal bin. The roads have been good all summer, and both the coal and hauling have been cheap.

The authorities of Frankfort are urging the Sheriffs to push the collections of taxes that the treasury will be prepared to pay the school teachers at the proper time in October.

At one o'clock p. m., on the 21st inst., Sidney Gaines, committee of Lewis Wrightman, will sell all of said Wrightman's personal effects at auction. The sale will be at the residence of Jacob Wrightman.

More nice showers of rain are badly needed in this section. The earth was so very dry previous to the last rain that the moisture was soon exhausted, and the cistern and water courses are being exhausted again.

Leslie Aylor, than whom there is not a nicer young man anywhere, was in town Monday morning and obtained a license to wed Miss Ella Stephens, daughter of Ex-County Commissioner James J. Stephens, of East Bend.

A very large crowd attended the speaking at Hamilton last Wednesday evening—some say as many as 700 persons were present. Speeches were made by Congressman Berry, Shaler Berry, J. M. Lassing, Dr. J. G. Furnish, W. B. Adams and others. A bountiful supper was spread and enjoyed by all those present. The tables were spread in the yard at B. W. Adams' and no one was permitted to leave until his appetite was entirely satisfied. Mr. and Mrs. Adams were united in their efforts to make the occasion one of great pleasure to all present.

J. L. Frazier, of Union, was in town last Thursday.

John B. Winston, Esq. of Utzinger, was in town yesterday.

Mrs. R. D. Kirkpatrick is visiting her husband's relatives in Burlington.

Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Brady will attend the association at Walton this week.

Miss Lella Cowen is visiting her uncle James Cowen and family in Gallatin county.

Prof. Collins, with Miss Fannie Finch as assistant, began teaching the public school here Monday.

Mrs. Laura Foster and daughter left Monday afternoon for their home at Jacksonville, Florida.

Miss Ollie Kirkpatrick, who has been visiting her mother at this place, returned to her home at Mt. Adams, Ohio, yesterday.

Miss Hettie Riddell and Annie Garrison left last Thursday morning for Bellwood Seminary, where they will attend school this winter.

Mr. Frank Huey, of Muncie, Ind., has been visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Huey, of the Locust Grove neighborhood.

Mrs. W. E. Piper and son, Master Virgil, of Dayton, Ky., came down last Wednesday, to visit Mrs. Piper's relatives at this place.

Joe Reed came down from Walton Saturday, returning Monday. Joe is not looking as hearty as his friends at this end of the line would like to see him.

Dr. Furnish, J. M. Lassing, J. B. Berkshire and J. F. Blythe attended the speaking at Hamilton last Wednesday evening. They report a very pleasant time.

J. C. Revill has been confined to the house since Monday morning with hay fever. He has that disease very badly and has been annoyed with it for several years.

Miss Grace Talbot, of Home City, Ohio, returned home last Sunday, after a two weeks' pleasant visit with her cousins, Misses Ina and Kittie Gaines, of this neighborhood.

Commissioner Berkshire, Surveyor Vest, John H. Ryle and Thos. W. Finch are surveying the Thos. Underhill farm on Gunpowder, preparatory to a sale of enough of it to pay the indebtedness of the estate.

William Ackemyer, of the Builittsville neighborhood, had a very narrow escape from death last Wednesday. He had driven the beef wagon under a maple tree, and was in the act of getting out to unhitch the team, when lightning struck the tree, tearing off several large limbs and ripping the body considerable. Mr. Ackemyer was prostrated in the wagon, and the horses ran about 500 yards before he regained consciousness, when he succeeded in stopping them. He drove back to the tree which he found a wreck. Mr. Ackemyer's right arm was badly discolored by the electric fluid, but the skin was not broken. He has not entirely recovered from the shock, being rather weak yet. Wednesday was his second experience with lightning.

QUICK MEAL FOR COOL EVENINGS

Tomato Stuffed With Icebox Leftovers Is Good.

By EDITH M. BARBER

A VERY simple menu for the quick meal tonight has been chosen and we are planning on a night at least cool enough to light the oven for half an hour. We are using the old standby, bacon, which you probably know responds so well to oven treatment, and as we have the oven hot for the corn, the bacon can be baked at the same time.

The broiling pan with its rack makes an excellent baking pan for this if it fits in the oven. The tomatoes may be stuffed with whatever is in the icebox. Perhaps a few slices of cucumber from last night's salad, a little deviled ham, some lettuce which may be shredded very fine, make a delicious combination. Possibly instead we find a stalk of celery, some cottage cheese and anchovy paste.

Whatever we use, we must not forget a little onion juice or chopped onions with mayonnaise, which holds the stuffing together. Another tomato salad can be made of small whole tomatoes, skinned and chilled and served on lettuce leaves sprinkled with cheese and garnished with mayonnaise.

The melons, which are very good just now, have been chilled for at least 24 hours. Choose your favorite kind. If the night is warm, do not light the oven, but cook the bacon on top of the stove, remove the fat and stir the corn and seasonings into it. Cook five minutes and serve with the bacon. Eggs may be beaten slightly and stirred into the corn if you have not had your eggs at the morning or noon meal.

The menu then is:

Deviled corn Bacon
Stuffed tomato salad
Buttered cabbage
Melons
Whole wheat rolls
Coffee Crackers
Cheese

Method of preparation—Light oven.

2 cups corn pulp (fresh or canned)
1 egg
1 tablespoon worcestershire sauce
Crumbs
Make a sauce of the fat, flour and seasonings, add corn, egg slightly beaten, and worcestershire sauce. Pour into a baking dish, cover with crumbs mixed with a little butter and bake until crumbs are brown.

Corn Tartlets
Rich biscuit dough
1 cup corn pulp
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon melted butter
Pepper
1 teaspoon chopped pimiento
1 teaspoon chopped green pepper
1 teaspoon minced parsley
Roll out dough, spread half with ingredients mixed in order given. Fold over dough, cut in 2-inch squares. Pinch edges of dough together. Place in pan with small amount of fat—brush top with fat; place in hot oven and let brown. Serve with tomato sauce, or with chicken gravy.

Corn Fritters
2 cups grated corn
2 eggs
¼ cup flour
Pepper
Salt
Beat the eggs, add the corn, flour and seasoning. Drop by spoonfuls on a well-greased griddle and cook like pancakes on both sides.

Whole Wheat Puffs
1 cup whole wheat flour
1 cup milk
Salt
Into the flour stir the milk. Add the salt, beat well with an egg beater and pour into hot wet gins which have been well greased. Bake in a hot oven (450 degrees) 20 minutes; lower heat and bake 15 minutes. Cool and cut into squares.

Lesson for September 15

TIMOTHY

LESSON TEXT—II Timothy 1:1-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth. II Timothy 2:15.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Boy Timothy.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Missionary in the Making.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Training for Service.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Training in Home and Church.

Timothy's training would be the proper training for every child. In the measure that such training be given there would be a more abundant supply of Christian workers.

I. Timothy's Parentage (Acts 16:1). His father was a Greek and his mother a believing Jewess. On his mother's side at least, he had a godly ancestry. Usually the influence of the mother makes the son. A pious mother and a pious grandmother were back of Timothy.

II. Timothy's Training (II Tim. 1:5; 3:14, 15).

A wise and faithful mother and grandmother carefully nurtured him in God's Word. Through this training, he knew the Scriptures from his childhood. The faith which came to him from his grandmother through his mother did not come through the laws of heredity, but through careful training and teaching. Grace is not received by the laws of heredity. The factors involved in his training were a godly ancestry, a home where God was feared, and a diligent study of the Scriptures.

III. Timothy's Call (Acts 16:1-3).

While on his second missionary journey in company with Silas, Paul found Timothy at Lystra near Derbe. Perhaps he had been converted on Paul's first missionary journey, but, hearing a favorable report of him by the brethren, Paul circumcised him so as not to offend the Jews because his father was a Greek. This was not contrary to the decision of the Jerusalem council. It was a case where conciliation could be made without compromise of truth.

IV. Timothy's Character.

1. Of a retiring disposition (II Tim. 1:6). He had received a gift from God at the hands of the apostles, but it needed to be stirred up; that is, fanned into a flame. Such a temperament would mature in touch with a great personality like Paul.

2. Courageous (II Tim. 2:1-3). Having been stirred up, he was freed from the spirit of fear and deliberately identified himself with Paul in his suffering and trials.

3. Faithful. He continued in the difficult field of Ephesus during many years. He was the only man of the needed fidelity to minister to the Philippians (Phil. 2:20). The secret of his faithfulness in such a position was his fidelity to the Word of God.

V. Timothy's Ministry.

1. As fellow missionary with Paul (Phil. 2:22).
2. As pastor of the church at Ephesus. Here he labored for many years, tactfully meeting the difficulties of that great church. The Christian minister must believe in the Scriptures as God's Word and be able to rightly divide them so as to meet the need of those who hear him.

VI. Paul's Farewell Message to Timothy (II Tim. 1:1-14).

1. Personal relationship (vv. 1, 2). Timothy was Paul's spiritual son, therefore a peculiar love went out to him. This strong affection was a vital factor in influencing Timothy's life.

2. Paul's deep interest in Timothy (vv. 3-5).

a. Prayer for him. While a prisoner in a lonely dungeon, he thinks of Timothy and prays for him.

b. Longed to see him. This reveals the vital reciprocal affection between Paul and Timothy, and also Paul's inner self. He was intensely human.

3. Gives Timothy Earnest Counsel (vv. 6-14).

a. To stir up the divine gift within him (vv. 6, 7). To stir up means to fan into flame. Enthusiasm of the Christian worker has a tendency to wane and, therefore, needs to be constantly stirred up.

b. Be not ashamed (vv. 8-12). He must be willing to suffer affliction for Christ's sake.
c. Hold fast the essential truths of the gospel (vv. 13, 14). This means the fundamental truths of Christianity, including the incarnation, atonement, resurrection, and coming again of Jesus Christ. These doctrines have been committed to God's servants as precious deposits. Servants of Christ are charged with the solemn obligation of guarding them as the shepherd guards his sheep or the soldier that which has been committed unto him.

Two Rules

There are two good rules which ought to be written upon every heart. Never believe anything bad about anybody, unless you positively know that it is true. Never tell even that, unless you feel that it is absolutely necessary, and that God is listening while you tell.—Van Dyke.

Judgment

I have learned to judge of men by their own deeds; I do not make the accident of birth the standard of their merit.—Hale.

THE GARDEN

TAKING STOCK ACCOUNTS

(By John S. Gardner, Ky. College of Agriculture)

The fall of the year marks the end of the season's gardening, and is properly the time when a gardener should look back over his labors and, against them, check his results.

The continued wet weather that prevails in parts of the state changed the ordinary routine of gardening in several ways. One was in reference to fertilizing. Gardeners who have long been depending on manure as a fertilizing means, have written complaining of lack of thrift, and of general slowness of their crops. The reason was, in many instances, the leaching-away of the nitrogen that would ordinarily have been taken up by the plant roots. These correspondents were benefited by the suggestion that they supply side dressing of commercial nitrogen, but by reason of the advice coming late, time was lost, and consequently, some vegetables, lest the remedy be forgotten, and in order that it may be used, should conditions in 1936 repeat those of this year, a note should be made before the matter slips the mind.

Another common trouble, in the rainy parts of the state, was "the ground running together." This is serious trouble, for there is no immediate remedy, which is a preventive, however, which is to improve the condition of the soil. Soil "runs together" because it lacks humus. Humus is an end-product of the breaking-down of vegetable matter. If manuring is annually done, the humus content of soil is automatically maintained, but if dependence is placed in commercial fertilizer as the plant food fertilizing source, year after year, the soil actually becomes "burned out," not because fertilizer burns soil, but because vegetables remove the humus on which sponginess and easy workability of the soil depend.

Manure is not the only humus material gardeners may use, however. Specially sown "cover" and "manure" crops may be used; so may composted lawn trimmings, tree leaves and vegetable tops, provided there was no disease in the garden that might be carried over. For that matter, an abundant coat of weeds might be used to furnish humus except for the fact that in an efficiently run garden no weeds become large enough to be of much service in this regard.

Another extraordinary condition brought about by the wet weather in that part of the state so blessed, or so afflicted, was that of the prevalence of garden diseases, particularly the mildews and the blights. For mildew, sulphur is a preventive, if applied in time; at least a check, whenever applied. For the leaf spots and the blights, Bordeaux mixture is indicated, to check spread, but better, to prevent their coming, applied before any symptoms appear. Those gardeners who stopped these troubles, even after they had made considerable headway, will know how effective these measures were, but, appreciating the value of preventing their coming at all, they will want to be armed against them, and will make note to include in next year's garden budget a fund to cover the materials for these sprays, as well as for equipment properly to apply them.

Some parts of Kentucky were exceptionally dry and many gardens "baked" and the vegetables failed. Just what can be done about the weather is problematical, but one may conduct his garden so that a rain or two, more or less, does not matter. This is to see to it that the humus supply is kept up, and further to conserve early-season moisture by deep breaking and fitting and latter proper cultivation. If a dry season follows, precautions against excessive dryness apply in an excessively wet season as well, and are top preparation for a season that is ideal.

Saturn One of the Most Interesting of Planets

For a real astronomical thrill one need only look through a telescope at our heavenly relative, Saturn, observes a writer in the Washington Star.

The other members of the sun's family are interesting when viewed through a telescope, and the earth's moon can be seen plainly enough to be very satisfactory. But Saturn—Saturn is something at once weird and magnificent. A golden ball girdled at its equator by a fiery ring, there is something strange and yet real about this one of our universal neighbors.

The radiant girdle Saturn wears is made of tiny moons, very near to the planet, and too much attracted to it to come together into a single respectable satellite, some scientists believe. Each of these little particles of moon-stuff is probably not much more than three miles through, and astronomers believe that there are millions of stars in the Milky way.

There are nights when Saturn's ring of moon-stuff cannot be seen at all from the earth, because its narrower edge is turned toward us.

Besides its wreath of small moons, Saturn has other moons more distant from it than those in the ring, but compared to our own moon they are small and insignificant.

Saturn itself is nothing but a great swirl of spinning gas. It's days are short and pale, for the sunlight that reaches Saturn is only one-eightieth as strong as the sunshine on earth.

Because it is quite far off, it must travel a long path around the sun, and Saturn's year is 30 times as long as that on the earth.

Plant Propagators Find

Apple Is Most Contrary

Cornell university scientific plant propagators in pursuit of the mystery of life have taken a step that involves even greater mystery. They have discovered that the apple tree seems to be an exception to one of the most generally recognized principles in the production of fruit.

Everyone knows that parents share their characteristics in their children, and that in animal husbandry and plant propagation great care is taken to retain desirable characteristics by careful selection of parent stocks. But the apple tree appears to be independent of this law.

For the New York experimenters have found that pollen from the blossom of a red apple tree does not make the blossoms of a yellow apple tree produce red fruit or even fruit streaked with red and yellow. Nor will pollen from the blossom of a crabapple tree introduced into the blossom of a tree that produces big pippins or red astrachans, produce smaller fruit.—Detroit News.

Belief in Witches

Belief in witchcraft persists even in London. A sect in the East end regularly brews "dragon's blood" to keep on good terms with witches. Others seek to propitiate the "wise women" by hanging a string of rabbit's teeth above their doorways. One little known London treasure house, the Cumming museum in the Walworth road, contains a display of witches' remedies, all collected from Londoners in the last few years. A spiral shell, one learns, because of its apparently unending nature, guarantees a long life if carried in the pocket; a donkey's shoe covered with cloth and hitched to the bedpost drives away nightmares, while a pig's tooth hanging in a little bag around your neck is a sure guardian against fits.

Makes House Paint Peel

The national bureau of standards says that, in general, peeling of paint is due to moisture and absence of sunlight; such things as leaky gutters, nearby shade trees, damp foundations, etc., cause continuous moisture, and this gets in under the paint film and lifts it off. Another common cause of paint peeling is faulty priming. It is of great importance to have the oil in the priming coat sink deeply into the wood to get a strong foundation for succeeding coats. Two other common causes are applying the paint too thickly, and not using pure materials (especially the raw linseed oil). All paint that is peeling must be removed before attempting to repaint.

Model Village, 200 Years Old

In these days of model towns, entirely planned by one architect and not left to grow haphazard over the years, it is a surprise to find in England to come upon Milton Abbas, which before 1732 was a small market town built about an ancient Benedictine abbey. When it came into the possession of Baron Milton, earl of Dorchester in the middle of the Eighteenth century, he demolished the entire village and rebuilt it on a new site with each cottage like its fellow, so that his own lordly mansion might be more secluded. It is one of the most curious villages of England.

Statue in Heart of Forest

In one of Michigan's many acres of almost untouched woodland the traveler happens in some surprise upon a monument erected by man in the heart of apparent wilderness. The $50,000 bronze monument was erected a few years ago in the Huron national forest to commemorate the days of the Michigan lumbermen. Three figures, a cruiser, a logger and a sawyer were erected here as a tribute to Michigan's first industry. Huron national forest is otherwise a secluded wilderness of 600,000 acres.

Eighteen Square Feet of Skin Covers Human Body

If you average in size, it takes 18.3 square feet of skin to cover your body. This has been determined by a method developed by two Detroit physicians, for computing this difficult problem. One of the physicians, Dr. John C. Bugher, described the method to the American Society for Experimental Pathology.

It involves a camera and a mathematical formula. The patient is photographed in both front and side silhouettes after which the prints are made into standardized sizes. Then a planimeter traces around the borders of the silhouettes, automatically calculating the area within. A chartometer makes a second trip around the silhouettes automatically registering the length of the border lines.

This method gives results which are accurate within 1 or 2 per cent, while the error allowances for older systems was from 6 to 16 per cent.

Skin area measurement plays an important part in the treatment of thyroid and ductless diseases. An accurate knowledge of the body surface is essential for the estimation of basal metabolism.—Washington Post.

Believes Pepi II Reigned for the Longest Period

It is believed by historians that the reign of Pepi II of the sixth Egyptian dynasty was the longest on record. According to James Henry Breasted, Pepi II ascended the throne about 2366 B. C., when he was only six years old and reigned 91 years. The reign of Louis XIV of France is the second longest on record. He ascended the throne in 1643 at the age of five and reigned until his death in 1715, a period of 72 years. Francis Joseph of Austria-Hungary reigned nearly 68 years, from 1843 to 1916.

The longest reign in the annals of English history was that of Victoria, who ascended the throne in 1837 and reigned 64 years, until her death in 1901. George III reigned from 1760 to 1820, a period of 60 years. The reign of Pedro II of Brazil was 58 years, from 1831 to 1889. Alfonso XIII, born in 1886, was proclaimed king at his birth, he being a posthumous son of Alfonso XII. At the time of his abdication of the throne of Spain in favor of the republic, in 1932, he had ruled 46 years.—Indianapolis News.

Historic Desk Found

The study at Villa Sans Souci, the room in which Frederick the Great wrote and read, was completely transformed after the death of the great Prussian king. His successor, Frederick Wilhelm II, had the original rococo style of decoration removed and the room redecorated in classical style. In consequence of this transformation the furniture of Frederick the Great was dispersed and his favorite writing table was given to the castle caretaker. After that the table disappeared and was only recently discovered in a dealer's auction room. On hearing of it the German government secured this interesting relic for the nation. Thus the writing table at which the maker of modern Prussia worked for over 40 years has been restored to its original position. Carved from cedar wood and embellished with gilded bronze ornamentation in the rococo style, it was made to specifications in 1740.

Crayfish Short-Lived

Few crayfish (crawfish, crabs) pass through a second winter, says an authority. Eggs are laid in the fall, but the young do not appear until June. They grow rapidly until the middle of September, but do not grow at all from then until March. Most crayfish will live through the second year, but only a few pass through the second winter. Man has probably helped rather than hindered the crayfish, even though he does use them for bass bait. By catching the game fishes, minn, muskrat and raccoon, man has depleted those agencies which prey on crayfish.

When Most Ex-Presidents Lived

Between March 4, 1861, when Abraham Lincoln took the oath as President, and January 18, 1862, when John Tyler died, there were five living ex-presidents of the United States, a greater number than at any other period. They were Martin Van Buren, John Tyler, Millard Fillmore, Franklin Pierce, and James Buchanan. The number of ex-presidents living at that time was largely because no Presidents elected between 1836 and 1860 served more than four years.

The Coach Horn

A coach horn is a tapering horn of brass or copper used to sound a few simple calls. It has no keys and its range is limited to six open notes. The horn varies from 42 to 56 inches in length. The calls have a recognized place in coaching, and were, of course, more generally known in the days of the stage coach. The horn, like coaching, is employed generally in connection with racing or by the few coaching clubs in the wealthier centers, as New York, London, Paris, Berlin, etc.

Height of Icebergs

Few of the northern icebergs reach a great height; a berg of 100 feet being exceptional. The reason is that they are so carried by erosion on their way South that their bulk is lost before they are sighted. The danger from the bergs is not a head-on collision, but a grazing contact with the ice-foot which runs out under the water—a sharp and steel-like menace which rips the ship like a can-opener.

Organs in Churches Were Banned by the Puritans

The Puritans of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries were very much opposed to the use of church organs. Alice M. Earle in her "The Sabbath in Puritan New England" mentions that in 1664 the Roundheads had gone through England destroying the noble organs in the churches and cathedrals, only four or five being left unharmed. This prejudice was transferred to New England. Cotton Mather and other preachers attacked the use of musical instruments in churches. In 1713 an English organ came to this country and was given to the Brattle Street church in Boston, but the congregation voted to refuse the gift. In 1794 the church at Newbury obtained an organ and many unpleasant and disparaging references were made by clergymen of other parishes to "our neighbor's box of whistles" or "the tooting tub." Bassoons were almost the first musical instrument allowed in the New England churches. Such prejudices were largely abandoned during the last century, though, of course, there may still be individual churches or sects that refuse the use of organs on other than financial grounds.

Stone, Bronze, Iron Used by Japanese for Lanterns

The lantern still is used lavishly for decorative purposes on gala occasions and in religious rites and ceremonies. In Japan, writes Masor Warner in the Chicago Tribune. Lantern-making is an art in Japan, and the huge standing lanterns of stone, bronze, and iron are utilized for the adornment of private gardens and temple grounds in the same manner that the Greeks of old used marble statues. Lanterns are built and cherished as memorials to the dead as well as to light the way of the spirit of the departed.

There are 2,000 stone and 1,000 bronze and iron lanterns in the compound of Kasuga shrine at Nara. There are innumerable ones in Nikko, Tokio, Osaka, Nagara, Kyoto—at almost every shrine and temple in Japan. One is confounded and confused in any endeavor to estimate the days, weeks, and years of toil that went into the making of so many massive light holders.

THE FARM AND HOME

Culling of molting and non-producing hens is recommended for this month. Keep hens that laid through the summer and are still laying, not only because of their egg production but because the eggs of persistent layers should be used for hatching.

Experts predict continued good prices for hogs, cattle and poultry products. Dairy cattle are decreasing in number, due in part to a switch to beef production; but more plentiful feed may tend to increase dairy production.

Never add water when canning tomatoes. Pack the tomatoes, whole or cut into quarters, into jars, without crushing, and cover with boiling tomato juice prepared from small tomatoes. Add a teaspoon of salt per quart, partly seal, process and completely seal.

Eggs in the diet are important for iron and others minerals, for vitamins A and D and for protein. They are especially good for the children and should be eaten liberally by adults. Give children one or two daily, and adults two to four.

Cool weather and fall rains are good for starting bluegrass. For lawns, a recommended mixture is made of 4 parts by weight of bluegrass seed and one part by weight of timothy seed.

Failure to mow once rows, pasture fields and other places will prolong forever the battle against weeds. Weeds not mowed before they go to seed should be burned later in the fall, so the seed will be destroyed. The better way is to cut them before their seed mature.

Heavy seeding of alfalfa and other legume crops are expected in Ballard and Crittice counties this fall.

Poland led in the overseas population of England and Wales in the 1931 census, with 43,912, and the United States was second, with 37,420. Russia was a close third, with 36,133. Other figures, as contained in the census volume, just issued, are: Born in Scotland, 306,486; Irish Free State, 303,676; Dominion of Wales, 225,684. Greater London yielded the following figures: Welsh, 115,122; Scots, 101,872; Irish, 86,741; Poles, 34,145; Russians, 24,565. Greater London had 169,719 inhabitants who were born in foreign countries.

Favored Perfume Scents

Perfumes or scents preferred by English, French and Spanish people are: English, clean flower scents like lavender, heliotrope, violet; French, mixed perfumes of small flower odors, with no one predominating, but given a trade name, also lavender and thyme for household linens and lingerie, eau de cologne extensively for toilet; Spanish, heavy flower scents, as attar of roses, oil of jasmine, mimosa, mixed perfumes with basis of patchouli, amber, musk, myrrh.

Elephant Tusks Are Teeth

The projections on an elephant known as tusks are merely elongated incisor teeth in the upper jaw. If these teeth are broken off or extracted they are never replaced. They are preceded by milk teeth, which come out at an early age. Good-sized tusks are produced on both sexes of the African elephant, but they seldom occur on the females of the Asiatic or Indian species. In Ceylon only about 1 per cent of either sex have tusks.

Designing Postage Stamps

Receives Much Attention

Since a postage stamp expresses an obligation of the government, the same as currency or a bond, great care is usually given the creation of a new stamp, says a writer in the Los Angeles Times. The subject of the stamp is usually selected by the officials, who turn the work of preparing the designs over to one or more artists who are specialists in bank-note and stamp work.

Designing a stamp is not easy for any artist. The design must show the subject clearly, without too much detail to be lost in reduction. It must have balance, harmony, and be pleasing to the eye when reduced. The inscriptions must be worked into the design in such a way as to express the value, and perhaps the use of the stamp, in an efficient way without destroying the artistic arrangement.

Finally color must be considered, for a design attractive in one color may be impossible in another, and color is sometimes determined by use and precedent rather than by art. Not all stamps measure up to these specifications, but many do.

The artists submit several designs; alterations are made, some are discarded, and finally one is selected. A die in the actual stamp size is usually made and impressions are taken in various colors. Often, the issue is important, plates are prepared and proofs taken. If no further change is made these impressions become known as proofs. If the design is not adopted, they are known as essays.

Different Nations Have

Own Ideas About Bathing

The nations will never agree on the subject of bathing. Americans have the finest bathrooms in the world and are the nearest akin in this matter to the Romans of old. The Japanese, an exceptionally clean race, consider Europeans dirty because they wallow in the same water as the dirt from their bodies. They believe a shower to be not only a pleasure, but a necessity.

Among northern nations, such as the Norwegians, baths are taken in the open air, even in midwinter, in the snow. The bath is rubbed with snow and beaten all over sharply with a broom made of thin twigs. This stimulates the circulation and is extremely beneficial to the skin. In the deserts of Turkestan sand baths are the custom, and in some parts of India the body is rubbed with a mixture of mud and water. Although so different, each method cleanses and has virtues that suit the people and climate.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Tibetan Yaks

Animals must either adapt themselves to the climate they live in or die. The yak of Tibet is one of the best examples of this adaptability in animals, says the Washington Post. Living on the highest desert in the world, there is little heat even on the hottest days. And at night the temperature may drop 50 degrees below what it was at noon. The atmosphere is so dry it splits the skin. What plants there are are mostly thorny, and to look at the barren slopes one would think no animal could find nourishment, unless it could eat sand and rocks. It is the wind animals most fear and the yak has evolved a marvelous coat of hair to protect itself. Next to its body is a layer of wool. Over this is a hairy coat which hangs down like an apron from the huge body, especially around the legs. Its neck is provided with a strong mane and behind it supports a long tail of thick and bushy hair.

Blood Mostly Water

Blood is 90 per cent water, liver 69 per cent; and bone, the most solid material in the body, contains 27 per cent of water. The rest of it is made up of lime, phosphate of magnesium, phosphate of calcium, calcium fluoride, and a fatty substance, collagen, which may be reduced to gelatin by boiling. If reduced scientifically to commercial products, the average body would produce one large dose of magnesia, about two pounds of sugar, enough fat to make seven bars of soap, sufficient phosphorus for 2,000 matches, enough lime to wash a chicken house, and iron enough for two small nails.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Baby Bats Cling to Mother

North American bats usually produce two young annually. As soon as they are born the mother assists them to creep on to her breast, where they draw their first ration of milk. They cling to their mother's fur with their hind claws, partly supported when at rest by an upturned flap of her enfolding wings, making little cradles for the babies. They continue to nurse for about a month but after that are carried about by the mother as she windows the twilight air in chase of her supper and breakfast. When later the young have been weaned and taught to eat insects, the mother is able to take out only one, because of its weight.

Origin of Danube River

The Danube river has its origin in two small streams rising in the Black forest in southern Germany. It quickly gains in volume, and after the Rier joins it, above Ulm, it is navigable to the Black sea, although only a very small portion in its upper part. Of the total length of 1,770 miles, however, more than 1,600 miles carry traffic. About 100 tributaries are also navigable to some extent. The drainage basin of the Danube has an area of some 315,000 square miles.

Pirate Band Almost Took

Manila Back in 1572

The Spanish discoverers of the Philippines named them "Pearl of the Orient." Later they were named for Philip II. Magellan, first man to navigate the globe, went to the islands in 1521, and what remains of the fortifications he built at Cebu may still be seen, notes a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Manila dates back to 1571, and a native town under a Mohammedan chieftain formerly had occupied the site. A year after it was founded, and when its fortifications were none too good, it was attacked and all but captured by Chinese pirates. The construction of the present walls and other defenses were started about 1590, and at the beginning of 1590 Manila was the commercial metropolis of the Far East.

The population of Manila is nearly 300,000 persons, many Americans and Europeans included.

The city covers an area of about 20 square miles of low-lying ground, through which the Pasig river and several tidal creeks flow. Manila bay, made famous by Admiral Dewey, is to the west, and beyond it rise the Mariveles mountains. To the east the city extends almost half way to Laguna de Bay, a lake nearly as large as Manila bay.

Book Lice Prefer Poorly

Lighted, Warm, Damp Room

Book lice are tiny pale yellowish or grayish white wingless insects, measuring less than one-twelfth of an inch in length. They are louse-like in appearance but their habits are quite different from those of the true lice which are parasites of warm blooded animals and man.

Book lice are so called because they frequently are found among the pages of old books that have been undisturbed for some time. They feed on a variety of organic substances but owing to their small size and feeble mouth parts are rarely considered injurious.

Book lice sometimes occur in great numbers in dwellings particularly in poorly lighted, warm, damp rooms which are seldom disturbed. Ordinarily they occur only in small numbers in dwellings and under such conditions a thorough house cleaning combined with sunning and airing the infested rooms and the objects therein will give satisfactory results.—Montreal Herald.

Canada's First Cattle

The permanent establishment of cattle in Canada dates from about the year 1608, when Champlain brought a few head to the colony at Quebec. Cattle were placed in Acadia in 1632, and by 1671, according to a census of that year, the number had increased to 896. Butter and cheese making were introduced by the early French colonists, who had brought with them a knowledge of the art, and who soon were able to produce sufficient quantities for home requirements. With the arrival of the United Empire Loyalists in the years 1783-4-5 the art of butter and cheesemaking was extended to Upper Canada and dairying commenced to occupy a fixed place in the commercial life of the country. Early records show that in 1801 there was a surplus of butter at Kingston, Ont., and that some was exported to the United States.

Totem Pole Custom

No Indian in Alaska ever cut his own totem or had his family cut it for him. The custom under which these ornaments to the Alaskan landscape were erected dictated that the pole was paid for with contributions from all members of the family of a departed chief, no matter how distant. Members of the family could not partake of any of the manual work in connection with procuring the tree from which the pole was cut. This was done by strangers or members of another family living in the same clan. The carving was done by an especially appointed relative on the father's side of the deceased.

Narcissus Favored Wedding Blossom

The early Hebrew association of the narcissus and the marriage festival is still maintained in various parts of the world. In some districts of Germany and Scandinavia the bride always carries in her hand to the altar a narcissus bloom, while in the Christian churches of Georgia in the Caucasus no other decoration for marriage festivals is allowed. In that country both the bride and groom enter the church bearing in their hands blooms of Narcissus tazetta. In China the same flower is invested with a sacred meaning, and is known as the Joss flower, or sacred lily.

Foundations of the Ancients

The foundations of the ancients were generally established for rigidly specific purposes. Egyptian kings established foundations for the maintenance of their own tombs as well as for notable figures of their realms. Even such were socially significant because of the extensive staffs of priests and servants necessary for proper and respectful care of the dead.

Second Largest Oil Reserve

In the Panhandle section of Texas lies what is considered by geologists the second largest oil reserve in the world. Wherever oil is there also is gas. Experts in such matters have declared the Panhandle reservoir contained enough gas to supply every legitimate need in this country more than a century.

Apples From A

Tree 100 Years Old
Mr. E. L. Napier, of the Mt. Union section, brought to our office last Saturday, a small twig containing six large apples. These papples were small sweet apples from a tree on his farm over 100 years old. Mr. Napier said the tree started from a small switch, which his grandmother brought from Fountain Head, Tenn., as a riding switch more than 100 years ago. She planted it on the Napier farm and it grew to the tree which stands today. The tree has been transplanted one time and Mr. Napier says he has gathered numberless bushels of apples from it during his life time.

Alibi Witness

By GEORGE CRONYN

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

FRANK KOONTZ, alias Kid Hollowell, was on trial for murder. He was a rural gangster who had done time for robbery and assault; he was suspected of being one of the trio who had staged the Breilton bank holdup, in which the cashier was slain. On a hot tip Trooper Gary had gone alone into the Oak Ridge district and was shot from ambush on the road leading into Durham Four Corners.

The crime occurred on Saturday, at exactly 10:35 a. m., the moment when the trooper's watch stopped as he fell against a rock.

"Martin Chubb take the stand!" This was the surprise witness for the defense, it was rumored, who would establish an alibi for the young convict who had viewed the proceedings with such a cool and impassive demeanor. So far the state, in the person of the fiery prosecuting attorney, had been unable to pin anything definite upon the defendant. He stood a chance of retrial with no more serious charge than carrying a concealed weapon. The weapon was a revolver; Trooper Gary had been riddled with buckshot.

Martin Chubb was sworn in: a woodsman, tall, lean, grizzled, clad in blue jumpers and a faded flannel shirt, with keen gray eyes and a dignity that plainly made a favorable impression upon the jury and auditors. He deposed that he was seventy-two, a widower, by trade a sawyer and axe-man. "While the mill was up there, but now mostly cuttin' cord wood for the folks in Breilton, which don't bring in so much." The defense attorney proceeded with the examination of the witness.

"You live alone on Oak Ridge?" "Yes sir, all alone. My shack is on the wood road near the top."

"Where do you get your mail?"

"In Breilton."

"How often do you go for your mail?"

"Every Saturday morning."

"What time do you leave your house?"

"Reg'lar at eight o'clock. I got a car, 1924 model, but she still runs."

The court room tittered. The judge rapped for order.

"What do you do in Breilton?"

"Well, I go to the store and lay in a stock of supplies and thin salt pork and beans, and mebbe a sack of flour, if I'm out. Then I look at all the pretty things in the store windows."

Then I go down to see the 10:15 come in, and back to the post office to get the last mail, which is 10:30, and mebbe I stop to open up the Rural Gazette before I trapse along home."

"On this Saturday, the seventeenth of the month, you were in the Breilton post office at 10:30 as usual?"

"Yes sir, as usual."

"Did you—I ask you to search your memory carefully. Mr. Chubb—did you at that time see in the post office any person that you now recognize in this court room?"

Breathless silence; the audience craned their necks; the prisoner maintained an air of utter indifference.

Martin Chubb slowly raised a long arm and, pointing a lean finger at the accused, said distinctly, "I seen that young feller in the Breilton post office about half past ten!"

"What was he doing there?"

"He was looking at an army enlistment card."

"Are you sure that is the man?"

"Sartin sure! That scar on the lip I wouldn't mistake!"

"That is all for the defense, Your Honor!"

The prosecuting attorney began the cross examination. Martin Chubb's testimony remained unshaken, his gray eyes candid, his voice steady. The prosecuting attorney unrolled a large map of the Oak Ridge district and tacked it up for the jury to see.

"Mr. Chubb, I ask you if the cross on this map indicates the location of your home."

The witness peered at the map. "Yes sir, near as I kin figger."

"You have always lived there?"

"No sir. Before my wife died I lived down below, in Coon Hollow."

"Have you any children, Mr. Chubb?"

For a second the witness hesitated, then he said clearly, "We had one son. He never come back from the war."

The prosecuting attorney's lip curled sardonically. "Mr. Chubb," he said coldly, "the county records show that you were married 24 years ago. Did your son go to war at the age of six or seven?"

The lips of the witness moved, but no sound came forth.

"Mr. Chubb," continued the attorney relentlessly, "if I say that your son, who, you claim, went to war, is alive today—alive, a thief, a robber, a convict, a—"

"Object!" shouted the defense attorney angrily.

"Objection sustained!"

"Mr. Chubb," the prosecuting attorney went on more gently, "if you have fled about the age of your son, you are guilty of perjury!"

The woodsman was trembling; he half rose to his feet; suddenly he pitched forward from the witness chair.

"Clear the court!" cried the judge.

"Just a hunch," said the brilliant attorney later. "Similarity of names—Coon Hollow, and the aliases, Koontz and Hollowell. So I looked up the record. Martin Chubb was not involved in any of the crimes. He was merely protecting his only son; we found the shotgun buried in the old man's shed."

Mulligan Does His Duty

By FRANK EVANS

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

"TIM, old timer, what's the matter? You haven't been acting like yourself for weeks, Sick?"

Officer Tim Mulligan continued to shine the badge on the front of his coat with his sleeve.

"Spring fever, mebbe, lieutenant. Besides, I'm gettin' old."

The men gathered in groups about the police station looked up and laughed. Lieutenant Murphy, at the desk, shook his head.

"You old, Tim? Never! Just as young as the day you laid the force—31 years ago... a bridegroom of two days."

"N' Molly 'n' me didn't take a honeymoon for eight yrs... when the little tad was just 'year old."

He sat down he jily and refused a proffered tin of tobacco. As Mulligan was about to leave, Lieutenant Murphy called to him:

"Better see a doctor, Tim. We can't afford to lose Tim Mulligan after 31 years of duty. You want to think about Molly too, and the little tad."

Tim Mulligan smiled and swung his night club jauntily.

"Just you quit your worryin' about me, Faith, and I'm younger than all the rest 'o' you 'Nights."

Murphy laid down his pen and strolled over to a group of officers.

"I say, fellows, have you noticed anything wrong with Mulligan? He's been actin' queer lately."

"We noticed it—but he won't talk about it. Says he's all right. I met Molly in the grocery store yesterday and she looked as if she had been cryin'."

But when I told her she looked younger than she did 20 years ago, she said I'd been kissin' the blarney stone. A fine woman, Molly Mulligan."

"What's the kid 'n' ling now?" asked Koestling as he bent over and tied his shoe. "Hope he makes them proud of him. They sacrificed a lot to give him an education. Tim said one thing that boy must have was learnin'! He certainly was proud of those report cards..."

"I'm told he isn't all Tim and Molly would have him be," said Jones over his evening paper. "Don't keep jobs... regular sheik and dance hound..."

And Tim wanted him to be a real man! But the kid is young; not twenty-five yet. He should turn out all right with folks like Tim and Molly."

The night lengthened. One by one the men left headquarters. Two detectives drowsed in an adjoining office, chairs tipped back against the wall. Outside, Cohen, the driver, whistled softly as he sprawled on the front seat of the patrol wagon. Then came the harsh ring of the bell, and everyone was galvanized into action. Cohen came to the door and awaited orders.

"Mulligan calling," announced Lieutenant Murphy swiftly. "Fairview Oil station; Fairview and Edgemont... holdup... one got away... attendant injured..."

It was scarcely ten minutes before the reverberating clang of the bell announced the return of the patrol wagon. The men grouped themselves about the desk as the prisoner was brought in, Cohen on one side, Mulligan, strangely old and white-faced, on the other.

He was scarcely more than a boy—the prisoner—dressed in clothes of the latest mode, a tweed cap pulled at a rakish angle over his ear, a cigarette between his fingers. They stationed him before the desk.

"Take off that hat!" snapped Tim Mulligan. The young man looked up quickly and obeyed.

"One got away," said Mulligan shortly. "I was patrolling Fairview when the machine ran into the oil station. I heard the attendant call out once, as this one," with a jerk of his thumb towards the prisoner, "got out. They were there last week, y' know. He plugged him... through the leg... hospital." He was speaking jerkily.

"The fellow in the car... yelled as I ran up... then drove off. This one turned... 'n' I beat him to the draw. He... he..." Tim Mulligan leaned heavily against the desk, his hands fumbling at the buttons of his coat.

The boy had been watching him closely, twisting the dapper tweed cap between his hands. Koestling brought a glass of water but Mulligan refused it.

"I've been layin' for these fellows. Knew I'd get 'em sooner or later. This one is a bad one... he don't care... for nobody... but himself. He'd kill his... own folks... to get away..."

He turned and walked slowly to the detectives' office and let himself down into an arm chair.

Lieutenant Murphy opened the book on the desk, and picked up his pen.

"Well, Tim," he said slowly, "anything to say for yourself? I've been on the force many years but this is the hardest thing I have ever done... to put Tim Mulligan's little tad behind the bars. You have killed something tonight. You have killed the spirit in your father's heart. His little tad..."

"Make it snappy, lieutenant. I've got it comin', I guess, but I didn't think the old man would take me in. I swear I didn't..."

"Tim Mulligan has never flinched at doing his duty... for 31 years... and he never will as long as he's on the force..."

Norwegian Elkhound Friendly
Briefly, the Norwegian elkhound is a workmanlike dog that is friendly and intelligent, has a lot of energy yet is not of a nervous type, knows how to hunt because he has been used as a hunting dog in Norway for many, many years, and makes a mighty attractive home dog and companion. He'll weigh around 45 or 50 pounds and has a thick, weather-resisting gray coat with black tips on the outer hairs. A well formed specimen of the breed stands about 20 1/2 inches at the shoulder. With pointed ears, very human looking eyes, the Norwegian elkhound gives you the impression that he is more than just a home dog.

First Homestead Entry

The original homestead law was approved May 20, 1862, by President Abraham Lincoln, to become effective January 1, 1863. On the latter date the first homestead entry was made at the Brownville (Neb.) land office by Daniel Freeman for the S 1/2, NW 1/4, NE 1/4, NW 1/4, and SW 1/4, NE 1/4, Sec. 26, T. 4N., R. 5 E., 6th P. M., Nebraska, containing 160 acres. The application was numbered one. Final proof on the entry was offered January 20, 1863, and final certificate issued on the same day. The entry was patented September 1, 1863.

Started Era of Craft

After the Civil war, carpetbaggers, scalawags and negroes secured control of the legislatures of many southern states and started the greatest era of graft and corruption in American history, writes W. H. Fackenthal, Easton, Pa., in Collier's Weekly. In the legislature of South Carolina, for example, money was widely spent for such "supplies" as champagne, feather beds, gold watches and perfume. The classic appropriation, however, was $10,000 to reimburse the speaker for money lost on a horse race.

Oxford in History

Oxford is first definitely mentioned in history in 912, although its legendary record predates this mention by nearly two centuries, when the holy Erideswilde was delivered from the "impertunate prince who craved her in marriage." Erideswilde is the patron saint of Oxford. It is known that the Romans anointed their lands with the blood of sacrificial victims, sang hymns to their domestic gods and went through an ancient liturgy in the spring of the year.

Sport Seasons Reversed

In Darwin, Australia, the climate brings about a reversal of the usual sports season. The town is the northernmost of the continent and right in the heart of the tropics. There summer is the rainy season and the ground becomes completely saturated, whereas in winter it is dry and as hard as concrete. For this reason football players, preferring spongy ground, choose summer, while cricket enthusiasts, finding hard ground more suitable, play their game in winter.

HUMILITY
I believe the surest test of a truly great man is his humility. I do not mean by humility, doubt of his own power. But really great men have a curious feeling that the greatness is not in them but through them.
And they see something divine in every other man, and are endlessly, toolianly, incredibly merciful.

An interesting fact is that there are four sets of twins starting to school in Room 1 in the Northside Schol Building, Jeanne and Jacqueline Speckman, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Speckman, Martha Jean and Mary Jane Thompson, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. William Thompson, Everett and Ernest Donnelly and Billy and Buddy Sninkle, sons of Mr. and Mrs. W. Chicken thieves have begun to ply their fall trade in northern Kentucky and housewives are reporting the loss of chickens. This announcement should encourage the men folks to oil up and load their shotguns and get into the receiving line in the path that leads to the chicken coops.

Fifty years ago county fairs in Kentucky were flourishing institutions, but during the past ten years the greater part of them are navigating on crutches. County fairs have lost their pulling power owing to the fact that they have progressed in the wrong direction. During the heyday of fairs the greatest attractions were the stock, horse and soil exhibitions. The cheap free attractions and the petty carnival gambling have just about transformed the old county fair into a demoralizing midway. This new innovation has failed to attract substantial support from a class of our citizens.

For years owners of industrial plants have known that an uncovered steam pipe or boiler means dollars wasted in fuel bills. The same method of insulation used in such large plants is needed in the home, for an uncovered furnace in the cellar with unprotected pipes leading from it will mean just the same percentage of waste as would occur in a giant foundry or coke furnace. Insulation used for such purposes is easy and economical to apply and is just as important in having an effective heating system.

There are two kinds of fox terriers, namely, the smooth-haired and the wire-haired. The smooth-haired terrier has the same courageous and lovable qualities as his brother and up to recent years has been the most popular. The two types weigh somewhere between 12 and 20 pounds and are considered one of the most popular breeds in the dog kingdom.

Welding
... the best way to make a perfect union of two pieces of metal is by welding them together.

... and the best way to get a more pleasing flavor and a better taste in a cigarette is by welding together the different types of tobacco...

That is just what we do in making CHESTERFIELD Cigarettes—the three types of mild ripe home-grown tobaccos, that is tobaccos grown in this country, are welded together. Then they are welded with aromatic Turkish.

When these tobaccos are welded together you get a combined flavor which is entirely different from any one type of tobacco.

It is this welding of the right amounts of the right kind of tobaccos that makes CHESTERFIELD a milder, and better-tasting cigarette.

ODD FELLOWS

THE GRAND MASTER HAS SET SATURDAY SEPT. 28 AS THE DATE AT ASHLAND, KY.

The year Nineteen Hundred and Thirty-Five marks the One Hundredth Anniversary of Odd Fellowship in Kentucky. In order to stimulate interest in the Order and also to secure an increased membership, Senator M. M. Logan at the last Grand Lodge session offered a prize to the lodge in Kentucky which secured the greatest increase in membership from January 1, 1935 to June 30, 1935. With this prize as the goal, all of the Kentucky lodges set out to win it. Among this number was Ashland Lodge Number 257, Ashland, Ky. This lodge had a total gain in membership during that period of 244 members. It has now been announced by the Grand Master, Flem D. Sampson, that Ashland Lodge is the winner of the Logan Prize.

The Grand Master has set Saturday, September 28, 1935 as the date to commemorate this victory. Ashland, Ky., is the place of the meeting. Dr. A. M. Davis is the Chairman on Arrangements, and he has numerous committees at work in order to assure the success of the meeting. It has been arranged for the Odd Fellow Lodges of the states of Kentucky, West Virginia, Ohio and Tennessee to have many representatives at this celebration.

There is no doubt that this will be the largest celebration held by the Odd Fellows in America as there will be three hundred lodges in Kentucky, four hundred in Ohio, three hundred in West Virginia and Tennessee participating in this celebration. The highest dignitaries of the Odd Fellows in the world, together with the highest officials in the States involved, will be present and will have a place upon the program.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt has been contacted, and he has not definitely refused to be present. A committee has been at work to secure his presence, and they now have definite assurance that he will be in Kentucky during the latter part of this month and if it is at all possible a stop will be arranged in Ashland on the 28th.

Every business house, lodge and service organization, including the Lions, Rotary, Kiwanis, American Legion and the Business Men's Association, and thousands of our citizens have accepted the invitation of the Ashland Lodge of Odd Fellows to make this greatest celebration in the City of Ashland and Eastern Kentucky, and each are contributing their efforts and the thousands of dollars necessary to stage this mammoth celebration. It is planned to have the longest parade ever held upon the streets of any city in Kentucky.

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

In about a month, Fire Prevention Week will be observed again. Starting on October 6, the week will run through the 12th.

The week is usually inaugurated by Presidential proclamation. Governors of states and mayors of cities follow suit. Fire marshals, fire departments, insurance organizations and other public and private groups cooperate in seeking to spread the ABC's of fire prevention and control to the general public—which has most at stake, and which must accept the responsibility for almost every fire, large or small, that occurs.

During the week every citizen will have a chance to learn, easily, thoroughly and "painlessly," the simple lessons that will enable him to keep his home and other property safe from fire. He will be told of the menace of old and improperly-done wiring. He will learn the need for periodic inspections of his heating plant—one of the most prolific sources of fire. He will be shown the vital necessity of fire-resistant building, and of modern municipal building codes. He will hear of the tragic school, hospital and other major fires which have destroyed thousands of lives, and property valued at millions which were absolutely unnecessary.

To learn this, the citizens will have to contribute a little of his time. He will have to look at exhibits, read editorials, news reports and pamphlets. He will have to listen to a radio address or two. He will have to keep his mind open and his memory awake—a lesson that is not retained is obviously useless.

In return for this small expenditure of time, he will receive knowledge that may be the means of saving his property from destruction and his loved ones from violent and horrible deaths. Is it worth it to you?

GOOD LIVESTOCK AT 4-H DISTRICT FAIR

Livestock exhibits of beef and dairy cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry and displays of oiled and canned foods, clothing and other home economics articles featured the annual 4-H club district fair at Lexington. Boys and girls from a large number of central counties contributed to the success of the fair.

Miss James Charlotte Sanders, county, won the grand championship of the fat cattle division with an Angus calf. Miss Anna M. Jones, Fayette county, was first on Short-horns and Miss Ruth Hudson, of Montgomery county, first on Herefords.

Henry county took top honors on Jerseys and Shelby county on Holsteins. Charles Moody was a leading exhibitor of Jerseys and Lurray Trumbo of Holsteins.

Howard Lea, Bracken county, had the champion Poland China pig and the grand champion of the show. Miss Kathleen Lea, Bracken county, won the championship of the Chester White division and A. P. Adair III, Bourbon county, of the Duroc-Jersey breed.

James Thornton, Owen county, won many high prizes on sheep, and Louis Hartung, Jefferson county, and Howard Lea, Bracken county, were among the champions in the poultry division.

The fair, which is one of the largest of its kind in the United States, is sponsored by the Fayette county 4-H leaders council, the Future Farmers of America, the Lexington Board of Commerce and the American Legion.

C. Liston Hemphill, of Taylorsport, who has been in a Cincinnati Hospital, being treated for an infection to his right arm, was in Burlington, Tuesday mingling with friends. He says that he was confined in the hospital for three weeks and was in a serious condition, but he was rapidly improving and was not able to get back at his farm work. He is one of the prominent farmers of the northern part of this county, and is an expert in all kinds of fruits.

FREE FAIR

FAIR WILL BE HELD AT HAMILTON SCHOOL FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 27 ACCORDING TO COUNTY AGENT

The event is sponsored by the school, the 4-H Club, the P. T. A. local organizations and the patrons of the entire community. Exhibits of the best in farm and home products and the unusual of the entire community will be on display. Those attending will be kept interested in recreational and entertainment programs. A big basket lunch will be served at noon.

Prof. Ruben Z. Asbury is chairman and Mrs. J. L. Jones, Jr., is secretary of the committee in charge of the event. They will be assisted by the leaders and patrons of the entire community.

MRS. STELLA DINSER

Mrs. Stella Dinser, aged 40 years, committed suicide last Wednesday morning at her home near Union, Ky. A 22 rifle bullet through her right temple caused instant death. Magistrate Hubert White, of Boone county rendered the verdict. The remains were removed to the Tallafarro Funeral Home for preparation. She is survived by her husband Wm. Dinser, four children, her mother Mrs. James Waters and several brothers.

Funeral services were conducted at the Tallafarro Funeral Home on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock by the Rev. T. C. Crume, after which she was laid to rest in the Burlington cemetery.

DEWEY KORDENBROCK

Dewey Kordenbrock, aged thirty-seven years, passed away early Friday morning at St. Elizabeth Hospital after a short illness with pneumonia. The remains were removed to the Tallafarro Funeral Home for preparation. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Delma Kordenbrock, one son Jack, his parents Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kordenbrock, two brothers and one sister. He was a truck driver for the Kroger Co.

Funeral was from the late residence 24 Park Ave., Elsmere, Ky. with regular high mass at St. Henry's church at 9 A. M. Monday, by the Rev. Edmund Corby, pastor. Interment following in Highland cemetery. Funeral Director Philip Tallafarro had charge of the funeral arrangements.

GRAPE CROP

500 BUSHEL GRAPE CROP FROM A TWO-ACRE VINEYARD OF APPROXIMATELY ONE THOUSAND PLANTS

S. J. Zapp of near Florence this year produced and sold 500 bushels from a two-acre vineyard of approximately 1,000 plants. The grape crop in the Cincinnati area this year was short due to the late freezes. Mr. Zapp thru skillful management was able to produce a full crop that brought a good price.

Seven sprays for the control of Black rot and disease were applied as recommended by the College of Agriculture. The vines were budded back following the late freezes. This work Mr. Zapp gives credit for the heavy set of fruit and is an art which the average grape grower knows very little about.

Elmo Jergens of near Constance, was another outstanding grape grower in the county this year producing over 350 bushels of high quality market fruit. Both growers followed recommended practices.

The Kentucky Bankers Association held in Louisville last week was attended by A. B. Renaker, Hualpha Rogers and wife, John Grant and N. E. Riddell. They report that the meeting was very instructive and a number of questions on banking were discussed by bankers of this state. The outstanding address was delivered by the President of the American Bankers Association. The Louisville Bankers entertained the members of the Association with a boat ride on the Ohio river, a banquet just before the address of the president of the American Bankers Association. All Bankers were given tickets to the State Fair which was attended by all present. The banks of Louisville entertained the visiting members of the Kentucky Bankers Association in real Kentucky style. Southern Hospitality was in evidence at all Louisville banks and their headquarters. More than six hundred bankers from the state were present. Not only were bankers from Kentucky present but from Ohio, Tennessee, Indiana, Missouri and New York, giving the convention a national aspect.

Mr. Charles W. Riddell Webb and wife, who is a daughter of the late H. Clay White, were in Burlington and other parts of the county, visiting friends and relatives. Mr. Riddell with his late father James M. Riddell, resided in Burlington and conducted a harness and saddle shop some years ago, moving from here to Williams-town, where Mr. Riddell continues in that business. Mr. Riddell is a close relative of the Riddell's in Boone county, where he has a number of school mates, and it is a great pleasure to meet and talk with them of their school of Kentucky gentlemen, of which no more can be said, as all Kentuckians know the character, honor and integrity of such men. He is active in all improvements and a great booster of his home town. Come again, Charlie as your relatives and friends are always glad to shake your hand. Mr. Webb is a brother of S. L. "Squire" Webb former cashier of the Erlanger Deposit Bank and he reports that he is in very poor health at his home in Alabama, caused by two paralytic strokes.

NO SUBSTITUTE FOR MILK; FOOD FOR ALL

Milk is one food that does not have a substitute and should be included in the daily diet of everyone, declare nutrition specialists at the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky. It is the best source of calcium, which is essential for the development and hardening of bones and teeth. In fact, it is difficult for the mother to supply sufficient calcium in the diet for her children unless a generous supply of milk is used daily.

Milk is also a good source of protein or muscle building material. One quart of milk daily will furnish from one-half to two-thirds the amount of protein needed by the growing child.

The uttermost of milk is an excellent source of vitamin A, which has been found to be necessary for the normal growth of children and the health of both children and adults.

Recent studies have shown that milk is a good protective food against pellagra. Every growing boy or girl should use four cups of milk daily and every adult two cups. If a child individual does not want to drink milk, it may be used in the preparation of other foods, such as vegetable soups, creamed vegetables or puddings, meats and other desserts.

200 TON CRUSHED

TWO HUNDRED TONS OF LIMESTONE HAS BEEN CRUSHED ON FARM OF HUBERT CONNER

Two hundred tons of agricultural limestone was crushed on the farm of Hubert Conner of near Hebron in the first week's crushing work of the Boone County Soil Improvement Association. Crushing work began last Wednesday and will continue until 6200 tons listed by approximately seventy-five farmers is crushed.

Interest in agricultural limestone with use of phosphate to grow better grass and legume crops is increasing among Boone county farmers. Mr. Joe Broderick, assistant county agent, spent a busy week testing soils for lime and phosphate needs, securing analysis of agricultural limestone and making a cooperative order of phosphate fertilizer to be used with limestone in the growing of legume crops. Those farmers who are interested in this service or wish to have stone should leave word at the County Agent's office, Burlington.

Boone county 4-H sewing club girls made eight entries at the Kentucky State Fair the past week and took six premiums according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. These exhibits are just a sample of the good work done by the sewing club girls the past year under the supervision of local adult leaders.

The awards to the members were as follows:

Helen Bradford, sewing Unit 11, Hebron, first on pajamas and first on patch and darn on stocking.

Ona Burton, sewing Unit 11, Hebron, second on patch and darn on stocking.

Marcella Bradford, sewing Unit 11, third on coat and eighth on costume.

Mrs. Etta Walton is adult sewing project leader of Hebron North Branch Champion 4-H Club, Mrs. J. L. Jones, Jr., and Mrs. Oren Edwards are adult sewing project leaders of the Hamilton Silver Leaders 4-H Clubs.

A BIG SALE

The sale of James A. Huey was attended by a large crowd of good buyers. Everything brought good prices. 18 head of cows averaged $60 per head; one mare and colt sold for $185.

Col. Lute Bradford had charge of the sale.

A "HIDDEN" CAUSE OF ACCIDENTS

The more traffic experts study the accident toll, the more they become convinced that there is an important "hidden" cause of many automobile accidents. Thus lurking agent of death and injury is carbon monoxide poisoning.

Carbon monoxide gas develops when any fuel—coal, wood, gasoline, or illuminating gas—does not burn properly or completely. It cannot be seen, smelled or tasted. Its only warnings are headache and drowsiness. Yet it is in the air wherever there is motor traffic. The exhaust of a car, even one in good running condition, contains a concentration of fifteen per cent of it. As little as two per cent in the air will poison, and four per cent will kill.

Statistics show, according to the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, that carbon monoxide auto exhaust gases is the direct cause given in at least 700 deaths annually. No one knows nor can guess how many lives are lost indirectly through its influence. For example, there is no telling how often a common driving occurrence, "sleep at the wheel," has been induced by carbon monoxide.

All motorists are familiar with the headache and lassitude which often come upon them while driving. These signs, coupled with the odors of exhaust fumes in a moving vehicle, are final warnings that carbon monoxide is present in lethal quantities. They should be more than sufficient notice to take the necessary measures against carbon monoxide poisoning. This means regular checking of the exhaust mechanism and the carburetor action, keeping the vehicle well ventilated when driving, eliminating any leaks or holes which allow seepage from the motor or exhaust to the body of the car.

Householders should also consider that carbon monoxide poisoning is a possibility whenever fuel is burned in the home. Coal, gas, stove furnace and oil burner companies can give advice on precautions that will afford safety from this invisible death.

Mrs. R. N. Lawson has been ill with a bad tooth this week.

TOUR

OF CENTRAL KENTUCKY MADE BY A NUMBER OF BURLINGTON CITIZENS.

On Sept. 11th and 12th Mr. J. B. Arvin took a truck load to visit some of the places of interest in Central Kentucky. The first stop was at Frankfort where we looked over the new and old Capitols. In the old Capitol some of the outstanding things were the magnificent painting of Gen. Washington to Woodford county in 1819, a harpsichord, owned prior to the Civil War by the Morgan family of Lexington, Daniel Boone's rifle on which he carved a notch for every Indian he killed. We counted fifteen notches. A British cannon used in both the Revolutionary and second war with England, captured by Ky. troops in the battle of the Thames. A little blue calico dress worn by Bettie Grant, niece of Daniel Boone during the siege at Bryants Station.

We then drove to Bardonia, second oldest settlement in Kentucky, which was incorporated as a town in 1778, where we spent the night. While there we visited the Old Kentucky Home on Federal Hill where Stephen Collins Foster wrote his immortal song, My Old Kentucky Home, while a guest of his uncle Judge John Rowan, Senator of Kentucky. In the spacious hall we sat at the desk valued at $25,000, where the gifted writer wrote the song and saw the drawing room where he first sang it. In a bedroom we saw the mahogany four poster bed where Foster slept.

We then went to St. Josephs Cathedral the oldest, west of the Alleghenies. The style of architecture is chiefly corinthian. The tabernacle upon which is engraved the royal French coat of arms, was the gift of Louis Phillips to the Cathedral. Louis Phillips, Duke of Orleans and later King of France, was in Havana Cuba in the summer of 1787. His funds became exhausted and he was befriended by Bishop Flaget, who was then a young priest in Havana. At a later date Louis Phillips was an exile at Bardonia and was recognized and again befriended by the venerable Bishop, and he never forgot the deeds of kindness. When he returned to France and was once established on the French throne he sent Bishop Flaget, for the Cathedral, the masterpieces of famous artists which now adorn the walls. The paintings are by Van Dyck, Murrillo, Van Eyck, Van Bree, Reubens and Jacob Hast.

We then drove to Hodgenville where we took breakfast, and then visited the birth place of Abraham Lincoln. It is a humble one room log cabin with one door and window and log chimney. This rude home is enclosed in a handsome memorial building erected by a grateful nation.

From here we motored to Harrodsburg and walked through the old cemetery where Virginia Dare, the first white child who died in Kentucky, is buried.

We spent some time at the replica of the Old Fort Harro, and found many things of interest. Among which are all kinds of old time cooking utensils, large wooden bowl more than a yard in diameter, used to hold grain or other supplies. Among other things which were really used by the first settlers was a wooden horn about three fourths of a yard long that the women used to call for help in time of danger. In one corner of the enclosure is the old spring which supplied water for the people in the fort.

We especially enjoyed the beautiful scenery of the Muldraugh hills in the early morning mists and the cliffs along the Kentucky river in the bright afternoon sunlight.

We reached Burlington about ten P. M., a very jolly, well pleased crowd, loud in our praises of Mr. and Mrs. Arvin as genial conductors of such parties.

Those who went were Mrs. Lulu Hudson, of Walton, Mr. and Mrs. Lee McNeely and son Leroy, Mrs. Pearl Huey and Miss Dorothy Carson, of Bellevue; Mr. and Mrs. Arvin, Earl Sullivan, Mesdames Stella Gaines, Minnie Smith, Kittle Brady, Nettie Kelly, Lella Kite, May Lassing, Ella Jarrell, Nell Garrison, Josie Maurer, Gene Hensley, Nanine Riddell, Alice Walton, Lulu Huey, Ava Lou Walton and Miss Estelle Huey, of Burlington.

The Bellevue boys team will play a fast Cincinnati colored boys team at Bellevue Saturday, September 21. Both teams consists of boys 17 years of age and under. If you want to see some fun come out and see these boys play ball.

POSTPONED

JERSEY CATTLE CLUB SALE IS POSTPONED UNTIL A LATER DATE ACCORDING TO SECRETARY.

The Boone County Jersey Cattle Club sale scheduled for October 24 has been postponed until a later date according to Franklin Huey, secretary. The recent strong demand for dairy stock has caused a number of breeders to dispose of surplus stock and has reduced the numbers available to the point where a sale would be impractical this year.

The Boone County Jersey Cattle Club Sales Committee and Executive Committee met at Burlington last Wednesday evening to complete plans whereby Boone county Jersey breeders may work together to build up and advertise the breed in the county. The club is composed of live awake Jersey breeders who are interested in seeing the county becoming one of the leading Jersey centers of the country.

Miss Lillian Corbin, formerly of the Union and Richmond neighborhoods, is visiting friends and relatives of former days. Miss Corbin was a faithful teacher in the public schools of Boone county for 23 years and some years in the graded schools of Newport, Ky.—31 years of school work.

For the past 16 years Miss Corbin has had a Government position in Washington, D. C., and is now on a leave of absence to recuperate from ill health.

Mrs. M. G. Bedinger and Miss Lillian Corbin were guests the first of the week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Bedinger, of Richmond. Mrs. Mamie Bedinger left later in the week for Georgetown, where she will visit friends and will go soon to Rome, Ga., to visit her sister and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Gestner Gerner, and thence to St. Petersburg, Fla., for the winter.

Geo. G. Bedinger left Friday for Danville, Ky., to pursue his studies at Centre College.

BUSH—WHITE

Miss Martha Bush, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Bush, of Erlanger, was married Saturday morning Sept. 14th at 7:30 A. M., at the Elsmere Baptist church to Mr. David A. White, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. White, of Erlanger. Miss Bush was a graduate of the Boone County High School the year of 1925, under Supt. C. M. Hook.

They left for a week's trip thru West Va., and Virginia, to Washington, D. C., after which they will be at home in Latonia, Ky.

THE RURAL PRESS

There are some 13,500 newspapers and periodicals published in this country. The greatest proportion of them are small-town, weeklies, dailies and semi-weeklies, and magazines whose principal appeal is to the rural dweller.

The importance, the influence, and the worth of these publications can hardly be exaggerated. They are, as the San Francisco Argonaut has written, "the chief influence in the thought battle of our rural population of fifty-four million." And the character of their content, both in news and editorial departments well repays those who peruse them.

As a result, the recent contest held by the magazine "Country Home" to pick the best country newspaper correspondent in the U. S. was of much more importance and interest than contests usually are. The winner, a woman, lives in a Missouri town which has a population of twenty-seven, and is fifteen miles from the nearest railroad. For forty-four years she has been local correspondent for a rural paper in her county.

Urban editors, on reading excerpts from her correspondence, have been amazed by its quality. It does not deal with crimes and misdemeanors. Instead it tells of the life of the crops, the trials, tribulations and achievements of farm people who rarely make metropolitan headlines, but who, happily, are more numerous and more vital to the nation than our gangsters, our political and business renegades, and our ex-show girl divas.

Most interesting of all, this woman's correspondence, fine as it is, is not greatly different from that of other rural correspondents. Winners of lesser prizes in the contest show the same qualities—the same command of clear and vivid English. The country newspaper, little known as it is to the city dweller, is one of the finest, most permanent, and most deservedly successful influences in our American life. Last, but not least, it is the outstanding guardian of the nation in upholding our Constitution and American ideals.

REVOLUTIONIZED FARMING METHODS

Not so many years ago agricultural cooperatives were regarded with suspicion. Some believed that they could produce nothing worth while, they were needless "luxuries." Others thought they would merely waste time and money of their farmer members.

Today the cooperative has come into the "necessity" classification so far as the progressive farmer is concerned. The time he gives to it is as nothing compared to the benefits he receives, and better prices for his produce.

The cooperatives have slowly, quietly and effectively caused a virtual agricultural revolution. They have gone a long way toward taking the guess-work out of farming—wherein each producer was offered. The old-time farmer was at the mercy of the middleman—the modern farmer, with his organization doing the talking and bargaining for him, has appured proven business methods toward achieving a better place in the world.

Cooperatives have made a great record during depression—and when better times return, they are going to show the country what real agricultural progress means.

UNIFORM DRIVING LAWS NEEDED

One of the greatest barriers to fair and efficient enforcement of traffic laws is the lack of uniformity in the traffic codes of different states and towns.

As one traffic authority recently pointed out, when he drives from one state to another, he doesn't have to stop and change his nickels, dimes and dollars into other and different kinds of money; but, if he wishes to operate his car in accord with the law, he must at once revise his driving habits. He leaves a state where the maximum speed allowed is 40—and then must remember that now he must hold his car down to 30. He has been accustomed to traffic lights and signs placed on corners—now they are overhead in the middle of streets where he is liable to miss seeing them entirely.

Suppose that motor car manufacturers pursued the same practices in many cities and states. Suppose a man who had been driving the Smith car wanted to trade it in for the new Jones model, and discovered that it had a different kind of transmission, required a different kind of fuel, and presented major points of difference in other respects. Such a policy would be no more absurd than is the existing policy of our governmental units in adopting traffic codes that are utterly at variance with those of a town or state 10 miles away.

The Uniform Vehicles Code and Model Municipal Ordinance, prepared by traffic experts, could and should be adopted by every town and city. This would not only give the motorist a break—it would immensely expedite the efficiency of our police and traffic patrol departments, and make an important contribution to the cause of highway safety.

Editorial of the Week

CHANDLER THE CHAMPION

The Democratic primary has terminated in the nomination of a ticket headed by A. B. Chandler as the candidate for Governor. His is an amazing triumph, without parallel in Kentucky politics.

Happy Chandler waged a remarkable campaign, forged into the position of a contender early in the contest and raced to the finish in the first primary well up toward the front in second place. His courageous campaign caught the popular fancy, drew wide-spread support.

Chandler's spectacular challenge in the first heat of the heated contest resulted in creation of a victory psychology which was intensified as the campaign progressed.

The unprecedented vote in the first primary was expected by political analysts to wane in the second primary. But contrary to the anticipated trend the high record vote was exceeded as close to half a million participated in the runoff primary. Chandler forged ahead to win by a comfortable margin.

The campaign is now history. Differences and antagonisms it engendered should be quickly forgotten. Warring Democratic factions should close ranks. Reconciliations should be immediately effected, as we anticipate will be the aftermath.

A strong ticket has been nominated with Mr. Chandler. Both the Rhea and Chandler group are represented on that ticket. This should be helpful in solidifying the Democratic party behind the ticket in the final campaign.

Every Democrat who realizes that it is for the best interests of Kentucky that its government remain in the hands of the party should be good enough sportsman to accept the verdict of the people and volunteer for service in the campaign which culminates in November.

Let us cut short the post-mortems. Let us graciously accept the verdict of the Democratic primary regardless of whom we supported in the contest. A militant and audacious young leader has been chosen to lead the fight in the final election. Let us enlist with enthusiasm under his banner. Victory is certain and we all should have a part in the triumph.

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Black rust in the Northwest, particularly in the Dakotas and Minnesota, and to a lesser extent—due to less rain—in Montana, is going to upset a lot of AAA calculations on wheat this year. For example, all government figures so far are very misleading, in that they estimate bushels of wheat, but take no account of the fact that due to the peculiar type of ravaging black rust effects, the same number of bushels of wheat will produce less flour.

Conservative estimates in Minneapolis and St. Paul, for example, are that from 40 to 50 per cent of the wheat crop expected in the whole Northwest will be unmillable. That is, it would not, in the normal course of events, be ground into flour. This is complicated further by the processing taxes.

The processing tax is based on the bushel of wheat that goes into the flour mill. Now a bushel of wheat which has been affected by black rust will produce only a fraction of the flour that a normal bushel of wheat would. In ordinary times, this would be carefully calculated and would be reflected in a much lower price paid for that wheat by the miller. But the fact that the processing tax is based on the bushel of wheat, not on the barrel of flour, upsets normal calculations.

Black rust strikes the wheat on one side—always the southern side. If the weather is dry, it does not spread around the kernel. If the weather is damp, it does. It makes a ring all around, and as most of the nourishment comes up near the circumference of the kernel, instead of through the center, the food of the kernel is choked off. This means that in a bushel of rust-infected wheat, there is an unusually large percentage of bran, and an unusually small percentage which can be ground into white flour.

Canada Also Hit

The duty on wheat from Canada is 42 cents a bushel. Canada also suffered from black rust this year, but Canada has a tremendous carry-over—considerably more than 100,000,000 bushels, which is not affected by black rust. Moreover, the government of Canada has decided to liquidate this wheat, which it has been holding in much the same way that the United States government held cotton, and as the Brazilian government held coffee.

This hold-over Canadian wheat, experts say, can easily pay the 42 cents duty, and the processing tax, and still be a bargain for Minneapolis millers in contrast with about one half of the northwestern wheat. This is due to the complication of the processing tax, plus the fact that half or more of the northwestern wheat assays such a small proportion of flour.

Predictions by experts are that at least 50,000,000 bushels of this hold-over Canadian wheat will be bought by United States millers, and probably nearer 100,000,000 bushels.

The rust-infected wheat thus driven out will have to be sold as cattle feed. But there enters another complication. There is already in the Northwest a great plenty of cattle feed. All forage crops were good this year, due to the very moisture which hurt the wheat. Forage crops, due to their bulk as compared with their value, cannot be hauled economically for long distances. Which means that if they are to be consumed at all, they must be consumed in the northwestern states.

From all of which experts predict that there will be tremendous buying of young pigs for fattening, and young cattle, in the Dakotas, Minnesota, and Montana, this year, and that while the production of beef may not affect prices before 1937, the price of pork will be forced down by next summer, no matter what the AAA may do.

Atlantic-Gulf Canal

Aside entirely from the question of whether the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf canal across northern Florida will ruin the fresh water supply of that portion of the state south of the proposed ditch down to Lake Okechobee, the proposition is really on all fours with the much talked about Passamaquoddy.

It has been considered for many years. Always it has been rejected, after study by engineers. Always the reason has been the same. It is entirely impractical as an engineering project—indeed it presents few real difficulties from that angle, if this canalization of Florida's fresh water supply is waved to one side. But is it economically sound? The answer has always been "No."

Careful study, even this time, produced a report to President Roosevelt that if the total volume of business which might be expected should materialize, still the proposition would not pay interest on its cost and operating expenses. There is no half lie about this. The experts had no doubt about it whatever.

But there is an even gloomier angle. Three-fourths of the present tonnage moving from Gulf ports to North Atlantic American ports, and across the Atlantic (tonnage for South Atlantic ports of course would not use it) consists at present of oil. No one is in a position to state how long this tonnage will continue so to move. Oil fields now shipping by way of the Gulf may continue shipping for many years.

On the other hand, their production may slump any time. Also it is always possible that pipe lines may be found more economical for moving the product.

So that no one knows at what moment three-fourths of the existing tonnage that this canal might expect may be cut off.

Can't Foretell Tonnage

Against this the contention is made in defense that no one can foretell what business may arise to provide plenty of tonnage for the canal. It is quite possible. Many railroads doing a large business today, and serving very real needs, were constructed to accommodate traffic which has long since disappeared—would never have been built if their builders, and the investors who provided the construction costs, had suspected that the traffic they were built to handle might evaporate.

The immediate pressure for the canal, of course, is to provide some useful work for idle men—something that will not be mere boondoggling. On the theory that this work may be useful—may even prove profitable for reasons not now realized—the work is justified by its defenders. And it is a real job. The canal will be 195 miles long. It involves moving almost twice as much dirt as was involved in digging the Panama canal—slides and all. Though on account of the difference in terrain, climate, etc., the expense will not be anything like as great.

Incidentally, traffic on the Panama canal is far greater than anyone at the time conceived it could be. So that there has been strong pressure economically, as well as for the more obvious reason of national defense, for a Nicaraguan canal. Engineers, leaving out of consideration the question of keeping a canal open despite air raids and sabotage in war, would like to double the number of locks at Panama, thus doubling the amount of tonnage which could move through it.

About Politics

It is an old saying in politics that the man "out in front" in the race for the Presidential nomination of a big party—six months before the convention—is bound to be killed off. The theory is that all the other candidates are shooting at him. Also that the public is highly changeable, and forgets easily.

There are exceptions to all rules, as evidenced in this case by the present incumbent of the White House, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who was out in front for the Democratic nomination for 18 months prior to the 1932 Democratic convention. He sprang into the lead when he was re-elected governor of New York, by a tremendous majority, in November, 1930. His boom defied all traditions by staying there, despite all sorts of ups and downs, right through the whole period. To use a racing term, his boom was never headed. There was never a day from November, 1930, until his nomination in June, 1932, when fair betting odds would not have favored him against any other candidate. Or for that matter, against any two other candidates.

Politicians of both parties are wondering if an exception will come this time in the Republican party. At present the two leaders, so far out in front that it seems hardly worth while to figure who is third and who is fourth, are Senator William E. Borah and Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News.

Almost any politician, familiar with national politics, will tell his friends confidentially that if either of the two is nominated, it will be Knox. This theory is also based on old fixations, which may easily be proved wrong. Stripped down to its essentials, the theory on which these politicians eliminate Borah is two-fold. First, that he is too old. Second, that the "regulars" have never wanted Borah, and hence would not want him now.

As to Borah

That is one of the reasons the recent poll of Republican local leaders by Robert H. Lucas was so interesting. Apparently these local leaders thought Borah would make a very strong candidate in their communities, whether they personally would prefer another type or not.

As to his age, Borah is in marvelous condition considering his 70 years. Friends are fond of saying he has all the Mormon virtues. By which they mean he uses no tea, coffee, tobacco or alcohol. He is a sparing eater, and has kept up his horseback riding even in Washington. He insists on his beauty sleep every night, cares nothing about society, never subjects himself to any undue strains. For example, even when he was tremendously interested in filibusters, he never made the long, grueling, time-killing speeches for which some other senators are famous.

All his life he has been a lone wolf in politics. In the senate he has never been a cog in the machine. He would never be "regular."

The strength of Colonel Knox, as shown in various polls, is simply revolutionary from a political standpoint. One has to go back to Horace Greeley for a precedent, and even that is not a good one.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By REV. F. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of the U. S. Bible Institute of Chicago, & Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for September 22

JAMES (A GREAT CHRISTIAN LEADER)

LESSON TEXT—Acts 15:1-21; James 1:1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he hath been approved, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord promised to them that love him.—James 1:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What James Tells Us to Do.

JUNIOR TOPIC—James' Motto for Juniors.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Meet Life's Tests.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Message of James for Today.

Three individuals by the name of James are mentioned in the New Testament. In all probability this James was the brother of the Lord and the writer of the Epistle which bears his name.

I. James Presiding at a Church Council (Acts 15:1-21).

1. The controversy in the church at Antioch (vv. 1-5). A most difficult problem confronted the church, threatening its disruption into a Jewish and Gentile division. It was not a question of the admission of the Gentiles into the church. That had been settled some years before when Peter received Cornelius and his household. The question now was, on what ground could they be received? Should Gentile believers be required to keep the Mosaic law as a condition of salvation? In order to settle the matter, Paul and Barnabas were sent to Jerusalem for the decision of the mother church.

II. The Deliberation of the Council (vv. 6-21).

1. Peter speaks (vv. 6-11). He argued that God had borne witness to the acceptance of the Gentiles by giving the Holy Spirit to them as unto the Jews. Since God had not put a difference, it would be folly for them to do so.

2. Paul and Barnabas rehearsed their experience (v. 12). They told how that God had set his seal of approval on the preaching of salvation by grace through faith.

3. The argument of James (vv. 14-21). He took the fact declared by Peter and showed how it harmonized with prophecy (Amos 9:11-15). He showed that the reception of the Gentiles was not in conflict, but in harmony with God's plan. He made clear God's plan as follows:

a. To take out from among the Gentiles a people for his name (v. 14). This is what is now being done by the calling out of the church.

b. After the church is completed, Israel will be converted and restored to their land by the Lord himself at his return (vv. 16, 17).

c. This will be followed by the conversion of the world through the agency of converted Israel (v. 17; cf. Rom. 11:15). Having shown that there was no conflict with the Scriptures rightly divided, he gave his judgment that the Gentiles should not be troubled with the things that are Jewish, but should be warned against the perils of heathenism, such as meat offered to idols, fornication, and blood.

4. The decision (vv. 22-29). The mother church unanimously endorsed James' recommendation. They sent a letter stating the decision of the conference. This decision was duly delivered to the church at Antioch and was received with rejoicing.

II. James Giving Counsel to Christians (James 1:1-17).

1. Concealing trials (v. 2-17).

a. The Christian's attitude toward them (vv. 2-4). They were to meet them joyfully because of their beneficial effects. Trials reveal fidelity, and by their effects develop the grace of patience.

b. The Christian's supreme need in these trials (vv. 5-8). It is wisdom to meet them intelligently. He makes clear that the source of this wisdom is in God and that the means of gaining it is asking in faith, and the very liberality of God is the guarantee that the needed supply will be provided.

c. The rich and the poor are sharers alike in affliction (vv. 9-11). Frequently the poor man thinks that the rich are free from testings, whereas they are usually more severely tested.

d. The blessed reward of enduring the testing (v. 12). The one who faithfully endures the temptation shall be awarded the crown of life.

e. The source of temptation (vv. 13-17). Temptations spring out of human desire. They do not come from God. Sin is not necessarily the desire, but the gratifying of it improperly. When one is thus led away by his natural desires, sin is conceived which brings forth death. In such case, sin is the gratification of a right desire in a wrong way.

Life

Life is not so complex if we do not persist in making it so. We need faith; we need to be brave, to keep the corners of the mouth turned up and not down. And after all it is only a step at a time.—Ralph Waldo Trine.

Affliction

Much of what a man tells you in the hour of affliction, in sudden anger, or in any outpouring of his heart, should be sacred. In his craving for sympathy he has spoken to you as to his own soul.

WHEE-EE-EE!

Dismal yet imperative was the sound just beyond the left elbow which George had thrust jauntily from his straight-eight roadster. With sinking heart he glanced out to see the goggled apparition drawing abreast of him.

"Pinched," breathed George. As the traffic officer dismounted and strode toward them Sarah Anne patted her blond hair. "Oh, dear!" she said. "That's what we get for pulling the curtain down," whispered Sarah Anne. "You couldn't watch in the mirror."

George didn't reply at once, for the officer had put one boot on the running board and was reaching inside his jacket for the ticket book.

"Pretty fast for Sunday afternoon, brother," he remarked pleasantly.

George's eyes opened innocently. "Was I over the limit, officer?"

"About ten over," said the law. "Sorry, but I'll have to give you a ticket."

"Okay," said George. He hoped Cora wouldn't sound off from the rumble seat; he wanted to take his medicine like a good sport before Sarah Anne. Probably his wife would start trying to argue with the cop.

But strangely enough, Cora didn't say anything, and neither did Sara Anne's husband. Naturally, Pete wouldn't, George told himself sourly. Nor would he offer to split the fine. Funny how he had let the bus go over the limit. With Sarah Anne beside him he might have hopped up the bus without noticing it. If he hadn't pulled down the curtain he might have seen the cop in the mirror and slowed down. George grinned, watching the officer's busy pencil. Well, pulling down that curtain had been worth getting pinched. What a laugh on Pete, felling him the sun was on their necks so they'd have to pull the curtain down—the kissing Sarah Anne not a foot from Pete's nose!

"There you are," said the traffic officer, tearing the slip from his book and handing it to George. "You appear tomorrow, either at ten in the morning or three in the afternoon."

"Okay, officer. But the fact is, I think my speedometer's off."

The officer grinned cryptically, his glance wavering just for a second over the golden Sarah Anne whose robe did not quite conceal her charming blue bathing suit. "Maybe so. Sometimes the judge takes that into consideration if you can show a speedometer test."

When the officer had roared away, Pete yelled from the rumble seat: "Tough luck, old man," and Cora said: "George, you ought to be more careful."

"I'd think," said Sarah Anne, in the acid tone reserved for her husband, "you'd tell George when you hear a motorcycle."

"He was mighty quiet," said Pete plaintively. "He coasted down this hill on us and I didn't know he was there until he sounded the siren."

As he gave his black tie final touches, and admired his chin in the mirror that night dressing for the Beach club dance, George congratulated himself on his smoothness. Not every guy could have a little fun on the side and not get into a jam. Right under Cora's nose, too, that was the scream.

Next day George went to the Motor Fixit shop. From several summers at Roma Beach he knew young Jasper. "Think you could make that speedometer slow—for a couple of bucks?" asked George jovially.

Jasper smiled just a little. Said Jasper, "It'll cost you one buck to have it tested, and maybe it will really be off. We'll see."

As a matter of fact, it was. Jasper found the speedometer seven miles slow.

"Say, that's great!" George exclaimed. "That makes me liable for only three miles over the limit. The judge ought to let that pass."

"Probably," I'll give you a letter on the test and you can show him that." So that afternoon promptly, at three, George waited with half a dozen other violators. The big Irish cop was present and the sour old judge was slapping on the limit. George heard him impose fines of twenty, fifty, and seventy-five like nothing at all.

When his turn came he handed up his ticket along with the affidavit from the Motor Fixit shop, and winked at the Irish cop.

"Fifty dollars," said the judge.

"Next case."

George blinked. "Fifty dollars?"

"That's what I said. Death has been riding these roads, young man, and that's got to stop."

"But what about that letter there—about the speedometer?"

"I saw it," said the judge. "Speed's not the only thing we're watching. Young people spooning in motor cars on the move—that's part of the trouble, so we ring the Blue law fines on that kind."

"But, your honor," said George indignantly. "We were a respectable party. We—"

"Yes, sir. The defendant was going fifty-five miles an hour in a forty-five mile zone. They all had bathing suits on, and the pair in the rumble seat were doing a clinch that would make the movies ashamed of themselves."

Somebody in the courtroom laughed. The judge pounded furiously.

"Fifty dollars," he said to George, "and I'm letting you off easy."

AND SUDDEN DEATH

1,000,000 injured and 36,000 killed last year. These figures exclude the pain and horror of savage mutilation. Every time you step on the throttle death gets in beside you. A passing look at a bad smash and you learn the fellow is in the hospital with a broken back. The cold lines of type in Monday's paper recording that a total of 103 local citizens were killed in week-end crashes. Some their mangled body on a slab, one with a Z-twist in his broken leg, the insane crumpled effect of a child's body after its bones are crushed inward. Another steering wheel breaks out, the matter is settled instantly by the steering column's plunging through his abdomen. Another five cars in one mess, seven killed on the spot, two dead on way to the hospital. One pretty girl with her forehead laid open. One car wrapped around a tree that front and rear bumpers interlock requiring an acetylene torch to cut them apart. Each shattered man, woman, or child who went to make up the 36,000 corpses chalked up last year, had to die a personal death. Take a look at yourself before the man in the white jacket shakes his head over you, tells the boys with the stretcher not to bother and turns away to somebody else who isn't quite dead yet.

Are you protected? If not see me for automobile insurance. I will be glad to give you the rates on your car.

Wood Rings Indicate Strength

Any wood with unusually narrow growth rings may be expected to be weaker for its kind. The wood of pine and other conifers, however, with unusually wide rings is generally weaker than when of average width. Therefore, very fast-growing pines usually are inferior in strength to virgin growth. The opposite is true of most hardwoods when wood with wide rings usually ranks the highest. Thus wood from second-growth hardwoods is, on the average, stronger than from virgin growth.

Thermite Process of Welding
Thermite (also thermit) is a mixture of aluminum in fine grains or filings with some metallic oxide, usually of iron or chromium. On being heated by priming with magnesium powder and barium oxide the aluminum combines violently with the oxygen of the oxide, setting free the iron, producing a fluid slag and generating sufficient heat either to melt or bring adjacent parts to the welding temperature. It is used on welding steel rails and for other purposes.

Patriots Secret Society Men

THE GARDEN

TAKING STOCK ACCOUNT
(By John S. Gardner, Ky. College of Agriculture)

Last week, was pointed out the necessity for taking account of stock, and covered particularly the vagaries of the season, just ending, with a view to preparing in another season against a recurring. There is another phase of looking backward over garden activities, that having to do with vegetable varieties, for truly the proper vegetable varieties are important gardeners' working tools.

Every year new varieties "come out," and many persons are inarguably trying a few. Sometimes, these novelties are real ones; many times, they are not, but merely old varieties renamed. Sometimes, they are the rivals of varieties that should have remained in limbo, and using them may spell catastrophe for a gardener who depends on them. By this is not meant, however, that only old varieties should be used, for many of the newer sorts are improved over the old. This every gardener should do, though, whenever he uses new varieties, he should make observations and keep written record of what he finds. He should record planting dates and first harvesting date and the amount harvested. By comparing these records with those gathered of other varieties he has used, he can determine whether or not he has effected improvement by changing. Then, he may change back, if need be. Such a record puts him in position to plan with efficiency, for, knowing the duration of each variety, he will find it is possible to "sandwich in" a crop or two impossible to include if only old standby sorts were used.

Through observing behavior of varieties, his acquaintance with his vegetables becomes complete enough for him to determine causes for their misbehavior, particularly, because of soil diseases. Some of these are merely temporary, and may be controlled by proper rotation. In this, the diary of which the variety-record is a part, will help. Others, also caused by failure to "change ground" from year to year, are of a more permanent nature, controlled by rotation, of greater length, however, than gardeners cannot afford to use. It is here that "novelty" varieties are of real assistance; the only way out, in fact. The soil diseases caused by using new varieties are the wilt of tomatoes, canker and water-melons. There are quite a few of these varieties, but not all are suited to one climate in the various parts of Kentucky, as many gardeners have found to their cost. Inasmuch as the only control for the wilts of these vegetables is to use the new wilt-resistant sorts, it behooves gardeners to try them, but to keep record so as to be able to discard those not suited, and to adopt those that behave satisfactorily, and then to stick to them until better ones appear. Several gardeners may combine in experimenting, but, always, after the season is done, and before the results have become "state" notes should be compared, that is to say, account of stock taken, and, armed with exact knowledge, real decision may be made.

PUBLIC CONFIDENCE
CONTINUES TO GAIN

Bankers Report Nation-Wide Improvement in Attitude Toward Banks—Educational Campaigns Play a Part

NEW YORK.—Ninety-six per cent of over 300 reporting clearinghouses throughout the United States find concrete evidence of favorable turns in public opinion regarding banks, it is shown in the results of a survey made by "Banking," the monthly publication of the American Bankers Association. City and country districts in every state are represented. It is pointed out:

"The outstanding conclusion is that there has been a genuine nation-wide improvement the last few months in the attitude of the public toward its banking institutions," the publication says. Statistical evidence on which the bankers base their conclusions which warrant this statement is as follows:

The Evidence

"How do bankers know there has been an improvement in the public attitude? They have seen their deposits increase substantially in nearly all the cases reported, and tremendously in some cases. Many letters tell of increases of 100 to 300 per cent from the low point of the panic.

"For another thing, they know that fewer people are using safe deposit boxes as a repository for their savings, and that, in many instances at least, postal savings are declining.

"However, many express the view that they could throw out the statistical evidence and still realize that the public is in a better mood where the banks are concerned than before. The best evidence offered on this point, numerous bankers say, is to be found in the acceptance by the public of the newly instituted service charges and the reduced deposit interest rates."

A Summary of the Returns
The statement presents the following summary of the survey:

"We find on breaking up the general classifications of replies to the poll that the 65 per cent of those answering with an unqualified 'yes' represent only a partial measure of the optimistic feeling. Adding the favorable replies included in other groups, (i. e. 'yes' with qualifications, 'no change,' and 'mixed') we find that the vote shows a definitely healthy situation in 84 per cent of the localities reporting; at least some signs of improvement in another 12 per cent; a continuance of unfavorable conditions in 2 per cent, and a change for the worse in another 2 per cent. It is not too much to say that this is substantially 96 per cent favorable."

Reasons for Changed Public Opinion
As to reasons for the changes in public opinion regarding banks reported by the clearinghouses "more than one organization has a word to say about the American Bankers Association advertising and educational material," the magazine says.

It mentions in addition the benefits of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in the emergency, improvement in the general business situation, the winding out of weak banks and the banking moratorium.

"The response to the survey can be put down as encouraging and informative," the magazine concludes. "It holds out the definite hope that with a continuance of a cooperative, educational attitude on the part of the bankers the rest of the journey back to normal may well be completed in the not too distant future."

SOIL SAVING MOVE

Issue Book Describing Causes, Ravages and Means of Prevention of Erosion

MADISON, Wis.—Under the title "Protecting Investment Values in Land," the American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission has published a booklet dealing with the conservation of soil resources as a pressing national problem.

"Careful estimates indicate that 750,000,000 tons of soil, suspended and dissolved, are carried off to the sea each year by running water," the commission's book declares. "An equal amount removed from its source is left en route. This means a total of 1,500,000,000 tons, equal to approximately one ton for each acre of land in this country. The Soil Conservation Service estimates that 35,000,000 acres have been ruined."

"There are 125,000,000 more acres that have lost the valuable topsoil, and it is estimated that still another 100 million acres are being converted into marginal or sub-marginal land, bringing disaster to those trying to eke out a living from erosion enfeebled soil, and threatening ruin to the next generation, since these destructive forces are going on at an increasing rate."

In a chapter devoted to control and preventive measures for soil losses it describes terracing, strip cropping, wind erosion control, gully control and the control of losses from leaching.

Other chapters are devoted to soil resources, the toll exacted by soil erosion, methods for keeping soils productive, state and national uses for non-agricultural land, forestry in a soil conservation program and wild life in a land use program. The booklet describes in detail the marshalling of many forces which is being brought about under the leadership of the Soil Erosion Service to meet this national problem.

St. Peter's Cathedral
World's Largest Church

The average church might possibly accommodate 1,000 persons; St. Peter's, Rome, has a holding capacity of 54,000. This magnificent cathedral, the largest in the world, cost approximately $10,000,000 to build, including all the additions in the seventeenth century. The main construction work extended over a period of 176 years, 1450 to 1626.

The present church, says Tit-Bits Magazine, stands on the site where Calixtus Caligula built a circus in the first century; it was used by Nero for spectacles, including the martyrdom of the Christians. The exact spot on which St. Peter was crucified has been preserved throughout the centuries and in the cathedral today is marked by an altar.

The simple sanctuary of St. Peter gave place under Constantine the Great to a magnificent basilica in A. D. 323. Twelve years later the church had decayed so much that a plan was conceived to level the old and erect a new one. The original plans for the new building were drawn by Bramante, and later modified by Michelangelo and others. The following are measurements of the cathedral as it now stands: Nave, 151 feet; width at entrance, 90 feet; length of transept, 431 feet; entire length of basilica, including vestibule, 693 feet; height from pavement of church to summit of cross on lantern, 434 feet; surface area, 163,182 square feet.

Boxer Good Watch Dog,

Approaching Dane in Size

The Boxer is another "made in Germany" dog. Like the Doberman Pinscher, the German Shepherd and the Reissen Schnauzer, the Boxer was bred and developed as a police dog and watch dog, says a writer in the Washington Star.

With his heavy, powerful body, approaching in size that of the Great Dane, and his bulldoglike head, he is a tough-looking customer.

His ancestry, the bulldog and the bull terrier, would indicate that he could be depended on in a fight. But the same ancestry is good indication, too, that he is a loving faithful guardian for his master and his friends.

In color, the Boxer generally is fawn or brindle. His body is compact, powerful and yet graceful in outline. His legs are straight and strong-looking. His feet are catlike. His head is square, with domed skull and strong muzzle. He does not have as much lay back as the bulldog, but his muzzle is shorter than that of the bull terrier. His ears are erect.

Hawaiian Volcanic Gardens

Perhaps the most unique park under the American flag is the Hawaii National park. It was created by act of congress in 1916 and comprises 245 square miles on the islands of Hawaii and Maui. The section on the "big island," as Hawaii is called, embraces Kilauea crater, a lake of molten lava, and another crater on Mauna Loa. Mauna Loa, which erupts about once every four years, is the world's largest active volcanic mountain mass. During the last century it has poured out more lava than any other volcano on the globe. Uncle Sam's unique park also contains gorgeous tropical vegetation.

Folger Library

One of the show places of Washington, and considered by foremost authorities the "most artistic building in the world," is the Folger Shakespeare library. It is unsurpassed in its collection of material relating to Shakespeare and his writings, says the Washington Star, containing the discriminating results of a life time of study and collection by Henry Clay Folger, scholar and philanthropist. It contains also, an almost exact replica of the Globe theater of London, wherein were shown the poet's masterpieces during his lifetime.

The Meadowlark

The upper parts of the Meadowlark are light brown, streaked with brownish black. The head has a dull, grayish, straw-colored patch with streaks of brownish-black. The sides of the head are grayish white. The throat, breast and belly are bright yellow, fading into gray-white beneath the tail. The black markings on the upper breast is very showy. The outer tail feathers are white, the center-most, brown with small, blackish spots. The upper, forward curve of the wing is tinted with a light ashy color.

Enlistment in British Army

The term of enlistment in the British army is for 12 years, with permission to extend it to 21 years in certain circumstances. Of the original 12 years, from 3 to 9 are spent with the colors in permanent service, and the remainder of the time is in the Army Reserve. A majority of the men serve for 7 years with the colors and 5 years in the Reserves, which is the rule for infantry other than foot guards. Men enlist between eighteen and twenty-five years.

Paradoxically the tablet which marks the spot of the world's most famous assassination—that of Archduke Francis Ferdinand in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia—contains only the name of the murderer. ## TELL 'EM QUICK AND

TELL 'EM OFTEN

The late William Wrigley, world-famous chewing gum king, was a great believer in advertising. He knew that advertising, and plenty of it, would build up his business.

That is why he said "Tell 'em quick and tell 'em often."

Let us analyze this seven word slogan. When he said, "tell 'em quick" he meant tell the story briefly. Telling too much sometimes is as bad as not telling anything at all. When he said, "tell 'em often" he meant to advertise constantly. Keep your product and your name before the public at every opportunity.

After all, advertising is very much like running a furnace. You just have to keep on shoveling coal. Once you stop stoking, the fire goes out. So it is with building a business. You just have to keep on advertising.

Newspaper advertising is always a good sound, solid, and safe investment for any business worry. Look over the pages of this newspaper and convince yourself.

Now, more than ever before, is the proper time to use newspaper advertising. What "the power of advertising" has done for others in the past, it can do for you in the future.

All advertisers, large or small, are hereby cordially invited to obtain a copy of our advertising rates listing various forms of advertising from a popular want ad to a full page.

11 Foreign Bird Species

in U. S. in 100 Years

Eleven species of foreign birds have been introduced by man into America and naturalized here during the last 100 years, says the Field Museum of Natural History. Specimens of the ten most important of these are displayed in a museum exhibit which, with a similar group of extinct birds added to the ornithological division, serves to illustrate the changes which are gradually affecting the natural fauna of this continent.

Each of the introduced species comes from a country whose climate is similar to that of America in which the bird now lives.

Two game birds in the exhibit, the pheasant and partridge, were introduced into America for sporting purposes, and because of the annual hunting it is not likely that they will become too numerous. Two kinds of pigeons, the Chinese spotted dove and the ringed turtle dove, as well as a bird called crested mynah, which is related to the European starling, became established in the Far West, as the result of the escapes of caged birds. The skylark, goldfinch and tree sparrow were deliberately released in the hope they would propagate themselves. The first two for esthetic reasons—song and beauty—and the sparrow due to a belief that it would be beneficial to agriculture as an insect catcher. The one introduced bird not included in the exhibit is the common pigeon, a domesticated form related to the rock dove.

Century-Old Regatta Is

Henley-on-Thames Event

Thirty-five miles above London stands the town of Henley-on-Thames, a typical English market town the greater part of the year but once a year the mecca of the nation's rowing men, because of its century-old regatta, notes a writer in the New York Times.

Henley was selected in 1829 as the scene of the first of the Oxford-Cambridge crew races because it was neutral water and one place at which the Thames was both wide and deep enough for the boats. The event became the Henley Royal Regatta after the prince consort became its patron in 1851, and today is one of England's great social events. Not only the colleges of Cambridge and Oxford, but the great public schools of England and the London and provincial rowing clubs send their representatives to the flag-bedecked town in the hope of winning distinction. An international competition, the Henley Regatta, remains English in its atmosphere in the midst of bands that blare out the anthems of foreign nations and voices that shout encouragement in alien languages to the straining oarsmen.

Quaint Clockwork Mannequins

Every noon of the year in Rothenburg, Germany, two windows high in the drinking hall open, and two clockwork figures re-enact the historic "master drink." A general watches from one, while in the other an old-fashioned burgomaster raises a huge goblet and tilts back his head, slowly empties the cup. It was this huge draught which saved the heads of the city councilors in 1631, when Commander Tilly took the city. He had sentenced the council to death, but mellowed by a few drinks, he agreed to spare them if he could drain in a single draught a three-quart goblet. An ex-burgomaster did, though he fell in a swoon afterward.

Meaning of "Black Law"

"Black law" was a name applied to any one of a series of laws, passed in various border and northern states before the Civil war, sharply discriminating against free negroes who wished to emigrate to such states and become citizens thereof. Thus, in some states, certificates of freedom were to be filed, negroes were to be rigidly excluded from the militia and from the public schools, and no negro was to testify in cases in which any white man was directly interested.

Iron Wood

We usually think of wood as a rather soft substance, easily chopped or sawed, yet a saw with teeth hard enough to cut glass was found necessary in order to cut samples of wood received from the Brazilian jungles by the forestry department of Syracuse university. Brought out of the Amazon jungle on the backs of Indians and thence by canoe to a point where they could be shipped to Syracuse, the specimens are largely of iron-wood trees.—Washington Post.

The Balkans

The Balkans are a series of ridges of mountains in southeastern Europe. The term Balkan peninsula is applied to the region which contains them, the peninsula of southeastern Europe which was formerly under Turkish suzerainty, except that Rumania and Greece are often omitted in naming the Balkan states. The others, now, are Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Albania and the remnant of European Turkey.

Botanic Gardens

The million-dollar United States Botanic garden, west of the Capitol in Washington, is said to have the most varied and widely collected specimens of plants and flowers in the world. Ninety-six tons of aluminum and 260 tons of structural steel make this conservatory, with its palm house, subtropical house, border houses, promenades and 70-foot cascades, rank as one of the finest in the world.

First Air Mail Stamps in

General Service in 1918

Air mail stamps were first introduced by the Post Office department in 1918, and since that time there have always been available one or more United States stamps of distinctive design and of the proper denominations for use in preparing letters and other mail matter dispatched by air mail. The first stamp to be issued, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune, was the 24-cent, carmine and blue, placed on sale in 1918, for use on the route established between New York and Philadelphia or Washington, or any two of these cities. The same year a 16-cent green stamp was placed on sale for use on the route mentioned, and still later in the same year another change in rate necessitated a 6-cent stamp, orange in color.

In the latter part of 1923 and early part of 1924 preparations were completed for a transcontinental route reaching from New York to San Francisco. This route was divided into three zones, with western limits at Chicago, Cheyenne, and San Francisco, and the air mail rates were fixed at 8 cents per ounce for each zone or portion of a zone over which the mail was carried by plane. The service was instituted in 1924, but the stamps had anticipated the date by almost a year.

Origin of Mystic Shrine

Dates Back to 644 A. D.

More than twelve hundred years ago a small band of harried Arabs, impatient with the slow processes of Eastern justice, determined to take the law into their own hands, says a writer in the Washington Star.

They gathered together at Mecca, in Arabia, in the twenty-fifth year of the Hegira (644 A. D.), under the leadership of the Mohammedan, Khalif Alce, a son-in-law of the prophet himself. Their object was clear—to dispense justice and execute criminals who escaped the penalties of the corrupt courts of the time, after such persons had been validly accused.

They bound themselves to work speedily, to work quietly, in order that security and secrecy might be maintained. They pledged themselves to three aims—punish the guilty, protect the weak and promote religious toleration.

Thus began the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, an international confraternity which today numbers millions of men in every corner of the world.

Many times the work of the organization was halted by revolutions in the Oriental nations, where it first flourished.

Indian Diplomacy

Three hundred years ago the chief of one of the Indian tribes of the Connecticut river valley, the Podunks, journeyed to the Massachusetts and Plymouth colonies to invite them to see the fertile Connecticut valley and share it with them. This was Indian diplomacy rather than generosity, and the choice of the lesser of two evils. In order to gain the protection of the English rather than pay tribute to the warlike Pequots of southeastern Connecticut and also to the savage Moheawks of New York. As a result of this visit, and for other reasons, Thomas Hooker led a little band of men, cattle and household supplies overland through the wilderness to the Connecticut valley and a new colony was formed.—Washington Post.

Sisters Under the Skin

Primitive ways of the Indian maidens of old differed but little from those of their white sisters of today, says Pathfinder Magazine. Arapaho girls kept a good supply of "sweet-smelling" leaves on hand for their garments and perfume made from weed seeds for their hair. Instead of a tiny compact the Arapaho damsel carried a toilet case made of animal hide in which she kept her paints, powder and perfume together with a hair-partner, a porcupine-tail brush, earrings and other jewelry. Indian mothers taught their daughters proper deportment and warned them to pay no attention to flirtatious young braves who sought to attract their attention by mirror flashing, etc.

Cow Has Three Stomachs

In a cow or steer there are three stomachs and each one is edible, a fact few people know. The first stomach is the one commonly known and sold as tripe. On the inside, it is very rough and of a yellow color, resembling a very coarse honeycomb bedspread. The second stomach is much the same as the first only the netting inside is much coarser and each mesh is eight-sided. This tripe is known as the "humble." The third, and last tripe is like a book with many leaves, both short and wide but all joined to one central hinge. This tripe is known locally as the "bible," but its correct name is many-plies.—Montreal Herald.

Province of India

Ladakh is a Tibetan district of the Kashmir, comprising the valley of the upper Indus, about 30,000 square miles in extent. It is one of the loftiest inhabited regions of the world, the valleys and plateaus ranging from 9,000 to 17,000 feet. Its capital is Leh, which has the most elevated observatory in Asia. The earliest notice of Ladakh is by a Chinese pilgrim in 400 A. D.; he found Buddhism flourishing there. It was a part of the Tibetan empire until about a century ago when it was captured by the Sikhs.

GOOD OLD WHEY MAKES GOOD

Milk was man's first food. It still is first in importance, as well as in antiquity. In point of historical time, cheese, a milk product—was the first manufactured food; then came butter.

One might think that in the several thousand years since man first began experimenting with dairy products, he would have discovered all important facts about milk, its various forms and uses. But the wonders of milk seem to be inexhaustible.

Modern science has just discovered a way of utilizing the special dietetic virtues of the thin, watery liquid—whey—once a discarded by-product of cheesemaking. Cheese is made from the casein and butter fat of milk, leaving the whey. This fraction of milk contains a high percentage of the minerals of milk, the bone building elements, and the vitamins necessary to maintain health and bodily vigor.

With this laboratory development whey in powdered form is coming into its own as a valuable means of combating diseases of malnutrition. Experiments extending over period of years with the whey powder have proved the importance of this fraction of milk in the rehabilitation of tuberculosis patients and in the treatment of rickets, and other diseases of malnutrition, according to an announcement just made public by Dr. F. H. Clickner, director of research of the Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation, under whose direction whey powder was evolved. "The therapeutic value of whey were known to the ancients," Dr. Clickner said, "although in recent years whey has been largely neglected. The eminent early physician Hippocrates, prescribed whey as a cure for scurvy, intestinal disorders and some mental disorders. The virtues of whey have long been recognized by the medical profession. Because whey powder is so highly concentrated, it is of special importance in treating the diseases of malnutrition. It contains 2½ times as much vitamin G and fluid milk in addition to calcium and phosphorus, a high percentage of milk sugar."

The discovery of a means whereby the high percentage of water can be evaporated from whey, leaving only the valuable milk solids is one of the really vital scientific discoveries of this decade. Just how important it may become in the preservation of human life, and in the treatment of disease, science is beginning to discover.

The Last Horse

By HAL G. VERMES
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate,
WNU Service.

HARRY the Pinhead spills his swell idea while we are at a little racetrack just this side of the Rio Grande where we are finding the greenbacks very scarce indeed. What Harry suggests is that we run a lottery just like the big one for the hospital fund on the Irish Sweeps.

"But," says Harry, "we will fix this pool so's everybody knows it is strictly on the level. Instead of a lottery on the hide what comes in first, this one will give a prize on the nag what comes in last."

"That is positively perfect!" agrees Beezer Bertie. "We will sell 50,000 tickets at two bucks apiece which amounts to one hundred grand. Fifty per cent for prizes, 25 per cent for charity, and we will collect twenty-five grand ourselves for our trouble."

"That is it," says Harry. "We will put up a prize of 10,000 bucks for the horse what comes in last and divide up the forty grand left into a lot of smaller prizes for the winning ticket holders."

It looks so good that even Mudder McFork, who always objects to other people's ideas, cannot find nothing to say. And it adds up okay to me.

We select a maiden event a month off which nobody has a idea what hide will win. We print up the tickets and long before the heat we have sold them all. Everybody buys because all Americans, and especially these steer wranglers in the West, like to take a chance.

On racing day the little oval is mobbed with the gang what has bought tickets on our Last Horse Sweeps; and they are all much excited because nobody knows what hide will come in last. The two-year-olds what never won a race are lined up at the barrier; the bell bangs and they are off to a beautiful start.

The field goes pounding by us, takes the clubhouse turn, and runs for the back stretch. But then they do something which is very strange indeed. The pack is still running but not so fast. When they reach the last turn the ponies act like they are out of breath. Coming down the home stretch they slow down to a walk and fifty yards from the wire all the horses stop and lay down!

Seeing we started the pool, the boys and me are sitting in the judge's stand and when this peculiar thing happens we are practically speechless. But then Harry figures it out.

"The purse for the hide what wins this race," he says thoughtful like, "is only 1,000 bucks while we are giving ten times that as a prize for the pony what comes in last. Therefore, none of the horse owners want their hide to come in first."

The crowd is laughing themselves sick at first but after an hour goes by and we still cannot get the horses to move, it looks like we'll have a riot.

Then Harry gets another idea and calls up the owner of one of the ponies in the race. "We will contribute 10,000 bucks out of our share of this pool," he offers, "if you will have your horse finish the race. So you will get as much as the prize and besides an extra grand which is the purse money."

To this the owner agrees. He then instructs his jockey and so the boy gets on the horse and walks him across the finish line. But the race is not yet over for the crowd does not care what horse comes in first; they are only interested in the lottery tickets they bought which gives prizes on the hide what ambles home last. So we are yet nowhere at all because the other nine ponies are still laying in the middle of the track and not caring how about nothing.

"Well," says one of the judges, "we will call the race off and you can return the money to the ticket holders."

But we do not want to do that because although we already have give away ten grand we still have fifteen grand profit left to us for all our work. And now Harry has a third idea. But first he asks the judges to announce that they will give the other horses just five minutes to ride home or lose the race by default.

Then we go down and Harry speaks to the jockeys in the middle of the stretch. "If none of you booters are going to ride across this finish line," he explains, "then we will consider that the hide what was first in this race is also last. He will therefore win both prizes as the front end of him come in first and the back end of him come in last. So now you smart boys can stay here all night and laugh that off!"

After Harry reads this ultimatum, the jockeys go into a very serious conference and by the time we are back in the judges' stand, they are mounting their hides again.

"Ah!" I exclaim. "At last they have made up their minds to finish this lunatic race so we will know who is the last horse to come in."

But it did not turn out like we think. After the jockeys get on their nags, they slowly amble down toward the wire. But they are not forgetting that the last horse to come in will win ten grand. So just before they reach home they line up, the jockeys hold each others' arms, and the whole nine hides ride across the finish line together!

And that is why instead of making ourselves twenty-five grand profit in this Last Horse Lottery, we instead lose nearly one hundred grand and my writing arm is very tired from signing I. O. U's, because the judges decide that as all the nine bangtails come in last, they are each and every one entitled to the grand prize of $10,000!

CLUB DISPLAYS

ONE HUNDRED COUNTIES TOOK PROMINENT PART IN KENTUCKY STATE FAIR

Four-H club boys and girls from approximately 100 counties took a prominent part in the Kentucky State Fair, exhibiting dairy cattle, swine, sheep, poultry, clowning, canned and baked foods, and engaging in a big livestock judging contest.

A display of 1,000 costumes, dresses and other garments made by club girls in their sewing projects, attracted the admiration of thousands of fair visitors, and a large booth filled with hundreds of cans of fruits, vegetables, meats, jellies, jams, preserves and pickles revealed the valuable training which club girls are receiving in food preservation.

Teams of three boys each from 50 counties took part in the livestock judging contest. Union county won first in fat stock, Christian in dairy cattle and Floyd in poultry. Evans, Lynn, Union county, was the best individual judge of fat stock. Miss Jacqueline Wiedeburg, Christian, the best in placing dairy animals, and Carmel Clarke, of the winning, Floyd county team the best in poultry judging.

The following State champions in 4-H club work were selected during the State Fair: Clothing, Miss Greta Moss, Kenton county; foods, Miss Mickey Malone, Campbell county; canning, Miss Minnie Ruth Ryle, Christian county; room improvement, Miss Norma Arnold, Jefferson county; swine, a Percy Adair III, Bourbon county; sheep, James Thornton, Owen county, and poultry, Louis Hartung, Jefferson county.

COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE RECOMMENDS SOWING OF SMALL GRAIN COVER CROP

As lespezed leaves the ground practically bare in winter, the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture recommends the sowing of a small grain cover crop in the lespezed stubble this fall. Wheat or rye, which may be sowed through October, tends to prevent soil leaching and erosion.

Grain sowed in lespezed may be used for early spring pasture, and will not damage the lespezed if grazed not later than April or May. If it does not increase the wheat acreage beyond the AAA allotment of the owner, the grain may be harvested in the regular way.

To sow, disk the lespezed ground and use a disk drill, or sow broadcast and disk in lightly. Sow about six pecks to the acre.

BASE BALL NEWS

The South Fork team came over to Midway Park Sunday and played a close game with the Midway team, the score was 6 to 5 in favor of the South Fork boys. A large crowd of fans on both sides attended. Next Sunday Sept. 29th, the Big Bone team will play at Midway park. Don't miss this game. Game called at 2:30 fast time. No admission at gate.

Midway Ball Club

Col. Joe Anderson, former Covington pugilist, Ralph Groger, Jake Eads, and Bob Eads left for New York Sunday afternoon to attend the Baer-Louis heavyweight fight. Word has been received that they are having an enjoyable trip and they expect to return home Wednesday or Thursday of this week.

Mrs. Bess Rouse entertained last Sunday Rev. D. Armond and wife and Dr. Corbett, of Fort Mitchell, Ky.

An immense gathering bringing together an immense crowd of people took place at Corbin Ky. The gathering was estimated at 11,000 people.

The affair was in three parts with the city of Corbin and the Louisville & Nashville railroad cooperating in the arrangement of details. Included in the cycle of events was the dedication of the new Center Street underpass, named in honor of Robert A. Corbin, secretary of the Corbin Chamber of Commerce, of which some 3,000 were present; a trip to Cumberland Falls with dinner in Circle Cave; and an L. & N. Family Rally at Legion Field. The latter event was featured by an address by L. & N. President James B. Hill, entertainment by employees of the railroad and a fireworks display. This was attended by about 5,000 persons, mostly L. & N. employees and their families.

The first locomotive to ever turn a wheel, took a whistle and scare a cow in the State of Indiana, according to the September L. & N. Employees' Magazine, was the "Elkhorn" property of the Lexington & Ohio Railroad, now a part of the Eastern Kentucky Division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

The occasion was the opening of the 17 mile Madison & Indianapolis Railroad in 1838. The locomotive ordered from Philadelphia for this event having been lost in transit, the "Elkhorn" wasorrowed from the L. & O. at Louisville, floated up the Ohio river to Madison and made its historic trip on the 17 mile M. & I. track from Madison to Graham's Creek on November 29, 1838.

WHEAT CONTRACT

THE NEW WHEAT ADJUSTMENT CONTRACT WILL RUN FOUR YEARS

The new wheat adjustment contract is to run four years, thereby reducing the cost of frequent sign-ups and enabling farmers to plan their operations over a longer period, points out a statement from the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

Signers may voluntarily withdraw at the end of two years, and the adjustment program may be discontinued on a majority vote of farmers in a national referendum.

Farmers are assured a full parity return on their allotments through a flexible payment plan. A first payment will be made, and then a second payment large enough to make the price parity.

Reduction will never be more than 25 per cent of the base, and may be less, depending upon the national and world wheat situation. Present plans call for a five per cent cut for next year. Growers will agree to hold their acreage within the base figure, if no reduction is asked.

The base years are the same as at present—1930-32 for acreage and 1928-32 for production. Under certain conditions, four and five-year bases may be used.

All growers who can establish a base may sign, whether they signed previous contracts or not.

Land removed from production, to be known as adjusted acreage, may be used for pasture, hay, soil improvement, trees, etc.

Boone county 4-H clubs will have opportunity to study parasite and disease control in livestock and poultry at their community 4-H club meeting during the winter months, according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

Dr. T. P. Polk, Field Veterinarian from the College of Agriculture, has accepted an offer to attend the meetings and through use of specimens of the various parasites and diseases give educational lectures on important fundamentals in control. The disease problem in livestock and poultry production is becoming more serious each year. This work should prove highly valuable.

MANY THANKS

The members of Florence Baptist church wish to thank the people who made their annual fried chicken supper a success. A success it was indeed, for all those who came from the immediate vicinity, from Walton, Beaver Lick, Burlington, Erlanger, Latonia, Covington, a party of four who is visiting here from New York, also many others (for everyone is on our memory book) not only helped in a financial way, but were so complimentary, happy and friendly. We shall always look upon that Saturday evening as a most eventful one. We appreciate all donations and especially do we wish to thank the Florence Drug Co., for the gift of ice cream. The chairman and her committee want to thank all who responded to their calls and worked so faithfully, and the dining room manager is grateful to Y. W. A. and G. A.'s for their efficient service. The Country Store comes in for a share of gratefulness to those who donated and to those who purchased, also to our own fine auctioneer. Again we express our appreciation to those of other faiths and all who came and in any way took part.

Now we invite you to worship with us on the second and fourth Sundays. You are always welcome. Then come to our community sing on the 5th Sunday in Sept. at 7:45 P. M. Everybody to sing who cares and others to enjoy the happy gospel in song. All neighboring churches will be represented. We look for a large crowd. God willing. Our circle meetings will be October 3rd this time and W. M. U. October 10.

The local school has from year to year sponsored certain campaigns as a benefit for a library and for other school improvements. At the present time there is a magazine selling campaign in progress, being sponsored by the Curuss Publishing Co., through the local school. New subscriptions and renewals of the Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, and Ladies Home Journal can be obtained from any pupil of the seventh and 8th grades and high school.

Special awards will be given to individuals making the most sales and the school administration will receive one half of all sales for the benefit of some school improvement.

Mrs. Wallace Clore is nursing Mrs. Luther Smith and small son this week.

RELIEF

NO DIRECT RELIEF TO BE GIVEN, ONLY PERSONS ABLE TO WORK WILL BE GIVEN WORK

Geo. H. Goodman, Louisville Works Progress Commission, has written Judge N. E. Riddell, that beginning November 1, 1935, no direct relief will be given, that only persons able to work will be given work by that administration. That in Boone county the relief records show that on the unworkable rolls there are fifty-two persons, who will be without further relief after that date unless it is furnished by those persons by the county, state and municipality in which they reside. With the reduced income to the counties, cities and municipalities, on account of reduced assessments, it is feared that the municipalities can not adequately care for those on the rolls as this would have to be done until state legislation enacts laws for the state to take advantage of the National Social Security act recently signed by the President. It is hoped that the order will be suspended as at this time of the year taking from the unworkable people on the rolls, just at the beginning of winter will cause untold suffering.

The W. M. U. of the Burlington Baptist church met at the church for an all day meeting Sept. 20th to observe the week of prayer, with Mrs. Annie Gaines president.

The morning program was opened by singing Jesus Calls Us, and followed with the devotional led by Mrs. Lucille James. The meeting was then turned over to Mrs. Alice Yelton, who had a very attractive and inspiring program, the subject being "Lifting the Banner through Stewardship."

Stewards, Time and Influence—Elaine Greenup. Stewards of Opportunities and Possession—Helen Clore. Rewards of Stewardship—Pauline Smith.

Faithful in Adversity—Mrs. W. D. Cotton. Song—Trust, Try and Love Me.

We were dismissed by Mrs. Huey. Everyone reported a very enjoyable day, the number present being thirteen.

Both retail and wholesale trade broadened into greater volume throughout the country during the past week, according to Department of Commerce reports from 33 cities just received by its Louisville District Office. The forward trade movement is based largely on a background of the following major influences: favorable weather, stimulated buying power in agricultural sections, sustained activity in building and construction, and generally improved employment conditions brought about by AAA allotment and increased industrial production. The Louisville office reported: Buying of fall lines, and reopening of schools have stimulated sales which continue at volume ahead of same period a year ago. Further gains for industries, machine tools, hardware, etc., shown.

Corn and tobacco greatly benefited by rains. Much of lower crop has been cut and housed; injury from "wild-fire" reported scant; Dark tobacco crop reported smaller than usual in size but poundage about same; considerable third crop alfalfa put up in western counties. Soil moisture favorable for plowing. Western Kentucky farmers report cotton loaf worm doing considerable damage to cotton crops in that section.

THE RED CROSS REGIONAL CONFERENCE TO BE HELD IN KENTUCKY DURING NEXT TWO WEEKS

Washington, D. C., Sept. 23.—Representatives from Kentucky's 139 Red Cross Chapters will meet in a series of ten regional conferences during the next two weeks, it was announced today by Richard F. Allen, Manager of the Eastern Area.

All phases of Red Cross public health, disaster, relief, and accident prevention activities will be discussed at these conferences. Everett Dix, Assistant Manager of the Eastern Area, will outline the service program of the national organization for the coming year in its relation to Kentucky. Mr. Dix will also review the accomplishments of Kentucky Chapters in the year past. He will attend all of the meetings.

The first two conferences will be held in Newport and Paris on September 25 the first meeting in the Grace Methodist Church of Newport from 10 a. m. until 2 p. m., with Mr. Forest Alvin as Conference Chairman. In Paris the conference will be held in the Christian Church from 5:30 until 9 p. m., Judge H. B. Wilson, of Irvine, presiding.

In Ashland at the Bellefontaine Club on September 26, 11 Chapters in that vicinity will meet with Mr. Howard Van Antwerp, Vice Chairman of the Boyd County Chapter, officiating. On the following day 11 Chapters in the Hazard district will convene in the Baptist church in that city, Mr. M. C. Begley, Leslie County Chapter Chairman, presiding.

The next conference will be held in Corbin on Monday, September 30, at the First Christian Church, with Mr. J. P. Bailey, Corbin Chapter First Aid and Life Saving Chairman, in charge. Two conferences will be held on October 1, the first in Danville at the Lexington avenue Baptist church, and the second in Elizabethtown at the Brown-Pusey Community House. At the Danville meeting, which starts at 10 a. m., Mr. R. S. Dunlin will preside.

The annual convention of the Churches of Christ in Boone County convened at Walton last Tuesday. A splendid program was rendered and enjoyed by a very appreciative audience composed of representatives from the various congregations of the county.

The lauders of Walton church received the hearty applause of all by their courteous hospitality and splendid lunch and refreshments. The officers for the ensuing year—President, G. F. Schram; Vice, President, J. M. Erwin; Secy.—Mrs. Mary Berkshire.

The fifth Sunday, Sept. 29, there will be communion services at the Florence church at 3 P. M. S. T. The convention will meet with Petersburg church in 1936.

A Young Men's Democratic Club was organized at the Court House Tuesday evening. Young Democrats from all precincts in the county were present. It is the purpose of the club to make an intensive campaign for the Democratic ticket at the November election and organize every precinct and see that every Democratic vote in the county is cast. Officers for the club were elected as follows: Walter Furgeson, President, Union; Arthur Maurer, Vice President, Florence; H. Rogers, Secretary, Petersburg; C. D. Benson, Treasurer, Burlington.

Other meetings of the club will be held at such times and places in the county during the campaign as will best serve the interest of the entire Democratic ticket. This club should be of great benefit to the Democratic party and will no doubt remove from the minds of the Democrats some of the strife and feeling that manifested itself during the recent primaries. Let every Democrat get behind this organization of young Democrats and render every assistance within his or her power for the success of the Democratic club and the Democratic party, not only in Boone county, but in the state and Nation.

According to Mr. Furgeson the Republican candidate for Governor has in his opening speeches not only criticized the state and National administration and the Democratic candidates for State offices but a number of their friends, and it will be necessary for all Democrats to meet the critics and give to the public a full and complete statement of facts connected with such criticism.

Born to the wife of Lutner Smith (nee Rice), of the Burlington-Belleview pike, on September 23, a fine 7 pound boy. The little Mr. Smith was born on his great grandmother Rice's birthday. Both the mother and baby are doing nicely at the time of this writing.

TELEPHONE CO.

TELEPHONE COMPANY NOW HAS MOST MODERN EQUIPMENT AT HEBRON EXCHANGE

The Consolidated Telephone Co., now has the most modern exchange equipment at its Hebron exchange having completed the work about one week ago, this equipment which is semi-automatic assures faster and better service to the patrons of this exchange, the company realizing that the small exchange is not as efficient as the larger ones as a rule now have this combined with the Florence exchange to as better service to both communities, the patrons of the Hebron exchange will ring central in the usual manner, the operator at Florence will receive the call and dial back thru the new switchboard for the party called, this connection is more sure than when done on the old manual type switchboard, patrons of this exchange should be proud to know that they are one of the first in the state to receive this modern telephone switching, the equipment is housed in the rear of the Tanner Barber Shop in Hebron and the public will be invited to inspect this new feature at an early date, also there will be a pay telephone and collection station in the building. E. G. Stephenson had charge of the installation and will maintain the equipment. He did a very attractive and efficient job and will endeavor to keep this apparatus in good condition twenty-four hours a day. The purchase and installation of this exchange were made possible by the company manager C. O. Hennessy after a careful study of the needs to improve the service in the community, and it is the start toward the completion of a program to improve the lines and all parts of the plant to the end that service is as near perfect as possible according to the manager.

RADIO SPEAKERS IMPROVED BY NEW PROCESS

Employing a newly developed process projecting welding never before used in the construction of loud speakers, General Electric engineers have been able to produce a highly stabilized dynamic speaker superior to former types, according to Winfield Myers, who said that the speaker was one of the many outstanding features of the new General Electric radio which his firm now has on display. Mr. Myers explained that this new process of projection welding made it possible to fix permanently the position of the center post in its relation to the other parts of the speaker. This results in rigidity of construction that eliminates extraneous vibration and rattles. He pointed out that it is only natural that this latest development in speaker design should emanate from the famous "House of Magic" laboratories, as it was in these same laboratories that the early research, which led to the perfection of the first dynamic speaker, took place.

"The new stabilized dynamic speaker," said Mr. Myers, "coupled with the many other improvements made possible by the revolutionary metal tube, which is used throughout in the new G-E radios, has established entirely new standards for true, undistorted reproduction, with substantially greater amplification of short wave reception."

COUNTY COMMUNITY SERVICE

There will be a County Community Service at the Florence Christian Church, Sunday, Sept. 29, 1935, at 3:00 P. M., Western Standard time.

Rev. Herbert Tinney will preach. Members and friends from all over the County are cordially invited.

400 TONS

FOUR HUNDRED TONS OF LIMESTONE CRUSHED FOR AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES

Approximately 400 tons of limestone was crushed for agricultural purposes in the Boone County Soil improvement program the past week, according to Joe Broderick, Assistant County Agent.

The program is expected to progress rapidly from now on. Farmers are getting caught up with most of their farm work and the recent dry weather is permitting farmers to get rock out. Samples of stone being crushed is being tested for chemical and mechanical analysis. It is stone tested to date has been found to be of good quality. Those farmers who may experience trouble getting help at the time of pulverizing stone may secure help by notifying the pulverizer operator or the County Agent's office.

WHAT ABOUT "SEED" FOR THE FUTURE

A perusal of important provisions of the Revenue Act of 1935 (the "soak-the-rich" tax bill) should satisfy the most ardent "share-the-wealth" advocate.

For the past several years, leading tax boosters in Congress have pointed out that this country could stand still higher taxes because our levies on business and income had not yet reached the figures in leading European countries.

Just why we should try to break the European record of debt-ridden and bankrupt nations, has never been explained. But our congressional tax boosters have apparently won their goal. Along with breaking many other world's records, we will apparently soon climb the high tax record—if we have not already secured that unenviable distinction.

When one reads over the percentage of earnings taken by the various income taxes, surtaxes, corporation taxes, excess profits taxes, capital stock taxes and estate taxes, etc., one begins to wonder what the future of American earnings and savings will be.

Take the surtaxes alone: They start at 31 per cent on $30,000; then 31 per cent on $30,000, 3 per cent on $30,000 and 3 per cent on over $50,000.

If a man leaves an estate, the tax rates up to 2 per cent on net estates up to $10,000, to 40 per cent on estates over $50,000, with a $40,000 exemption.

What inducement is there for an individual who has worked and saved money, to invest in an undertaking that would employ labor? Why run the risk?

The American people are hardy. They are pioneers. They are energetic. They want to do things. But the mounting trend in taxation and the confiscatory inheritance taxes which destroy life-time savings, may break the heart of private initiative and enterprise.

It will be a grim crop the tax gatherer reaps as he starves harvesting the estate taxes of America. He may gather one good crop from each family but, in his greed, it looks as if he would fail to leave enough seed to provide "provable" income or inheritance.

DO YOUR PART!

Fire Prevention Week is to be observed from October 6 to 12. And here is a thought worth considering in the meantime:

Friendly fire—fire under control—is one of man's greatest boons. It keeps us warm, cooks our foods, motivates our industries, and serves us in countless other ways.

Unfriendly fire—fire out of control—is one of man's greatest enemies. It destroys property—causing irreparable economic loss. It menaces life. It hampers progress. It threatens community development, and industrial activity and employment.

A building for example, represents something beside money. It represents energy, achievement, labor. It is a factory building, it represents creative, productive wealth. When fire destroys that building, insurance will give back part of the money at cost, but nothing can give back the energy that was wasted. Nothing can make up for the work lost, the jobs destroyed, the fire caused. The indirect costs of fire—costs which cannot be put into a balance sheet—are the real measure of our national fire waste. Those indirect costs are many times the direct costs.

Somewhere, as you read this, a home is being burned to the ground. A factory building is a smoldering ruin. A man is screaming in pain from a burn that will prove fatal. All this is the result of someone's oversight, someone's carelessness, someone's stupidity. Are you willing to do your part to minimize such happenings in the future?

INTERNATIONAL HEADACHES

Secretary of State Hull has laid down the moral law regarding the neutrality of the Keegon-Brand treaty which 6 nations signed. But unfortunately his able protests have been directed against the immorality of war, just now threatening the peace of the world.

The State Department at Washington got a load off its chest when it scolded the Russians for permitting plotting against the United States. The real grievance against Russia is that it has not paid any part of its debt to this country or bought American goods. Uncle Sam has a little way of his own in talking about high ideals when European nations fleece our Federal treasury. It is not the hurt of the war debt defaults it might be rather hard for the Government to maintain its lofty composure.

Editorial of the Week

LUXURY OR NECESSITY—WHICH IS IT?

When pork is sixty cents a pound the housewife hesitates and asks: "Can I afford such a luxury?" Perhaps if she understood the ramifications of killing little pigs, the control of production and the artificial boosting of prices, she would improve her understanding of politics vs. economics. Pork is still a necessity despite the fact that 20 to 25 cents is found tucked away in the price of a pound. It really should be blocked off like a checker-board with truthful labels such as "government extravagance" and "taxation." The other ten or twelve ounces could then be labeled, "Oh, you pig!"

When is a luxury a necessity—and when is a necessity a luxury? That might be called an anagram, a contradiction, or a corker. But it is none of these, so we shall see:

You are some times told that you don't have to have gasoline, but you can't follow your natural processes of making a living, and living according to your natural processes, without gasoline. So, it must be that it is a necessity. Why then does the tax collector get from 20 to 40 per cent of the dollar that you pay at the service station—depending upon what State you are in? Is it a nigger from the days when folks bought coal oil and kerosene at the corner grocery and went to the drug store for the refined product of gasoline and benzene? Are legislators still drug-store minders? By way of apology for the dumbness the officials decided that all gas tax money must be used to build highways, but the same officials proved the old saying that hell is paved with good intentions by converting the tax money into the general funds—to buy coal, pay salaries, etc. So why soak the motorist for every mile he rides—he needs a car! He pays a big tax on it, too, when he buys it—and that's where soaking the automobile and the motorist should end. If an automobile is not a necessity, then brooms and wheelbarrows are luxuries for the poor.

A GOOD DEAL FOR LAWYERS
Regardless of the question of whether the new deal is a good thing or not one is reminded of the old saying that every dark cloud has its silver lining. The silver lining, in this instance, is for lawyers, and many of them are enjoying silver prosperity in testing out the constitutionality of many of the acts passed by the recent Congress.

and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL
By Carter Field

Washington.—Latin-America seems to be following the example of the administration with respect to utilities—particularly utilities owned by the same general interests in the United States so vigorously attacked by President Roosevelt.

Mexico's president has called for government ownership of telephone, telegraph and railroad lines—the last an extra added feature, not on the New Deal agenda. Chile is making trouble for American and Foreign Power, having caught it trying to smuggle funds out of Chile back to American investors. And so it goes all the way down the line, from the Rio Grande to Cape Horn, with just a few exceptions, notably Brazil.

Sensors just back from Cuba report that not only is there little likelihood that the Cubans will be able for some time to come to pay interest on the big bond issues floated for public improvements, but there is little disposition to pay. Privately these sensors think this particular investment has just been wiped out, as far as American bondholders are concerned.

Tons of literature containing the attacks made on American holding companies in the utility fight have been circulated through Latin-America. It is blamed by some students of the situation for stirring up the present movement. Central and South American officials agree that it gives them a splendid excuse for stepping in, nationalizing the utilities, and keeping the profits—if any—in their own companies instead of sending dividends back to the United States.

Latin-American officials are quoting glibly from the attacks sponsored by the administration, demanding why their people should be taxed to pay dividends on watered stock, and to pay service charges by holding companies out of all proportion to the service rendered!

Coercion Not Expected

They feel confident that no strong arm methods will be used to coerce them, or to protect these American interests if the plants are taken over by the government. Further, they feel that the Roosevelt administration will not be harsh about it if the values $330 in the condemnation proceedings are very low indeed. In fact, they think it would be rather difficult for Secretary of State Cordell Hull to frame a strong argument against valuations so low that the American investors would think they were being murdered.

But that isn't all the gloom from the investor's standpoint. Plans fairly under way in some of the Latin countries contemplate making payment for such utility plants as may be taken over by governments in bonds, issued of course by the government, federal or local, which takes the plant over.

No stockholder in any of the big American companies with investments abroad would throw his hat in the air over the idea of taking payment for anything in bonds of the foreign country concerned. Market for any such bonds is at a very low ebb, without much prospect of improving. American investors have taken such a beating on foreign bonds in the last few years that they do not hanker for any more.

All of which presents a very gloomy picture indeed to a good many American shareholders. And bondholders.

It is a repercussion of the administration's policy, which was not foreseen by anyone. It is made possible not only by the domestic policy inside the United States with respect to utilities, but to the strong stand taken by the administration in denouncing "dollar diplomacy," and making it perfectly clear that ill treatment of American investors is not necessarily a matter that might lead to wars.

But there is another complication. Great Britain has a good many similar investments. She has railroads in Mexico, which may be taken over. And whenever the present trouble between Italy and Ethiopia is over Britain may be much more interested in what happens to her investors than the American government is in it.

Which would bring the old Monroe doctrine up for another dusting off.

Textile Troubles

A net loss of $438,062.92 despite the largest sales in the company's history, nearly $29,000,000 while taxes amounted to $1,874,765.82 were paid, is alleged to be typical of the entire textile industry. This is the report of the Pepperell Manufacturing company, with headquarters at Biddeford, Maine, regarded as one of the most successful textile concerns in all New England.

These operating results, Treasurer Russell H. Leonard said, are "typical of the industry as a whole for the same period" (fiscal year ended June 30 last), and moved him to ask the stockholders "wherein lie the reasons for an essential industry remaining profitless under a governmental plan presumably dedicated to its rehabilitation?"

Overproduction, Mr. Leonard said, was the major difficulty of the cotton textile industry and the primary cause of its losses. He said that consumption of cotton textiles has not been far below normal.

"This economic principle was, in fact, at work in our industry for some years," Mr. Leonard's report continued. "But the National Recovery act upset the working of this principle and facilitated—indeed encouraged—increased production. Paradoxically, shortening the weekly running time to 40 hours expanded the output. Because the overhead costs of a mill on one shift of only 40 hours weekly operation became increasingly burdensome, mills running one shift per week were forced to increase to two shifts in order to compete with mills already on a two-shift basis."

A single shift of 50 hours, Mr. Leonard contended, could supply all the consumptive needs of the country.

This statement is highly interesting in view of the fact that the American Federation of Labor is even now preparing to do battle in the next session of congress for a 30-hour week law, a fight which it abandoned in the last session because the Federation for its own reasons was much more interested in concentrating on the Wagner Labor Relations act.

Great Handicap

Mr. Leonard also paid his respects to the AAA and processing taxes.

"The market prices of cotton goods during the year were so low," he said, "that it was not possible to pass all these taxes on to our customers. This recovery measure therefore was a great handicap to recovery in our industry."

"The floor stock taxes and processing taxes paid by this company since the agricultural act went into effect have amounted to about $4,000,000."

"Spindle capacity must be reduced or production of existing capacity controlled," Mr. Leonard continued, "if the industry is to become even reasonably profitable over an extended period."

"Possibly some method to solve the latter problem may yet be devised, but it becomes increasingly difficult, after surveying the maze of such experiments under the National Recovery act, to determine how even governmental planning, or planning under the sanction of the government, can make uneconomic principles work for any extended period. It is difficult for even an omniscient government to thwart economic law! Assuming that two shifts of 40 hours weekly were continued, the soundest solution that has come to our attention would be to eliminate the surplus spindle capacity. There is some disagreement as to what this amounts to, but the figures are probably around six to seven million spindles out of a total in place of about 31 million."

"A great deal has been said about the industrial problems of New England and inability of its manufacturers to compete with those in some other sections of the country in production of cotton textiles. It is certain that they cannot compete indefinitely unless the total costs, including labor, are on a competitive basis. The solution of the problem lies with the people of New England. If it costs more to produce a yard of the same cloth in Maine than it does in the South, then, eventually, the goods will be produced in the South."

Guarding Roosevelt

The shooting of Huey Long is expected to result in much more elaborate protection being forced on President Roosevelt by the secret service, whether the President likes it or not. Present protection, officials say privately, is excellent against cranks, and has proved satisfactory for the most part because as a rule that sort of danger to Presidents comes only from cranks. The man who killed Huey Long may have developed a persecution mania, but he is not classified as a crank under the standards considered, when officials are protected.

As a matter of fact, while no secret service official would say this publicly, they do not believe the shooting could have happened—that way—if secret service operatives had been on the job instead of Senator Long's bodyguard.

Had Baton Rouge been Rome, and had Long been Mussolini, the attacker could not have been in the chamber through which Long was passing. It would have been impossible. In fact, best judgment of our own officials, who have studied Mussolini's protective service, believe that he could be killed only by a rifle fired from a considerable distance.

This writer attended a session of the Italian senate, back in 1927, which Mussolini attended. The writer rode to the building in an American embassy car, with the late Warren Delano Robins, then counselor of the embassy, and later minister to Canada.

Although the embassy shield was on the door of the rather distinctive car, guards about the senate entrance were not only nervous but impatient when the chauffeur attempted to stop.

How Italy Does It
The first consideration of Mussolini's guardians was that this street must be kept open. No chance for the first car to start a block was tolerated. So even an embassy car, driving up to the normal entrance to the diplomatic gallery of the senate, was not permitted even to pause. Shouted directions, more or less menacing, kept it moving.

Thus we traversed three streets leading to the chamber. Every one of them was lined with soldiers, police, and men so obviously plain clothes operative that the most inexperienced of crooks would have recognized them for what they were.

Moreover, on the roofs of the houses lining these three streets, men were on guard. It is an old Latin custom. It goes back through the ages. And it is very effective.

FORTY YEARS AGO

From the Files of The Boone County Recorder

ISSUE OF SEPT. 25, 1895

This is splendid weather for putting tobacco.

Joe Revill has had some excellent crab cider made.

Dogs have been raiding the flocks of sheep of some of the farmers out on the Petersburg pike.

The indications are a considerable acreage of wheat will be sown in this county this fall.

There is supposed to be a defect in the bottom of the Ludlow Lagoon, and to remedy it, it will be necessary to drain the lake.

This is delightful weather for both man and beast. All that is necessary to perfect the gladdening of the heart is a good, soaking rain.

W. L. B. Rouse, of Limaburg, left two very large ears of corn at this office a few days ago. They are not evidences of a failure on the part of his corn crop.

Dr. J. G. Furnish has a scholarship in the Danville College, which he desires to present to some young worthy man in this county. Call on or address the Doctor for particulars.

There was no sale of the personality of Lewis Wrightman, last Saturday, for the want of bidders. The authorities at Anchorage discharged Wrightman in a few days after he was received the last time.

For sale, cheap if taken at once, quality of stock considered, 300 head of thoroughbred poultry, consisting of chickens, ducks and geese. Inclose stamp, and write for prices, to A. M. Acra, Burlington, Ky.

A mosquito wave struck the Bullittsville and Utzinger neighborhoods, and the little pests have been making life a burden at night out there. They can be neither driven nor coaxed out of a room, and when a person attempts to sleep they hold high carnival.

J. L. Frazier and R. T. Clements, of Union, were using fire in the work of cleaning up their farms last Saturday, when they lost control of it and lots of fence rails and long lines of wire fence were destroyed before a force sufficient to control it could be mustered.

The origin of the fire that destroyed Hiram Long's tobacco barn on Tuesday of last week, still remains a mystery. The barn was partially insured in the Citizens' Insurance Co., which, until recently, had its main office at Petersburg, this county. The 25,000 pounds of tobacco burned was covered by insurance in a foreign company.

As Rev. J. A. Kirtley was going to Big Bone, last Saturday morning, he drove his horse into Gunpowder creek to let it drink. He misjudged the depth of the water, and to get out he had to drive straight through the water, and the water running into the buggy, wetting him above the knees when standing. The buggy-cushion and his grip were about to float out of the buggy, but he saved them. It was an unexpected experience.

W. F. McKim will take his young horses to the Hamilton, Ohio, Fair. L. J. Riley, of Union, and J. A. Story, of Big Bone, were in town Monday.

Joseph Weaver and Moses Tanner attended the Atlanta Exposition, last week.

Mrs. Susie Ryle, (nee Walton) of Kansas City, Mo., is visiting her mother in the Rabbit Hash neighborhood.

Edson Riddell attended the K. of P. Grand Lodge in session at Somerset, Tuesday and Wednesday of last week.

M. L. Hull, of the Gunpowder neighborhood, died of dropsy at a hospital in Cincinnati, one day last week. The remains were interred at Hopeful last Friday afternoon. Mr. Hull was a clever young man, and all of his acquaintances were his friends. He was a correspondent of the Recorder for a long time, and his contributions were appreciated at this office.

Richwood

Mrs. Henry Dixon is very sick at this writing.

Rev. Davis has just returned from a trip to North Carolina and Virginia, bringing with him three sticks, two cut from the Vanderbilt game reserve of 20,000 acres and one from his own plantation in Virginia.

Florence

Mr. Joshua Tanner, who was stricken with paralysis, last week, is still in a critical condition.

Gasburg

Ennis Nixon, in stooping down to pick up a melon, ran a weed into his eye, making a painful wound. The reception in honor of Frank Klopp and bride, given by the groom's parents last Thursday, was largely attended. An elegant dinner was served and everything passed off pleasantly. The charivari at night is said to have been the most rattling affair that took place in this end of the county.

Petersburg

A. E. Chambers was baptized by Rev. Curry on Sunday.

Miss Carrie Hurd was visiting her sister, Mrs. Julius Utzinger, last week.

Hathaway

Dry weather continues and water is getting scarce every day. People as well as stock are suffering for water.

Bread made of new corn is on the bill of fare at present.

Limaburg

Uncle Austin Beemon, aged 83 years, 7 months and 5 days, died at 10 p. m., on the 19th inst. He had been in bad health for some time. The funeral took place at Hopeful, last Saturday, and was attended by a large crowd of the friends and neighbors of the deceased. He leaves a widow, aged 87, and one son and a daughter. He was a quiet, unassuming man, and held in high esteem by all who knew him. A good man has gone to his reward.

The Burlington and Florence State Road, was given another coat of fat last Friday afternoon.

Gayety Marks Ancestors'

Memorials With Chinese
Ancestor worship prevails in China, along with Buddhism, Taoism, and Confucianism. Custom provides for markers on the graves for identification purposes only. In every Chinese home, however, there is a tablet or shrine which contains the two ancestral names of the father and mother, carved on wood or written on paper, and before these incense is burned daily.

On a certain day, says a correspondent in the Chicago Tribune, the graves are visited by surviving relatives on a sort of festive occasion, partaking of the spirit of Easter, and to the children are imparted reverence and love for their own families.

Much productive land is occupied by these many graves, but every available foot of that remaining is made to produce. A primitive man-pushed plow or one pulled by a carabao (water buffalo) is the only visible agricultural implement. Treadmills to lift the water from one rice paddy to another are operated by four or five persons. Men and women stand alongside each other and trudge the long dreary day to turn the wheels, many of the women crippled with cruelly bound small feet, and most of the time there is enough of a breeze blowing to turn the water wheels without human labor. Not a windmill is permitted, because of superstitious fear of offending the wind and water spirits.

Matter of Dietetics

Not Much in Evidence

When the young woman teacher of dietetics married a physician the Woman thought it a most suitable match. Their little girl has now grown to be a chubby four-year-old. She certainly is a good advertisement for the strictly scientific upbringing, every one says, judging from her ruddy appearance. But a recent event in the life of this model child, related by her mother, has led the Woman to doubt whether the parents' adherence to the rules of science is entirely responsible for the perfect state of health of the little girl.

Her mother was busy in the house and had allowed Martha to play with the well-brought-up little boy next door. It was not long before Martha was called in to lunch. She came in blithely, sucking an enormous hard candy.

"Wherever did you get that piece of candy? And just before lunch, too?" asked the parent, horrified at this double infringement of the rules.

"Harry gave it to the doggie, and the doggie didn't like it," explained Martha.—New York Sun.

The Basset Hound

The Basset hound has never been overly popular in America and perhaps never will be so long as the little beagle and the domestic hound continue to serve their masters of the hunt. In appearance and form the Basset occupies a place of first importance in the lives of those who must hunt. In appearance in form the Basset resembles a cross between the dachshund and bloodhound. Somewhat larger than the beagle it is more ungainly with a face and head resembling the bloodhound. It comes in two types; long and short-haired, the former being the most popular field dog abroad. Its greatest popularity as a sporting animal is confined to France, England, Russia and Germany. Its color is that that fits any "hound."

Largest Antaters

The ant bear is the largest of the antaters. He grows to a height of about 2 feet and a length of 4. His tail is long and shaggy, and when he sleeps the ant bear spreads it over his body like an umbrella against sun and rain. He lives on the ground, but does not burrow, and his kind is comparatively scarce because he produces only one young ant bear at a time. Other creatures, unrelated to the antaters of South America, have somewhat similar habits. The aardvark of Africa and the spiny antater of Australia eat ants, but they are not true antaters. Members of the pangolin family are also addicted to an appetite for ants, but they are unrelated to the antaters.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Use of Word "Minnow"

Although the name "minnow" is popularly applied to almost any small fish, more technically it applies to members of the family Cyprinidae, which includes the dace, carp, etc. In the United States the name usually belongs to various small cyprinodonts, mainly of the large genus "Notropis" living in the lesser streams and frequently called shiners. The largest and best known of these is the golden shiner, which has a very small head, but is sometimes a foot in length.

Missouri Led Pioneers

Forty years before California cried "Gold!" the glowing reports of Lewis and Clark led settlers into the great Northwest. Pioneers in pirogues, bullboats and cottonwood log canoes traveled up the Missouri river at the rate of about nine miles a day. Until the coming of the trans-continental railroad, "Big Muddy," as the Missouri is called, and its branches were the principal highways into the West. Even wagon trains followed its course.

Moral for the Immoral

By JOHN E. DE ROSI
McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

FRANKIE AMORY had never been in love. He did not believe in love. He said there was no such thing. At least, not for him. He was right.

For Frankie, alas, was a professional gentleman, a gigolo—a genteel swindler, clever at the precarious art of blackmail. He could not afford to believe in love. It would not be wise.

But Frankie, despite all his wisdom, had erred, and the police were after him. He had made the sad mistake of pretending to make love to a police commissioner's wife, a very wealthy woman. Unfortunately, however, her husband happened to be a remarkably perceptive man and in a short time Frankie was very hurriedly leaving the city.

Frankie alighted at a summer resort high in the mountains. He took a room at the leading hotel and slept through most of the day. That night, at a costume masquerade he met Mrs. Winters, a wealthy, middle-aged divorcee. Frankie immediately went to work.

That week-end he was a guest at a house party in the great white castle on the mountainside—that was the Winters' mansion. And there he met Stephanie. He had been strolling among the guests with the possessive and almost girlish Mrs. Winters and they had come upon a large group at one end of the drawing room. Mrs. Winters playfully grasped one of the men by the sleeve.

"This is my bad, bad nephew Lyle," she said to Frankie, smiling broadly. "Lyle, this is Mr. Amory."

"Lyle has brought a charming young thing for the week-end," said Mrs. Winters. "I hear he has been paying a great deal of attention to her in the city." She smiled insinuatingly.

Frankie could catch only an occasional glimpse of the shoulder of the girl beyond Lyle. She was almost entirely screened by the men about her. Lyle turned toward her. "Oh, Stephanie."

The girl emerged from the circle smiling. Her eyes met Frankie's.

Frankie gasped. His heart seemed to stand still.

The next morning he sought out Stephanie. "I must talk to you," he implored. "Can't we walk some-where?"

She nodded eagerly, her eyes very bright, very innocent, very young. "I'll get a jacket." She touched his arm in a gesture of confidence—"I won't be a moment!"

He watched as she hurried away. She was so sweet!

They followed a little path up the mountainside and sat for hours in a cleared space overlooking the broad, far valley below.

After dinner they went for a drive. In the gradually gathering darkness they drove slowly up the mountain road. Passing a smooth stretch of gravel Frankie accelerated the car, and the wind whipped about them. Stephanie laughed, moving close to him. He laughed with her. His arm, in an unconscious motion, dropped over her shoulder. She leaned her head against the soft pad of his coat.

Farther on they stopped and watched the moonlit valley below. They sat there a long while. Once Stephanie said, "Oh, Frankie, isn't it grand! Couldn't you just stay here forever and ever?"

He looked at her. Everything within him seemed to fall away and leave him limp and lifeless. He took her hand. "Stevie," he whispered, "you're adorable!"

She looked shyly up at him. She said nothing, but he could feel her move to him. She held her eyes to his lips. "I like you, too, Frankie. . . ."

She came very close to him. The moon's light was silver on her moist, parted lips, luminous from her night-shadowed eyes.

He drew her to him, tight, tight. He could feel her soft fingers over his face, tracing the line of his lips, his chin. His words were lost in the silent cascade of her hair, but she heard them—"I love you, Stevie. I love you. . . ."

Lyle Winters slumped down in a chair with a shrug of resignation. Stephanie came across the room drawing on her gloves. She was a different Stephanie. There was an alien air of icy briskness about her. She spoke calmly to the man in the chair, but her tone was brittle. "Well, did you get the dough from your aunt?"

Winters nodded. He reached into an inside pocket and brought forth a neat parcel of currency. "Got the letters?"

"Yeah," Stephanie opened her handbag and produced a packet of envelopes. "Let's have the dough."

Envelopes and money changed hands. Winters sighed with relief. "Why the big rush, anyway?" he asked. A horn tooted outside.

The girl nodded toward the window. "The fish are biting."

Winters rose and went to the window. "Amory?"

The girl nodded. "Yeah." She crossed the room and paused by the door. "Well, so long." She smiled.

"And say, never write love letters to girls you don't know anything about."

And she was gone.

Winters saw Stephanie bend over and kiss Frankie. He watched as the car slid down the driveway.

"Well," he murmured, half aloud. "I wonder how much she'll get out of that sucker. . . ."

THE FARM AND HOME

(Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station)

Fertilize the lawn now and cut the grass high first of the year. Have the mower blade at least half an inch higher than was used in the summer. This will enable the grass to store plant food in its roots and also to act as a winter mulch.

A year of heavy rainfall in many Kentucky counties has increased interest in preventing erosion and in draining bottom lands. Reports indicate an unusually large seeding of rye and other cover crops over much of the state.

Good egg production during fall and winter, when prices are high, requires proper feeding. This means mash or grains that contain egg making materials. Skim milk or butter milk may be fed to advantage, where plentiful on the farm.

Precooking makes hard varieties of pears easier to pack in cans. Peel, cut in halves, core and cook in boiling medium syrup 4 to 8 minutes according to size. Pack in hot containers, concave side down. Cover with boiling syrup, completely seal and process containers of all sizes 20 minutes in boiling water.

Twenty tons of TVA superphosphate will be used in pasture, bluegrass and alfalfa demonstrations in Bracken county.

JOHN (THE MINISTER AND HIS PEOPLE)

LESSON TEXT—Third Epistle of John

GOLDEN TEXT—Beloved, imitate not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God: he that doeth evil hath not seen God: III John 11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Letter From John

JUNIOR TOPIC—With Ink and Pen. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making Our Church Friendly.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Friendly and Hospitable Church.

1. Personal History.
1. He was the son of Zebedee and brother of the apostle James (Matt. 4:21). The implication is that his father was in easy circumstances, for he had boats and hired servants (Mark 1:19, 20).

2. He was a disciple of John the Baptist (John 1:35-40). This was a most valuable training, for John was a man sent from God (John 1:6). The fiery eloquence of the Baptist no doubt profoundly impressed him.

3. He was called to follow Jesus (Matt. 4:21, 22). He was first called into the relationship of a disciple. As a disciple he came to know Jesus personally.

4. Appointed as an apostle (Matt. 10:2). Having been tested as a disciple, he now is appointed as an apostle (Mark 3:13-19; Luke 6:13-16).

II. His Character.
1. He was reserved. That is, he was decidedly reticent about himself. He speaks of himself as "the disciple whom Jesus loved" and "that other disciple."

2. He possessed a rare gift of penetrative insight. The truths set forth in his writings did not come as a result of reasoned judgment, but of penetrative insight. He was indeed a seer.

3. He was thoroughly masculine. Christian art does him a thorough injustice in portraying him as effeminate. He was intense, vehement in his temperament. He was truly a "son of thunder," as Christ declared (Mark 3:17).

III. Some Instances of Behavior.
1. Intolerance of irregular service (Luke 9:49, 50). There was a certain disciple who seems to have been intelligently witnessing and God had honored his testimony with power to cast out devils. John forbade him because he was not working with them.

2. His righteous indignation displayed (Luke 9:51-56). When Jesus had set his face toward Jerusalem some Samaritans refused to extend hospitality to him. This treatment of his Master so aroused the anger of John and James that they desired to call down fire from heaven to burn them up. This action grew out of John's great love for his Master.

3. John's care of Christ's mother (John 19:25-27). From the cross Jesus beheld his mother and committed her to the tender care of John. The intense love that he had for his Lord would move him to express the tenderest affection for his mother.

IV. His Third Epistle.
This is one of the three private Epistles of the New Testament and gives us a look into the early church life and also a picture of the aged apostle. This Epistle consists of the following parts:

1. The salutation (vv. 1-4). This letter was addressed to Gaius, with the fervent wish that his temporal prosperity and physical health would be measured by the measure of the increase of his spirituality. His supreme joy was to hear that his children were walking in the truth.

2. His praise for Gaius (vv. 5-8). This praise was for the hospitality which Gaius showed toward some traveling evangelists. In spite of the opposition of a certain prominent member of the church, Gaius received these preachers into his home. To receive God's messengers into our homes and send them forth on their journey is a deed worthy of God. One of the best ways to help the truth is to show hospitality to its messengers.

3. His condemnation of Diotrephes (vv. 9, 10). The sin of this man was his over-weening self-confidence and arrogance. He loved to have the place of pre-eminence; therefore, for that reason he refused to receive these traveling evangelists and expelled from the church those who had received them into their homes. He even maliciously attacked John the beloved pastor. His spirit of pride moved him to acts of tyranny toward others.

4. His commendation of Demetrius (v. 12). Demetrius was perhaps the bearer of this letter. John gives the assurance that Demetrius was of good report among all men. His life of good deeds proved that he was in fellowship with God.

Joys

The worse the passage, the more welcome the port.

Joy which we cannot share with others is only half enjoyed.

Enthusiasm

Res. Independence 64.

Raleigh, N. C.—There are three major areas in Kentucky in which the Resettlement Administration's Land Utilization Division plans to concentrate its efforts to demonstrate the value of the proper use and conservation of the state's natural resources, according to James M. Gray, of Raleigh, N. C., Regional Director in charge of this work.

Gray, who has spent 25 years studying the land problems of this region, listed the mountainous area and adjacent lands, the hilly tobacco region, and the cut-over timber section as areas in this state in which major adjustments in land use are necessary.

"This does not mean," Gray pointed out, "that all the land within the designated areas should be retired from cultivation. For instance, the purchase of woodland and steep eroded slopes for administration as public forests is advocated in some sections, while the remaining farm land would continue in cultivation.

"It may be desirable to shift some of this land from its present use but I want to emphasize that the long time program of this phase of Resettlement work will be to provide opportunities for farmers to withdraw from these ill-adapted areas and to settle where it is possible to produce a more satisfactory living.

"In general, the withdrawal of families from these problem lands would have to be accomplished gradually, as the opportunities arise or are created, rather than by a rapid large-scale change. There are, however, certain areas of acute distress that may require wholesale action of an emergency nature. The Land Utilization division and the Rural Resettlement division are working on this part of the general program cooperatively."

In portions of the mountainous area, Gray said, the widespread withdrawal of some of the arable farm land in the roughest areas, for conversion to some constructive use, such as forests, will be necessary. This would be followed by the institution of constructive management of forest lands. An increase in the size of farm units in the less broken areas would be advocated to permit larger pasture acreage per farm and smaller aggregate areas of crops. Introduction of erosion measures in the better farming areas would be one of the land-conservation measures necessary.

A program of widespread, but not general, withdrawal of some of the arable farm land in the hilly tobacco region would also be necessary, Gray said. The land withdrawn would be converted to some constructive use, such as forests, game preserves, or recreational areas. Erosion control and constructive management of forest land would be necessary in this area.

Two major adjustments are advocated in the cut-over of timber, and the better management of forest land so as to assure a regrowth of timber, and the widespread withdrawal of some of the arable farm land. In some sections, there will be little necessity for the withdrawal of farm land as mere constructive use of the forest land would furnish additional sources of income for farmers now living in these sections.

Bell county homemakers' clubs sponsored several community picnics which attracted large crowds. More than 100 Carter county farmers cut aspen trees this year, compared to just a few in previous years.

Six hundred acres have been signed for terracing and 25 carloads of limestone have been spread in Hickman county.

Fifteen hundred people attended the opening of the Swift & Co. cheese plant at Madisonville.

Easter Island Has Many

Puzzling Stone Images

For centuries explorers who have touched the shores of Easter Island have stood in bewildered awe before the huge stone images of hideous men which stand, remnants of a mysterious people, not far from the Pacific coast of the island.

The images are roughly chiseled from lava quarried on the island, which lies several thousand miles off the west coast of South America. Some of the faces with their large noses and long pointed chins are still part of the rock in the quarry—left there for some reason at which we can only guess, writes a correspondent in the Washington Star.

Of the people who made them we know very little. They can scarcely be called artists, for the images are poorly made and show only a childish skill, with great heads out of all proportion to those we are now familiar with.

But these people had a strange culture of their own, for in the small stone houses scattered over the little island are symbols which seem to be part of a written language. The symbols have not been deciphered, but they indicate an ancient culture on this far-away island.

Another question which baffles modern students of the problem is how the immense and heavy images were carried from the inland quarries to their present location on vaulted foundations near the shore.

Cuckoo Selects Nest of

Other Bird to Lay Eggs

In appearance this cuckoo is much like the sparrow hawk or kestrel, and just as most of the smaller birds will attack a hawk when they see it in the air, so will they attack the cuckoo when it shows itself.

The cuckoo has kept a secret for thousands of years. From earliest records, notes a writer in Tit-Bits Magazine, it was thought that she laid her egg upon the ground, picked it up in her beak, carried it to the selected nest and dropped it in, but investigation proves that the cuckoo lays her egg directly into the nest.

When the female cuckoo is ready to lay, she will sit on a perch almost motionless from half an hour to six hours, and this corresponds to the time that any other bird would sit on the nest before laying. Then she glides down to the selected nest, for during the previous days she has carefully watched the owners. She wastes no time, but goes quickly to it, stealing one of the eggs. Hiding this in her beak, she moves her body on to the nest, lays her own egg in the place of the one removed, and flies off with the stolen egg. This is done so quickly, sometimes while she is flying away, but more often when she reaches a convenient perch.

Castle Romantic Relic

A romantic relic of the Middle Ages is the so-called Welterhaus of Hagen, near Amriswil and Romanshorn, Lake of Constance, Switzerland. Its massive walls rise boldly out of the placid water surrounding it. Here one finds gloomy cells, cozy parlors, guest chambers with fine old furniture, and in particular one cool, many-windowed apartment in which the high-backed chairs still surround the long table as in the days when the monks of St. Gall occupied the place. This interesting little chateau was built about 1220, and came into the possession of the Benedictine Abbey of St. Gall in 1264.

State Has Four National Parks

California is the only state having four national parks. Each has some outstanding feature, all are in mountainous country. The northernmost one, Lassen Volcanic National park, encloses Mt. Lassen, the only active volcano in the United States. Directly east of San Francisco are the great valley and granite domes of Yosemite National park, deep in the Sierras. Farther south are Sequoia and General Grant National parks, preserving giant sequoias and redwoods.

Bear Sucks Up Ants

When the black bear of India finds an ant-hill it takes but a few minutes to tear up the hard, cemented clay and lay the deep galleries bare; then putting its gutta-percha muzzle to the mouths of each gallery, it draws such a blast of air through them that the industrious laboring ants are sucked into its gullet in drifts. Afterwards the bear digs right down to the royal chamber, licks up the bloated queen, and goes on its way.

Many Languages Used

There are 2,796 languages used by the 2,000,000,000 inhabitants of this earth. Chinese leads in popularity, with a variety of dialects, as the mother tongue of 475,000,000 persons, and English ranks second with 224,995,560. Then follow in order Hindustani and the other Indian languages, Russian and dialects, Japanese, Spanish, German, French, Portuguese, Javanese, Italian and Arabic.

People of Gaspe Peninsula

The people who live on the Gaspe peninsula are the descendants of the early traders and fishermen who arrived from France shortly after the country had been discovered, of Chanet islanders who settled on the coast in the early days of the colony, of Loyalists who came from the United States, of Acadians who were expelled from their country, of English, Irish and Scotch immigrants.

Pash Da-Ni and the Sage Lily

By DONNA THANE
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

THE young Indian's impassive face did not alter; a slight stiffening of his hands was the only sign he gave. The clerk was not looking at him and the pretty girl who had entered did not notice. She came to lean against the counter close beside him and nodded carelessly.

"Hello, Pash Da-Ni." (Sharp Knife). He answered through a constricted throat. "Hello."

A lean curly-haired boy about the girl's age came into the store and flung an arm around the girl's shoulders. "As I live and breathe," he drawled, "it's Margaret, in person! How are you, sweetness?"

Pash Da-Ni loved the girl. He did not want to. He tried not to. None knew better than he the gulf that yawned between Pash Da-Ni, the full-blooded Navajo, and pretty blond Margaret, daughter of the county sheriff.

The curly-head was wearing cream colored corduroys and a dazlingly clean white shirt. Pash Da-Ni wore a checkered calico shirt, waist-band overalls, clumsy cow-hide shoes; and his long black hair was knotted up in back and tied with a buckskin thong. The curly-head went to high school with the girl. Pash Da-Ni had stopped attending the agency school two years ago.

Because he was white, the curly-head could touch the girl, could hold her hand and playfully ruffle her mop of light hair. But he, Pash Da-Ni, because he was red, must never, never, venture to touch her.

The sun was several hours past the zenith when the youth rode up to the Hogan that was his home. He dismounted, strode inside, took a bundle from a dark corner, and rode away. Tomorrow he was to marry Ha-spe-de, (Dove) daughter of At-saw (Eagle).

Tomorrow, when the sun was directly overhead, his friends and relatives of Ha-spe-de would gather in the open space before his father's Hogan. Ha-spe-de would pour a basket of water over his hands and he one over hers in the ancient tribal ceremony of marriage. A blanket would be spread on the ground and a bowl of mush made of the blue Indian corn placed on it. He and Ha-spe-de would squat cross-legged on the blanket, Ha-spe-de would take a mouthful of corn and then he would take one. The oldest man in the tribe would make a cross of pollen over the mush, and they would be man and wife.

He loved Margaret, the white girl, but he would wed Ha-spe-de, the Indian maid, tomorrow.

He slid to the ground, stalked to the river bank and stood with bowed head looking down into the depths, glistened by the moon. On a sudden impulse he commenced to strip himself of his clothing. He dived lightly into the water.

When he clambered out he dried himself with his hands, shivering a bit in the night wind. He picked up his clothes and flung them contemptuously into the water. Then he took the bundle he had brought from the Hogan. It contained a buckskin breech-clout, a broad beaded belt, a pair of moccasins decorated with silver quarter-dollars, a short knife in a sheath, and two eagle feathers stained blue and tied together with horsehair. The outfit had belonged to his grandfather.

He turned upstream toward the town, watching the ground as he went. Soon he found what he was seeking, the pale gleam of a clump of sage lilies. He picked a handful of the frail blossoms and carefully wrapped their stems in damp grass.

Before a white house on a back street he paused. Lightly he vaulted the picket fence and stood beneath a cottonwood tree that grew under Margaret's bedroom window.

Pash Da-Ni moved out into the light to look at his flowers. Some of the fragile things were drooping. These he took out and threw away. Seven perfect blooms remained. Without difficulty he vaulted from a long branch of the tree to the sill and stepped inside the room.

He dropped to the floor like a shadow, his heart thundering madly in his breast. If he should be caught—! An Indian, entering the bedchamber of a white girl at night by stealth! They would tear him to pieces!

He perceived a small white bed in the far corner and heard the sound of slow breathing. Noiselessly he crept forward.

The girl lay on her side, one hand under her cheek and the other thrown up over her head. Her blond curls were tumbled on the white pillow, her lips slightly parted with her breathing, her expression tranquil as that of a Madonna.

Pash Da-Ni dared not stare for fear of waking the girl. Cautiously he leaned over her, noting how the moon behind him cast a long, wavering shadow of the eagle feathers in his hair.

Pash Da-Ni spread his seven sage lilies fanwise and placed them on the pillow by the girl's face. Then he turned and swiftly and noiselessly across the room. On the sill he gave a backward look. "Farewell, my little sage lily," he said in his native Navajo. "It could never have been."

He stepped out and swung to the ground. A shaft of moonlight found him and he stood motionless, staring up. All the boy drained from his face and only the little man remained. Suddenly, although no breeze blew last night, he shivered. It was long past midnight. It was his wedding day.

POTATO CONTROL

The Department of Agriculture at Washington apparently has very little enthusiasm for the act of Congress to enforce a compulsory potato control plan, and it seems likely that the AAA may ask growers to work out a voluntary system and carry it into effect until Congress meets again. The law provides for a tax of three-fourths cent a pound on all potatoes produced in excess of a national allotment and imposes heavy penalties for both sellers and buyers of potatoes sold in violation of the law. Secretary Wallace says there are no funds available to enforce the act. Under these circumstances it appears as though the legislation will go largely in default since the money which the President can use in his discretion is likely to be used for other purposes.

FORGET-ME-NOT

The story of the forget-me-not is far removed from the reality of modern life and the aftermath of war. But the story of the forget-me-not is a tender bit of make-believe that will live forever in the mind of man.

The story goes like this: One morning, soon after the creation of Earth, God walked through his garden, and stopping before each flower, spoke to it and gave each one a name. Sometime later, he again walked through, stopped at each flower and asked it to remember and each answered promptly, correctly. When, at last, he came to a wee blue flower, snuggling close to earth, he looked down and, smiling, asked, "What little blue flower, is your name?" The little flower looked pale, apprehensive. Bowing its head, it timidly answered, "I've forgotten." And the Lord said sternly, "Forget-me-not, henceforth your name shall be—Forget-Me-Not."

The fantasy ends here, out suppose we were to take it further. Suppose God were today to walk among the mass of men and ask each to justify his existence. The laborer would say, "I build houses to shelter the cold." The farmer would say, "I raise food to feed the hungry." The professional man would say, "I untangle warped lives, help the suffering, bring hope to the hopeless." And then suppose God should come to the disabled soldier and say, "What, my good man, do you do?" And the soldier answered, "I am the forgotten man. My body is bound with pain and suffering. I can do nothing." And God, looking kindly upon him, would turn to the others and say, "You mentioned him not. And I say this to you, both great and small, forget him not."

The fantasy, we hope, will never have to be taken to that extreme. Each year, the DAY through its many chapters appeals to the public to forget-them-not—the men who fought and gave their best for America and American ideals, and each year the public generously responds. The money so raised is used for the rehabilitation of those comrades of ours who are unable to help themselves. The work is far from completed, but each year we advance a bit toward our goal. The DAY stands for justice to the wartime disabled and it stands because the American people have not forgotten. The forget-me-not reminds them not to forget!—F. S.

Mrs. Hubert Waller, Senior Vice Commander of Disabled American Veterans Auxiliary, Twin City Chapter No. 19, Covington, Ky., has been appointed Chairman of the Forget-Me-Not Sale to be held in Florence, Ky., Saturday, Sept. 28. Your help in trying to make this drive a success will be greatly appreciated.

KENTUCKY STATE MEDICAL ASSOCIATION WILL HOLD ITS ANNUAL MEETING IN THE BROWN HOTEL, LOUISVILLE.

The 1935 Annual meeting of the Kentucky State Medical Association will be held in the Brown Hotel, Louisville, Monday, September 30, and Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, October 1st, 2nd and 3rd. This meeting has been designated by the Program Committee as the William Loftus Sutton Memorial Meeting, in honor of the Founder and First President of the Association. In this respect, it is suggested by the Committee that subsequent meetings honor the other Presidents of the State Association in rotation.

The guest speakers will be Dr. Sumner L. Koch, of Chicago, and Federal Judge Elwood Hamilton of the Western Kentucky District. Dr. Koch, who is associate Professor of Surgery, Northwestern University, was associated for a number of years with Dr. Arthur Kanavel, world famous authority on infections of the hand. Dr. Koch's subject will be "Injuries of the Hand." Judge Hamilton, a leader of the Kentucky Bar and recently elevated to the Federal Bench, will deliver a message: "To the Medical Profession from the Legal."

The annual oration in Medicine will be delivered by Dr. James H. Pritchett, Louisville; Dr. S. C. Smith, Ashland, will deliver the annual Oration in Surgery. Both are prominent members of the Association and both are very interesting speakers.

On the evening of Sunday preceding the formal opening of the Annual Meeting, Dr. Felix Underwood, Jackson, Mississippi, will address a public meeting of the League of Christian Physicians in the Auditorium of the Warren Memorial Presbyterian Church, which is located just across the street from the Brown Hotel. Dr. Underwood is State Health Officer of Mississippi and a Past President of the Mississippi State Medical Association. Possessed of remarkable charm and personal magnetism, he is one of the most forceful speakers in the medical profession.

Chief among the social events will be a luncheon and theater party for the women guests; President's reception, followed by dancing, on Tuesday evening; a stag banquet on Wednesday evening; and a golf tournament for both men and women. At all these social functions visiting members and their families will be guests of the Jefferson County Medical Society. The golf tournament will be held at the Audubon Country Club, Monday, September 30th, and Tuesday and Wednesday, October 1st and 2nd. Trophies will be awarded at the banquet.

Monday, September 30th, will be devoted to registration and meetings of the House Delegates and the Council. The General Meeting will be held Tuesday morning at 9:00 o'clock, at which time the incoming President, Dr. J. B. Lukins, Louisville will be installed. Scientific discussions, which constitute the major part of the program, have been arranged with unusual care. Essayists have been selected in such manner that all sections of the State have representation, while no particular locality is unduly represented.

AMERICAN INVENTION TO BE ADOPTED ABROAD

It is possible that, within a short time, American tourists in Berlin or Munich will be drinking good German beer put up in cans which are an American invention. Inquiries about the newly invented beer cans which have a lining in them to do the same work as that of a brewer's wooden keg, have been received by the manufacturers of these keg-lined cans from all over the world, including such metropolitan centers as Berlin, London, Paris, Dublin, Amsterdam and Hong Kong.

The use of this can was first introduced in Richmond, Va., only last January, but it is now available in a growing number of communities, including such a big center as Chicago, and is spreading like wild-fire through this country. The demand for it in the places where it is now available far exceeds the supply at present, but, by the first part of next year, beer in these cans will be available practically everywhere, as the production of them by then will have caught up with the demand.

The president of the brewery which first introduced this canned beer to the public has received personal calls from nearly a hundred presidents of other brewing concerns, and a number of the most important of these have already contracted for large supplies of these keg-lined cans from the company which manufactures them.

Louisville, Ky., Sept., 23—The state Convention of Young Democratic Clubs of Kentucky has been called to meet October 5 as result of action of the executive committee, it is announced by Eugene Mosley, Jr., president.

Lieutenant Gov. A. B. Chandler will be the keynote speaker and other Democratic leaders will be present.

Basis of representation in the state convention will be two votes for each officially recognized county delegation and one additional vote for each twenty-five paid-up members for the year 1936. Dues are twenty cents per member.

It is directed that a statement be filed with Miss Ruth White, state treasurer, who should be addressed at the internal revenue collectors' office, Louisville, setting forth the number of delegates, number of enrolled members and amount of dues paid. This statement will be regarded as credentials entitling the delegates to participate in the convention. This information should be forwarded to Miss White before September 30, Mr. Mosley said.

Eight farm homes and several consolidated school grounds will be landscaped in beautification demonstrations in Simpson county.

Poor-H dairy cattle, beef cattle and sheep exhibits were features of the annual Washington County Fair.

Four Davies county boys won the reserve championship and 7 prizes on pigs at the tri-state 4-H pig show at Evansville.

ANOTHER GOOD CITIZEN

Charles Westbay died Thursday in his 81st year. "Fat" as he was known, resided here all of his life. His father and mother Mr. and Mrs. James Westbay died some years ago. He is survived by one brother, Timothy, who resides in Covington, and nieces and nephews. He had been in failing health for several years. The greater part of his life was that of a teamster, and he delighted in driving a fine team of horses. He was buried in the old cemetery where the funeral services were held in the presence of friends and relatives. He was never married, was well thought of by all who knew and associated with him. He was quiet and unassuming and no one ever heard him speak a harsh word of any one.

TO OUR READERS

Due to the fact that it is impossible for us to canvass the entire county weekly for news and happenings that would be of general interest to the readers of the Recorder, we are asking that everyone interested in the upbuilding of this paper cooperate with us by sending in interesting articles for our approval.

Starting this week the Recorder will go to press at 1:00 P. M. Wednesday, therefore all articles for publication must be in our office not later than Tuesday. We are making this change in order that all subscribers will receive their paper Thursday.

We have hopes of making this one of the outstanding weekly newspapers of the state and from time to time will greatly appreciate your comments.

LEADERSHIP OF PRES. ROOSEVELT RESPONSIBLE FOR RECOVERY OF U. S. BUSINESS

New blood flows in the veins of American business. Economic recovery is now an uncontested fact. To what leadership is the credit due that we are now entering a new era of American Prosperity? Certain partisans and egotistical business men will tell you that business has recovered in spite of "Roosevelt"; that prostrate industries and business establishments have pulled themselves out of the quicksand of the depression by their own boot-straps. But those who are truthful and candid will give the credit to governmental policies pursued by President Roosevelt. He, alone, of all the leadership in America in early 1933 retained firm faith in the future greatness of America. His political philosophy was a government should serve the distressing needs of a people that were unable to solve their common problems. Accordingly, the United States government began the foundation of faith in American institutions. It became the trusting friend, advisor and banker for industry and enterprise in the nation. Money was loaned, to factory, farmer, banker, railroads and business, large and small. This flow of credit from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation started the wheels turning once more. Through June 30, 1935, the money appropriated to make a blood transfusion for merican business exceeded $9,817,000,000. Already 54 per cent of over $5,000,000,000 in secured loans to American business has been repaid and the RFC has a surplus of more than $100,000,000 from interest earned.

The record shows these aids to business:

Books—Banking has been assisted to the extent of nearly three billion dollars—some two billion in direct loans of which three quarters 74 per cent, has been repaid, one billion for distribution to depositors in 2,630 closed banks, and in addition, one billion for bank capital which has made the government a share holder in one-half of all banks in the country.

Relief Work—Over $1,200,000,000 has been granted for relief, directly to states or through the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

Agriculture—The RFC has loaned half billion on cotton, corn and other crops, so that farmers could hold their products for a fair price instead of being forced, by need of money, to dump products on the market at harvesting. Altogether the RFC has made $1,500,000,000 available for agriculture.

Railroads—Another half billion dollars has gone to fifty-eight railroads for new equipment, repair, safety improvement, construction and upkeep.

Industry—To assist small industry direct loans totaling $73,000,000 to cover labor and material have been authorized.

Consider these facts and then weigh for what they are worth the remarks of the cynic who denies Mr. Roosevelt had anything to do with bringing about present business recovery.—Osgood Journal.

Richmond, Ky., Sept., 24.—Bids for the construction of a concrete football stadium at Eastern Kentucky University State Teachers College under the direction of the Federal Public Works Administration are being advertised for today.

George H. Sager, Jr., state director of public works, fixed October 9 at 11:00 a. m. as the closing date for receiving bids in a telegram to Dr. H. L. Donovan, president of Eastern.

The stadium estimated to cost approximately $43,000.00, will be built on the south side of the athletic field. It will have a seating capacity of 3,800 and is to be used the year around by Eastern athletic teams, the under-structure being designed to provide for locker rooms, study rooms, practice rooms, and sleeping quarters for athletes.

Funds for the stadium were provided by a direct grant of $100,000 by the P. W. A. Supplemented by $18,000.00 set aside in a special fund by the college and $500.00 in donations by friends and students of Eastern.

Work on the stadium is expected to begin shortly after the awarding of the contract on October 9. J. S. Watkins, consulting engineer, Lexington, Ky., is engineer for the project.

Commonwealth Atty. Ward Yager, Warsaw, County Atty. J. H. Riley and County Judge N. E. Riddell were in Louisville Tuesday, and while there headed at the Democratic State Headquarters in the Kentucky Hotel where they found plans were being made for the Democratic campaign for all State offices.

According to the advertising agent of Lincoln Realty Company the grounds will be sold in tracts ranging from buildings lots to acreage tracts.

The property is located just south of Florence at the junction of U. S. Highways 25 and 42 and conveniences such as electricity, gas, water, shade, bus service, and nearness to cities are its features.

Louisville, Ky., Sept., 30.—Lieutenant Governor A. B. Chandler went into seclusion Tuesday to prepare the opening speech of the Democratic campaign, which he will deliver Saturday afternoon at Lawrenceburg at 2 o'clock. His speech will be broadcast over WLAS.

"The test of one's Democracy is not who one supported in the primaries, but whether one supports the entire Democratic ticket in the final election," said the Democratic nominee for Governor in a brief statement given out before he left the city. The statement in full is as follows:

"To the Democratic voters of Kentucky: At a meeting of the Democratic nominees plans were made for conduct of the fall campaign. I desire to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation to the Democratic voters who supported me in the recent primary elections. For those Democrats who for reasons best known to themselves supported any of my opponents, I have nothing but the kindest feelings; and, I now want to urge that all Democrats who are sincerely interested in the election of the Democratic ticket in Kentucky this year and in the reelection of President of Franklin D. Roosevelt next year, join enthusiastically and actively with us in making our success certain.

"I have no disposition to inflict any sort of punishment upon any Democrat in Kentucky. The test of one's democracy is not who one supported in the primaries, but whether one supports the entire Democratic ticket in the final election."

Campaign headquarters have been opened at the Kentucky Hotel here with Senator Robt. Humphrey, of Mayfield, as chairman. He has already started the work of setting up an organization in each county and Democratic leaders from all sections of the state have called to volunteer their services.

Cabell Beemon and wife, of Maderia, Ohio, were in Burlington a few minutes last Friday afternoon. While here Mr. Beemon called at this office and subscribed for the Recorder.

The Sophia Webster Lloyd Memorial Society will hold their election of officers Saturday, October 5, 2 p. m., at the Lloyd Homestead 21 Shelby Street, Florence, Ky. The luncheon has been omitted as this is a business session.

HOLD A SPECIAL MEETING TO STRENGTHEN ORGANIZATION

The Boone County Young Men's Democratic Club held a special meeting at the court house Monday night, Sept. 30th, for the purpose of strengthening and better organizing the club. Numerous committees were appointed and a number of plans were formulated and carried out by the club.

All democrats of the county between the ages of 16 and 45 are urged to join the club and help make it even a greater success than in years past. Regular meetings will be held on 2nd Monday of each month at 7:30 P. M.

YOUTH ARRESTED

WHEN ATTEMPTING TO CASH CHECK—POSTOFFICE INSPECTORS TO QUESTION KENTUCKIAN

Arrested as he attempted to cash a check one day last week for $120.48 at the stockyard branch of the Central Trust Company, in Cincinnati, a youth registered as Emerson Rogers, 20 years old, Petersburg, Ky., is said by police to have admitted he stole the check from a mail box at Petersburg.

Patrolman Donald Schoedinger, who made the arrest, said the check was made by J. W. Campbell, a Petersburg farmer. The check was from the Producers Cooperative Commission, Cincinnati.

The youth was ordered for post-office inspectors.

TESTS SHOW SOIL NEEDS

Recent soil tests completed by Joe Broderick, Assistant County Agent, shows that practically all Boone county soils are deficient in both lime and phosphate. Both plant food elements can be applied rather cheaply in the commercial form of ground limestone and superphosphate.

Experimental work shows: 1. That phosphate is just as necessary as lime. 400 pounds per acre in rotation is sufficient for most soils.

2. One ton per acre of limestone is sufficient to produce clovers including sweet clover. Two or four tons should be applied for alfalfa.

3. For alfalfa limestone should be applied a year or two before seeding.

4. Limestone and phosphate should be applied together and worked into the soil.

5. Legume hay yields when limestone and phosphate are used together are approximately doubled than when lime and phosphate are used separate.

Farmers desiring ground limestone have a golden opportunity to have stone crushed at a cost of 35 cents per ton thru the Boone county soil improvement program. Mr. Broderick is working on a plan for the purchasing of phosphate in wholesale lots. Two tons of limestone and 300 to 400 pounds of phosphate per acre is sufficient for average Boone county soils.

SEED COVER CROPS

Boone county farmers are learning more and more each year to seed wheat and rye winter cover crops on land plowed the past season. The land is not only kept from washing but nitrogen and other fertilizers worth several dollars per acre are saved from leaching out.

LAND TESTED FOR MEAT PRODUCTION

The value of soil treatment in making better grazing and producing more meat was tested on three 10-acre fields at the Western Kentucky Experiment Station at Princeton.

Field No. 1 was given no fertilizer treatment; field No. 2 was treated with 1200 pounds of rock phosphate to the acre, and field No. 3 received 1½ tons of limestone and 600 pounds of superphosphate to the acre. All were seeded to a grass mixture.

As an average for six years, field No. 1 carried approximately one steer to 4 acres each year, field No. 2 one steer to 1.8 acres, and field No. 3 a steer to each 1.6 acres.

The average annual gains for the steers grazing field No. 1 was 479 pounds, field No. 2 1,346 pounds, and field No. 3 was 1,055 pounds.

Miss Margaret Blackburn has returned from a two week's vacation with relatives at Middletown, Ohio.

THOS. S. RHEA

Mr. Rhea was appointed a member for the Third Road District to succeed J. A. Reed, of Smith's Grove, who replaced Mr. Rhea as a member last April. Mr. Reed, who gave up his position as road engineer for the Third district to take Mr. Rhea's place, was reemployed.

Mr. Rhea's appointment was for his original unexpired term, which ends February 3, 1935.

LETTER

TO THE CITIZENS OF BOONE COUNTY, KENTUCKY:

The BOONE COUNTY RECORDER has reached a new milestone in its venerable history. Command at the helm has been assumed by two young men who need your support and encouragement. We know only too well how prone the older generation is to criticize the young people. Our elders have lived longer and have learned more, and are therefore qualified to give counsel to youth. However, how ever, they overstep the bounds of counsel, reducing to a severe criticism. Both Mr. Maurer and Mr. Stephens are members of this younger generation who have cast their lots together in the interests of journalism in Boone county. These young men are so commended for their ambitions. They are taking over a fine county newspaper, a paper which has been mellowed through many years of honorable achievement and service. Give them a chance good people. Remember the ambitions of your youth. Recall your own early struggles in that musty law office, that meager medical practice, your little place of business, or your modest farm. You met opposition then, and you won. Forget the encouragement you received from the older folks. That is what these young men need now.

It has been my privilege to be personally acquainted with Mr. Maurer for the past two or three years. While serving on the staff of the EASTERN PROGRESS, Mr. Maurer rendered an enviable record of faithful service. Had we not been so unfortunate as to lose him, we would have seen both his and our ambition realized, when he would have assumed the editorship of this paper next year. I earnestly endorse him for his present position, and feel certain that he will prove to the citizens of Boone county a valuable asset.

Mos. sincerely,
DONALD MICHELSON,
Editor Eastern Progress.

U. OF K. BAND HAS LARGEST ENROLLMENT IN ITS HISTORY

"The Best Band in Dixie" will have more than 100 members when it lines up for the opening kick-off of the next home football game at the University of Kentucky. This is the largest group in its history.

The late "Pretty Boy" Floyd, bank robber, kidnapper and killer, kept books on the inside cover of his watch. Ten notches, indicating ten men he had murdered, were found there when bullets riddled him one day in an Ohio meadow and ended the Federal Bureau of Investigation's hunt for one of America's most ruthless desperadoes.

How that chase was conducted will be revealed in detail for the first time in the eleventh of Chevrolet Motor Company's "G-Men" broadcasts, Saturday, September 28th, at 8 p. m. (E. S. T.).

Floyd, Richetti and Verne Miller, Kansas City hoodlum, worked the machine guns in the slaying of a Federal agent, the police chief of McAlester, Okla., and two Kansas City detectives in the attempted delivery of Frank Nash, ex-convict, at his would-be liberators. Who the ringleaders were in the Middle West's most staggering outrage might still be a mystery but for fingerprints on a castoff beer bottle by which Federal special agents coupled Richetti and Floyd with the massacre.

Chevrolet's widely commended "G-Men" series mark an effort which has been made to give an authoritative picture of how Government operatives have smashed, one after another, the Nation's one-time public enemies.

FAIR

TWENTY SEVENTH ANNUAL AURORA FARMER'S FAIR

The twenty-seventh Annual Farmer's Fair will be held at Aurora, Indiana, on October 4th and 5th.

This fair has always been well attended and many Boone county people find this a splendid time to meet and greet their friends and at the same time to view the exhibits and enjoy the program.

One of the main features of the fair is the Industrial Parade at 10:30 a. m., on Saturday, October 5th.

We are confident that your attendance will afford you a day well spent and one that you will remember favorably.

Boone County 4-H Club members are completing their project records for 1935 and turning them in at their seventh Community Club meeting to be held this week and next, according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent, Hamilton 4-H Club members turned their record books in last Friday.

Three hundred and twenty-seven Boone county 4-H Club members in nine communities carried 4-H Club projects this year. The projects consisted of poultry, pigs, dairy, beef calf production, corn, tobacco, potatoes, sheep, garden, canning, sewing and room improvement. Each project was conducted according to approved practices. A complete business record is kept. Each member who completes his project and turns in his record book will receive a thousand points for his community club and will receive a certificate of achievement from the University of Kentucky. Those members who have completed five years work will receive "Certificate of Honor." While those who complete six or seven years "Silver Certificate," and 8th year members "Gold Certificates."

GOOD RECORD SWINE FEEDING

S. B. Sleet, of Beaver Lick, recently completed the best swine feeding record ever recorded in the county. Twenty-nine pigs (arrowed March 23d, 1935, were fed and hog feeding days for a total weight of 5535 pounds or an average of 1.2 pounds gain per day. The hogs consumed during this period a total of 17,260 pounds of feed or an average of 3.3 pounds to gain feed for each pound of gain which is a record to date.

The hogs were run, fed and seifed a total of 14,000 pounds of corn, 2100 pounds of middlings, 800 lbs. of tankage, 150 pounds of prime cottonseed meal from date of farrowing until sold. The hogs were allowed plenty of good pasture and fresh water in addition. Seventeen were sold at 154 days averaging 182 pounds per head and twelve were sold at 175 days averaging 207 lbs. per head.

Mr. Sleet is one of the most experienced hog feeders in the county. He keeps complete cost account records and attempts to follow the most approved feeding practices. His work this year returned him a nice profit.

WHEAT REDUCTION 5 PERCENT UNDER THE NEW CONTRACT

The new wheat contract, for which applications will be available soon, calls for a reduction of five percent from the base acreage of 1930-31-32, says a statement from the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

The new contract is for four years, but farmers may withdraw in the second year. The general provisions are similar to those in the old contract, and payments are the same. The same base will be used, with certain provisions favorable to farmers who produced wheat in only one or two of the base years.

Farmers who signed old contracts may proceed with plantings up to 95 percent of their base. Fifty-four percent of their base must be grown, under provisions of the old and new contracts.

The proposed rye adjustment program is similar to that for wheat, using the same base and requiring a 54 percent production. The reduction will be 25 percent from the base. Any acreage of rye grown in excess of 75 percent of the base may be used for hay, pasture or for other purposes, except that it cannot be permitted to mature and produce grain.

BASE BALL NEWS

OUTSTANDING AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

The life insurance industry provides the most vivid possible illustration of the thrift and foresight of the American people.

Every dollar of the dollar invested in life insurance policies means that someone has saved, has worked, and has done what he could to set up a defense against the exigencies of the future. Every time a premium is paid, or a new policy sold, it means that dependents are being protected against the unexpected death of the wage-earner, or that the wage-earner himself is setting in motion machinery whereby he will be assured of an independent, comfortable old age.

This is a typically American achievement. It is not by an accident that the average American possesses many times as much life insurance as the citizens of other countries. American individualism, our ancient heritage, creates an instinctive desire to provide for one's own financial future thru one's own efforts. Few of our citizens wish to be wards of charity or government—they want to attain old age comfort and leisure for themselves. And millions of them are doing that through life insurance, the most democratic of institutions.

CUTTING THE COST OF FOOD

Constant headway is being made in solving an old and persistent problem—that of reducing the spread in the cost of food between producer and consumer.

Large scale buying and selling is narrowing that spread. The chain grocery systems led the way in showing the consumer how to get the most in each quality and quantity for his dollar. Now independent stores, banded together in purchasing groups, have followed the lead and are performing a similar public service.

A Dow-Jones news service item indicates the kind of progress that is being made. It tells how one chain grocery system recently reduced its regular quarterly stock dividend from 75 to 50 cents—in spite of the fact that its total sales have greatly increased. Profits had not increased proportionately, for the reason that the system had to pay higher prices for farm products and manufactured goods, but it did not increase the price to consumer, proportionately. Its purpose is to continue to supply its customers with high quality goods at the lowest cost, and to achieve that it is deliberately cutting its uniformly small margin of profit.

This same system is now spending $46,000,000 a year for foodstuffs in a single state—thus carrying the benefits of mass buying and selling methods to the producer as well as the consumer in the territories in which it operates.

REGIMENTING THE SPUD

The humble spud has become the latest target for the bureaucrat.

Under a law passed by the last Congress, the Irish potato is to have its turn in so-called crop control. Growers who produce more than five bushels a year must submit to a stringent licensing system—and if they produce more than their quota, a heavy fine may be levied against them. Opposition arguments, based on the fact that the spud is an eccentric sort of animal, whose productivity is almost impossible to control, have had no avail.

The new law did not have Administration support, and seems to be regarded coldly by Secretary Wallace. It was put through by zealots who feel that nature should be regimented as thoroughly as possible.

However, it is encouraging to report that various groups, led by well-known men, have announced defiance to such a liberty-destroying law—and have challenged its enforcement. The pioneer spirit, which detests any kind of dictatorship, is not yet dead and demands the right to eat spuds without political supervision.

SOLDIERS' BONUS

The spending problems of the Government have multiplied so fast that the soldiers' bonus does not seem such an impossible sum to pay in comparison to the billions that have been expended for other purposes. Events at the American Legion Convention in St. Louis convey a very definite meaning to political Washington. The Legionnaires went back on their old champion, Representative Patman of Texas, and gave him the "boos" when he appeared upon the platform to address them. Patman was good enough in the dark days when the fate of the bonus hung by a thread. And that time he tried to push the measure across by providing for its payment in "printing press" inflated currency.

New hopes brightened for the veterans and Washington has been given to understand that they are Houses of Congress this winter and confident that they can win both if necessary override a presidential veto. That's the real situation.

INCREASING DISCHARGES FROM CCC CAMPS TO PRIVATE JOBS

The number of men who leave the Civilian Conservation Corps camps to accept private employment has shown a marked increase during the past several months, according to Director Robert Fechner, of the Emergency Conservation Work. During the three months ending August 31, a total of 43,091 "enrollments" left the forest camps to take jobs already obtained. This compares with 26,353 who were discharged for that purpose during the preceding three months. These statistics were compiled from reports received from the 2,551 camps now in operation. The recapitulation for the last six months showed discharges to take jobs as follows: March, 8,068; April, 8,511; May, 9,774; June, 12,790; July, 15,977; August, 14,330. Preliminary figures showed the September discharges for employment in private industry will be much larger during September.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS

The Democratic nominee for Governor not only has a reputation as a singer but he knows how to bring harmony to the Democratic party.

Now that Joe Louis has defeated Max Baer, wonder what the man in the street is going to have for an alibi!

Judge King Swope, the Republican nominee for Governor says that he is not opposed to President Roosevelt's plans.

Editorial of the Week

The present gubernatorial race will stand out as one of the most unusual that was ever held in our state. It will be the only state election held before the presidential race next year, therefore, both Republicans and Democrats of our entire nation are eager for their party to win by a landslide, so as to influence the voters in the coming presidential race.

There will be men of national renown speaking in practically all of the larger cities and towns of the state in interest of both the democratic and republican tickets. A mere also is expected to be a large campaign fund sent to back parades from the national campaign funds which will be used in many ways to get votes.

With the manifestation of such interest already created it appears that a record vote will be cast.

The large vote cast in the democratic primary, the present interest and fervor, and the expected large vote of the coming race are all indications that the people of Kentucky are becoming educated to the necessity of better and more efficient government. This also indicates that a majority of the voters have ascertained the idea that voting is altogether a privilege and not at all a duty.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Tammany Hall, so vital to any plan for carrying New York for Franklin D. Roosevelt next year, has not the slightest reason at the present moment for desiring the President's continuance in office. It has gotten so little patronage that it is inconsequential. On the contrary, most Tammany leaders feel that it was Roosevelt and James A. Farley who were responsible for Tammany's not having the tremendous New York city patronage at the present moment. For it was a Roosevelt lieutenant, Joseph V. McKee, who ran with the tacit blessing of the White House and the more open support of Farley for mayor on an independent ticket, thus bringing about the election of Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia. And the President has been almost as friendly with La Guardia since the latter's election as he has with certain other Republican Progressives, notably Senator Robert M. La Follette.

Even this is not all that Roosevelt and Farley have done to Tammany. When Roosevelt was governor he went after the administration of Mayor James J. Walker, aided in its being shown up in spectacular fashion, and finally forced Jimmy Walker out.

Tammany never held this against Roosevelt. Its leaders are always practical. They knew there was nothing else Roosevelt could do, unless he abandoned all hope of becoming President. They knew that to pick a fight with Tammany has always been good national politics. And besides, while many of them were sorry personally about Jimmy Walker, they put their own man in as mayor, and the Hall continued to flourish.

But it must be remembered that for the two years preceding this, Tammany had been deprived of any share of state patronage. Tammany rather expected this of a Presidential candidate, but when Roosevelt's protégé, Herbert H. Lehman, continued to starve the tiger, despite the fact that Al Smith had supported Lehman, the grievance began to grow.

This would have made no difference if it had not been for the La Guardia election, which left Tammany without federal state or city jobs to dispense. In fact, at the lowest ebb of its power since the Civil war.

Always Dangerous

But this does not mean that Tammany will break in the next election. By no means! If the record of past campaigns is a safe guide, Tammany when furthest from the patronage trough, is always the most dangerous. Nor is this due to desperation, or to the idea of fighting with one's back to the wall. It involves other elements which very few people out in the country, to whom the very word "Tammany" is one of approbrium, understand. But it is a thing which a very brief conversation with any old New Yorker will confirm.

The point is that when Tammany is in power at the city hall everything that goes wrong is blamed on the Wigwam. By the same token, when Tammany is not in power at the city hall, everything that happens which does not appeal to the voters is an asset for Tammany.

Moreover, and this will surprise folks west of the Mississippi especially, most people who have lived in New York for a few years, and have had a chance to contract its administration with that of other cities, believe solemnly, whether right or wrong, that the taxpayer in New York gets more for his money than do the taxpayers of most other cities in the United States.

The writer is not attempting a statement of the merit or lack of merit of this contention. He is stating a political fact, which can be easily demonstrated by a few conversations with New Yorkers on your next visit to the metropolis.

Hope for Bonus

Payment of the bonus in full not long after Congress meets in January, while not a certainty, is considered at least probable. President Roosevelt has made no definite commitments, despite the fact that certain American Legion leaders have been giving that impression. No one really doubts that he will again veto the measure. The change in the situation as compared to last session is that the President is not expected to turn on anything like the heat to prevent his veto from being overridden that he did last time.

Without so much Presidential pressure, congressional experts say, there is not much doubt that the senate will follow the house in overriding the Chief Executive's disapproval. In fact, this theory is commonly accepted in congressional as well as Legion circles. In short, official Washington believes the bonus will be passed months before the national conventions meet in June. Bonus politics is one of the queer exceptions to general rules. It has come to be generally accepted that it does not hurt a President to oppose bonus payments. But just as generally it is believed that voting against anything the soldiers want is little short of political suicide for a senator or member of the house.

This theory may or may not be accurate. It has never been adequately tested.

But, whether opposing the bonus contributed or not, the senators and members of the house who attempted to stand by Presidents in opposing the bonus were killed off by their electorates one after the other.

Curious Complication

There is another curious complication to the present situation. Several senators are known to have told the bonus lobbyists that they would vote to override President Roosevelt's veto if that one additional vote would put it over. This is not just pater by the lobbyists. Two senators, whose names the writer is not permitted to mention, have confirmed such reports. They told bonus workers later that if it could be demonstrated next time that one more vote would do the trick, they would produce.

At least two such senators, in telling about it afterward, said they would probably have to "vote with the boys" next time, adding that it is always the last vote before election that counts. Both senators in question are coming up for re-election next fall, and both are expected to have hard fights.

By making that halfway pledge they removed in advance any grounds for the Legion leaders making any drive against them. In fact, both fully expect to vote for the bonus next time, and for the bonus to pass over the Roosevelt veto, thus eliminating any possibility of repercussions for them at the polls. But last time they did not feel strong enough to risk the President's ire when he bore down on them to sustain the veto. They were interested in bits of that $4,000,000,000 work relief, for instance. Not to mention several other possibilities of Presidential favor or disfavor.

Next time, the understanding on Capitol Hill is, there will be no threats from the White House, not even implied ones.

Morgenthau's Trip

Rumors persist that the trip of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau to Europe is not just a pleasure excursion, despite his emphatic insistence. Silver senators especially attach far more significance to it. They insist he is seeking an international agreement for the remonetization of the white metal. They point out that more than usual pains were taken to hide the recent conference between Mr. Morgenthau and Montagu Norman, famous and mysterious head of the Bank of England.

This visit is alleged to have occurred at Bar Harbor, Maine. Montagu Norman slipped into that Down East resort not with even a society column mention of his movements. At the same time Morgenthau, always a dutiful son, realized that he had not seen his father for several weeks. Henry Morgenthau, Sr., by a curious coincidence, was also at Bar Harbor. So the secretary of the treasury slipped up to Bar Harbor and paid his parent the long deferred visit he owed.

So much the silver senators know. They add that they also know that the British financier and the head of Uncle Sam's treasury had a protracted talk—so protracted that it was the subject of much chatter in the servants' quarters all over Bar Harbor next day.

Nobody even claims to know what they talked about. Montagu Norman is famous for saying absolutely nothing in his interviews. Morgenthau is not quite so taciturn—but almost.

Shortly thereafter Morgenthau announces a pleasure trip to Spain. What the silver senators think is that some very important financiers, and some of the leading finance ministers of Europe, will also suddenly decide that a brief rest in Spain—away from all the excitement about Italy and Ethiopia—is just what the doctor ordered for them.

What they earnestly hope is that Morgenthau will be able to persuade them how much it would be to the advantage of all concerned for there to be an international agreement on silver.

Silver Program Bogs

Behind this desire on the part of the silver senators—and behind the possibility that Mr. Morgenthau may be going to attempt just that—is the discouraging fact that the administration silver program has rather bogged down. It is perfectly true that the United States treasury has acquired an enormous quantity of silver at very low prices. It is true that even at the present world price for silver the United States treasury has a handsome profit on what it has bought. But it is also true that the present hopes for a greatly higher price in the world market are not particularly bright.

The language of the famous silver act directed the treasury to buy silver until either (1) the price was $1.29 an ounce, or (2) the value of the monetary reserve behind the United States paper currency was one-third that of the gold so held.

Actually, of course, the silver senators cared nothing about the actual quantity of silver the federal government might acquire. Especially as the treasury, by paying a fixed price for all newly mined silver, took care of that angle. What they were very much interested in was to have such buying force the world price of silver up to $1.29 an ounce.

James Barlow, that popular trader, was hustling for sheep in this vicinity, one day recently, and sopped long enough to eat one-half of all the watermelons I had in stock. There is no cleverer man than Bro. James.

Lucien Dickerson, Jr., is going to school in Frankfort.

Mrs. Nannie Burkett is visiting in Covington.

The corn crop is from 25 to 30 per cent short of what it would have been had we had a good season.

A supposed joke now passing thru the country is as follows: "I wonder which place Huey Long went to?" "I don't know, but I'll bet wherever he is, he is campaigning for the head job." To some people Huey Long is as great as George Washington and Abraham Lincoln are to others, therefore, he deserves respect from his former enemies as Washington and Lincoln deserve respect.

WHAT FIRE PREVENTION MEANS TO YOU

The coming of Fire Prevention Week, which will be observed between October 6 and 12, makes it worthwhile to remember on what fire prevention means to you as an individual, a taxpayer, a homeowner and a worker.

Fire prevention saves lives—yours and your loved ones. Thousands of people are now cremated each year—because someone was careless.

Fire prevention is the friend of the home. Without it, your home may be turned to ashes—and insurance can never replace the many intangible values each home represents. Money cannot compensate for everything.

Fire prevention tends to keep taxes down. Each time a fire destroys taxpaying property, thus removing it from the tax rolls, higher taxes must be paid by all other property within the community.

Fire prevention keeps insurance rates down. Over a period of years, the rate for each locality is based upon fire loss—many fires mean high rates.

Fire prevention is the friend of employment. When a fire destroys a business, jobs are lost, and thousands of dollars in purchasing power is lost with them. Untold privation and misery can result.

Fire prevention means progressive towns and cities. Cases are on record where a single fire, destroying a town's main industry, has resulted in permanent retrogression, at the expense of property and all other values in the community.

Ways to can vegetables without destroying Vitamin C or the flavor were emphasized to Fulton-Hickman county homemakers.

It pays to use a home-mixed poultry ration, Christian county Negro farmers found after running experiments.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for October 6

ISAIAH PORTRAYING THE SUFFERING SERVANT

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 53:1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. Isaiah 53:5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Best Promise.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Isaiah Foretells Jesus' Coming.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Our Salvation Cost.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Suffering Savior.

The prophecy of Isaiah is the grand center of the Old Testament. It pictures the Servant of Jehovah with great wisdom gloriously executing the divine purpose of redemption at the cost of great suffering.

1. The Servant's Triumph (Is. 52:13-15). The Servant here means the coming Messiah (42:1).

1. His wisdom (v. 13). He will deal prudently, for his name is Counselor (9:8). He was filled with the spirit of wisdom and understanding (11:2).

2. He shall be exalted and extolled (v. 13). Being the mighty God, even Immanuel, Jehovah has highly exalted him (Phil. 2:9).

3. The appearance of the Servant (v. 14). Because of his marred visage, the Jews, who looked for outward signs of royalty and worldly splendor, were not attracted to him.

4. The issue of his ministry (v. 15). In his sprinkling of many nations he is revealed as the great High Priest, sprinkling the nations with his blood and cleansing them from their sins.

II. The Servant Despised and Rejected (53:1-3).

1. The unbelief of the Jews (v. 1). They despised the words of the prophet and failed to recognize the hand of the Lord in the miracles he wrought.

2. The origin of the Servant (v. 2). He sprang out of a stump of Judah. The condition of the people at that time is expressed by "dry corn." He came among his own and they apprehended him not.

3. A man of sorrows (v. 3). As the Sin-bearer of the world he suffered untold sorrows. The primary cause of his grief was their contemptuous rejection of him.

III. The Vicarious Suffering of the Servant (53:4-6).

1. His griefs and sorrows were ours. Though innocent, he was loaded down with disease and pain; not his, but ours. This awful suffering was looked upon by the world as occasioned by sin.

2. He was beaten for us (v. 5). That which was our due was meted out to him. Notice the four significant words; "wounded," "bruised," "despised," "strikes." The word "our" shows that his sufferings were vicarious. The full meaning of the cross is comprehended in these words.

3. The reason (v. 6). All humanity, Jews and Gentiles, had gone astray. God had laid on him the iniquity of us all.

IV. The Death of the Servant (53:7-9).

1. His strange silence (v. 7). He went as a lamb to the slaughter. How unlike men who, when wrongfully condemned, make a great ado.

2. Unconcern of contemporaries (v. 8). Though dying instead of the wicked people, they failed to discern that his suffering was in their stead.

3. Buried with the wicked and the rich. This was fulfilled in the crucifixion between two thieves, and burial in Joseph's tomb.

V. The Servant's Ultimate Victory (vv. 10-12).

1. His suffering expressed the divine will (v. 10). The Lord himself laid this burden upon Christ. He was delivered according to the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God.

2. A spiritual progeny resulted from his death (v. 10). Christ declared, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone." The fundamental law of the universe, which is life out of death, found supreme expression in Christ's death on the cross.

3. Through death shall come the realization of his fondest hope (v. 11). "He shall see the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied."

4. The divine reward (v. 12). The divine Conqueror shall share the spoils of victory which by a strong arm were secured. Though he took the place of a sinner, it was for the purpose of bearing the sins of many and making intercession for the transgressor.

VI. The Servant's Suffering Historically Fulfilled (John 19:17-37).

When Jesus of Nazareth went forth bearing his cross to Golgotha, where they crucified him, the prediction of Isaiah was historically realized.

Thought

In the end, thought rules the world. There are times when impulses and passions are more powerful, but they soon expend themselves; while mind, acting constantly, is ever ready to drive them back and work when their energy is exhausted.

Influence

The ministry of personal influence is something very wonderful. Without being conscious of it, we are always impressing others by this strange power that goes out from us—Huck Miller.

SCHOOL NOTES
The schools of the county have now been open almost a month and everything seems to indicate that we will have one of the best school years in many. Some much needed repairs have been completed, and some more will be completed soon. The teaching staff is much the same as last year, some few changes in some of the schools. We hope the new teachers and principals will maintain as high a standard of efficiency as their predecessors. The State Tournament is but one month off. Last year our schools led the State in scholarship and General Efficiency. Last year is past. We must enter to contest again to defend the record set last year. Unless we are active and alert some other county may forge ahead of us. We hope every teacher who is teaching pupils in the upper four grades will put forth a special effort to train them both in scholarship and athletics. We hope every school in the county will share in the honors by having some representative from your school in the group that goes to State Tournament. "A Winner never Quits; and a Quitter never Wins."

D. H. NORRIS, Supt.

The Right Girl

By MARGARETTA BRUCKER
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

"WHEN the time comes I'll pick the right girl," Don Farrell had said. "You'll see."

Don had come to Gatesville on a government engineering job. He was a tall lanky fellow with deep-set gray eyes, and an infectious smile.

He had made the quoted remark on his first day in Gatesville. Bob Haines had just told him he'd better watch out for his heart for we had the prettiest crop of girls south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Don had just grinned—picked up his grip and asked: "Which way to the best boarding house?"

"Mrs. Ann Nelson's over on Myrtle street," Bob had replied. Then he'd winked at the fellows standing about the soda bar in the drug store. "What you bet you'll start picking that girl before you're 24 hours older?"

"I'm pretty hard to suit," Don had called back over his shoulder.

"Wait 'til he meets the Nelson twins," Bob had said then. "Wonder which one he'll fall for?"

Don hadn't been in Gatesville two days when he had them both down to the drug store and it didn't take half an eye to see that he was falling fast . . . but which one? that was the puzzle.

Carrie Lou and Emm. Lou were their names and when the two mothers couldn't tell them apart, now was a long-legged Yankee going to come to any decision? He had the whole town wondering.

There's no romance to get under way with three principals. Somebody's got to drop out. One of the twins had to be disqualified. Evidently the strain began to tell for gossip had it that the girls were snapping at each other. Two weeks after Don's first appearance he turned up at the drug store one evening with one twin . . . but which one?

Bets began to run high around the soda bar. From betting on Don the whole community started betting on the twins. They'd flirted before, with fellows from Georgia to the Mississippi basin and never had had a heart flutter. Now this gangling Yankee engineer had sunk them both.

Then one afternoon a man from T. V. I. drifted into town and said something about Don's wife. Say . . . that burst the town wide open. It was about four o'clock in the afternoon when the twins came into the drug store. Both were in white—just their belts different, one blue and one red.

The preacher's wife was in the store buying catnip for that big Maltese that always sits in her front window. She marches right over to the girls.

"There was a man in here a minute ago who said that young Mr. Ferrell has a wife," she says. The preacher's wife is all right but she feels it her duty to look after the morals of the young.

If Don hadn't followed right at her heels it wouldn't have been so dramatic. As it was it knocked all the home talent shows in Gatesville right into a cocked hat. Don burst through the screen. His eyes were almost black. He came right over to where the girls were sitting.

The preacher's wife backed off but the fellows around the soda bar stuck and stared and figured that all that money they'd bet on the twins was as good as gone.

One of the twins was beat up a regular tattoo on the floor with a slipper and the other was fiddling with a soda straw and breaking it into little pieces. I guess they felt pretty queer.

"What have you heard?" Don demanded. He didn't sit down. He stood leaning across the table and his glance included both the twins. His long brown fingers gripped the edge of the table.

"That you were married," said one. She said it quiet-like, but there was a lot behind her tone. Some folks don't show their emotion by being noisy. The other twin did. She said: "Yes. . . that you were married." Her voice was thin and sharp. "Is it true?" she demanded.

"Yes, it's true."

The one with the blue belt who had spoken first opened her lips closed them and sank back into her chair. The soda straw was torn to shreds and lay scattered about the chocolate soda which she hadn't tasted. The twin in the red belt burst into a regular torrent of abuse. She told Don that she thought of him . . . what she thought of all Yankees . . . well . . . it was almost as if she'd stripped off her clothes and stood there naked. Most of the fellows slunk out of the store ashamed for her. Being the soda jerk I had to stick.

Finally the twin in the blue belt began to cry. Don stepped right around the table and took her in his arms. He kissed her.

"You . . ." the twin in the red belt started screaming and clawing him with her soft little hands. Don didn't seem to mind. He was grinning and showing his white teeth and saying: "I always said that when the time came I'd pick the right girl . . . now I know I've made no mistake. Carrie Lou and I were married last Friday. . . . I didn't hear the rest for his head was bent and he was saying it into Carrie Lou's soft dark hair."

I turned around and pretended to be busy polishing some soda glasses. I heard the screen door bang behind the twin in the red belt. After his she wouldn't need to dress different for everyone in town to know her. She'd always be the twin that Don Farrell didn't pick.

what Irvin Cobb thinks about:

Huey Long's Prototype

SANTA, MONICA, CALIF.—Who today remembers this man's name?

He was a Southerner. He was humbly born. From childhood the craving for power possessed him. He educated himself, studied law, got into the game, gained high office. The aristocrats despised him. They labeled him "poor white trash." He fought them and he fought the corporations. He flouted the old leaders and he organized "the great common people."

He built up a machine in his own image; set up a partisan election board in his own behalf.

The whole country watched the so-called upstart, some bating, some fearing, some admiring him. He went into a convention as a discredited minority candidate. He came out of it with the governorship nomination, leaving his party in warring fragments.

On the eve of attaining his highest ambition of all—complete political control of the commonwealth—he was shot down at the state house. His enemies—and some of his friends—believe that, had he lived, he would have ruled the national Democracy or else would have wrecked it.

If Huey Long had lived—if determination and courage had conquered the assassin's bullet—what would have been his place in future history?

But with the grim parallel continuing to its fatal end, will the next generation forget Long as already this generation has forgotten Goebel of Kentucky, dead by a murderer's hand less than 36 years ago?

Adopting Husbands.

WE'VE got a new fad out here in Hollywood and a very lovely one. From time to time some among our glamorous cinema queens adopt orphaned infants, often doing so with all the shrinking reticence, all the strenuous efforts to avoid publicity, which you'd notice in connection with Barnum & Bailey's grand free street parade.

Think of the heritage for a girl child thus favored, when she in turn grows up and her own first-born prattles at her knees and looks up with trusting baby eyes and says, "Mumple, did the stork bring you to dear Granddamma the same as he brought me to you?" I seem to hear the answering words. "No, darling. You see, precious, it happened in Hollywood, so I came with three news cameras, two press agents, one eighteen-piece orchestra and a nationwide hook-up."

Joking aside, though, while some of these screen ladies may be persistent yet frequent wives, in the main they make devoted foster mothers; in fact, are such successes at it that a fellow gets to wondering why, instead of just keeping on marrying husband after husband, they don't try adopting 'em.

Not Raising Onions.

EVERYBODY was so joyous over congress adjourning that, during the public dancing in the streets, we overlooked a few bets. Among the great gross of bills that went through at the eleventh hour was one whimsical little trick called the Potato Control act. We did so well last year with cotton control, you remember.

Anyhow, this one had the usual congressional brevity, a mere beggary 15,000 words. But 'twould seem it's loaded with crop reduction rules and what not for the 3,000,000 Americans who, for reasons best known to themselves, go on producing potatoes at the customary ratio of 16 to 1—16 potato bugs to every potato. By winter, I look for the G-men to be out running down potato-leggers and spud-runners.

However, having gone on a strict reducing diet in the interests of the acting art, I'm remaining calm. The only times I ever taste starch any more is when licking the button-holes in a stiff shirt.

But I do wish the government would take up onions next! I presume the proper place to write to is the Interior department. Because I've found onions absolutely uncontrollable.

P. S.—Probably we'd better include radishes, too.

Hitler's Trick Mustache.

THIS Berlin dispatches tempt a fellow to go into Nazi in its various branches, but, after four weeks of doing this job, I've already found out that, to avoid causing bitterness in one quarter or another, about the only things you can take a firm stand against are boll weevils and side whiskers. And even the side whiskers have a few devoted friends left.

Yet, without debating any of his other outstanding policies, I feel that all of us can join in deploring a certain attitude of uncertainty taken by Herr Hitler. The strain would be greatly relieved if only he could decide whether that trick mustache of his is going to keep on clinging where it is now or climb back up his nose again. Before now, governments have fallen on lesser issues than a mustache giving such universal dissatisfaction.

THE FARM AND HOME

(Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station)

Feeding plenty of mash is one of the best ways to increase egg production in October and November, the months in which egg prices are usually the highest. Eggs are very scarce in these months because many of the layers are molting.

Three ways to prevent soil erosion: terraces, cover crops, keeping steep land in grass. Now is the time to sow winter cover crops. Terraces may be made any time the ground can be worked. Plan to put the hill sides in hay, pasture or trees.

Sawdust a fair grade of bedding for dairy cows, horses and other livestock, but it is poor fertilizer. In fact, an excessive amount of sawdust, even though carrying considerable manure with it, will injure the productive capacity of the soil.

HORSES AND MULES

MAY CONTINUE HIGH

The increased demand for work stock, together with the comparative scarcity of good horses and mules, may mean continued high prices for several years, points out a statement from the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

"Horse prices will go higher and remain high for the next four or five years," declares Wayne Dinsmore of the Horse and Mule Association of America. "Breeding was neglected during the depression years and it will take several years to make up the shortage."

KENTUCKY COTTON CROP BRINGS OVER MILLION

Although little known in the state as a whole, Kentucky's 1934 cotton crop brought farmers $1,037,147. More than half of this amount, or $651,548, went to Fulton county, while Hickman county farmers received $256,231 for their cotton. The rest was divided among Ballard, Calloway, Carlisle, Graves, McCracken and Marshall counties.

Of the more than a million dollars received last year for cotton in this state, $63,147 was in the form of rental and party payments in connection with the adjustment program, including all money received to April 1.

Howard Kelly and wife and Virgil Kelly and son Wain, of Florence, and Lester Aylor and Libbie Holbrook, spent Sunday with W. W. Kelly and wife.

I wish to extend my thanks to all who donated toward the floral offering at my brother's death.

NITRATE NOTES

The ammonia equivalent of nitrogen may be found by multiplying the nitrogen figure by 1.2158. Thus the guaranteed 16 per cent nitrogen content of American nitrate of soda is equivalent to 19.45 per cent ammonia. Actually, however, the nitrogen content and correspondingly the ammonia content is usually in excess of the guaranty.

The Alabama Experiment Station recommends that farmers use a great deal more nitrogen. In addition to top and side-dressing, farmers should use a mixed fertilizer with plenty of nitrogen in it.

The urgent need for nitrate of soda for explosives during the World War led to the establishment of our own nitrate of soda industry. The famous plant at Hopewell, Virginia, was completed in 1929.

The first sulphate of ammonia made in the United States was produced in 1893.

One of the many contributions of the American nitrate of soda industry to the American farmer was the introduction of water-proof bags.

Nitrate of soda is used in curing meat and gives the meat its deep red color.

In California, airplanes have been used to fertilize rice fields with sulphate of ammonia.

Agricultural authorities recommend the application of nitrate of soda by machine. It is important to use nitrate of soda that is in good mechanical condition.

The Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, U. S. Department of Agriculture, says "Nitrogen is the predominant need of the cotton growing soils of the Southeast—the yield of cotton may be at least doubled and sometimes trebled on the application of large quantities of commercial nitrogen mixed with mineral fertilizers."

Over a four-year period, merican nitrate of soda has averaged the highest seed cotton yields at the South Carolina Experiment Station. The average 1,100 lbs. was made with a basic application of 600 pounds per acre of 4-8-4. Another good snowing by a Southern product!

The merican nitrate of soda industry introduced standard, even weight bags, a real service to the farmer.

The paper-lined nitrate of soda bags make good truck covers. In Georgia, there's a Holy Roller church where American nitrate of soda bags have been used as the walls.

The same nitrate of soda farmers use for fertilizer is used in making explosives—another good reason why America needs a strong nitrogen industry.

"Unless Uncle Sam is on the sack, turn right around and take it back" is the motto of the American nitrate of soda people. Southern ladies who have been buying dresses made in Japan should think this principle over!

Somebody recently asked why the well-known fertilizer is called "Arcadian." Mr. Webster dictionary tells us that Arcadia was a district of Greece, distinguished for contentment and rural happiness.

More Thrills For Gallery In 1935 Football, Says Rice

Annual Guide Explains Rule Changes Which Speed Up The Game

"A GAME made to order for Mr. Average Fan" is how Grant Rice characterizes football as it is played under 1935 rules. In this year's edition of his Football Guide, now being distributed free at all Cities Service service stations, the veteran sports commentator and writer points to the new freedom in passing as a bid for the interest of the rank and file of spectators who find their thrills in the more spectacular moments of play.

to cover the prospective receivers and leave the line more or less on its own initiative. It's now a wide open game, he finds, and sees teams, with passing and receiving combinations anything like Alabama's Dixie Howell-Don Hutson pair playing all over the lot many times each quarter.

The famous writer's 1935 Guide carries its usual schedules of every major eleven in the country and illustrated analyses of yard-gaining plays by Andy Kerr, Tiny Thornhill, Pop Warner, Dana X. Bible and other nationally known coaches. For the first time, the booklet includes the schedule of the National Professional Football League.

Citing the new opportunity of the ball carrier to pass to either side or rear at any time before being downed or before the whistle, Rice predicted that "the heretofore secondary defense will have to

Making The Home More Livable

The Correct Living Room Table Lamp Does Its Share

By Jean Prentice

IT ISN'T that husband or wife is selfish—but sometimes when they settle down in their chairs beside the living room table for an hour or so of reading, one or the other unconsciously reaches out to pull the lamp closer. And their mate is left out in the dark.

We'll have to blame the lamp. For that doesn't happen to the persons who inhabit the living room sketched above. When the two chairs are occupied, and books or newspapers are opened, this lamp is as kind to the eyes of the one as to the other's, and serves each reader equally well. It "stays put" in the center of the table.

I wonder if the lamp on your living room table has the good traits of this one? Your tape measure or ruler will help tell you. Height of this lamp is from 23 to 26 inches and the bottom diameter of the shade (which, by the way, is of course open at the top) is between 16 and 18.

And how important are the height of the standard and the width of the shade, say lighting scientists! Upon them depend the proper spread and

FOR YOUR CONSIDERATION

A column of this nature will appear weekly and anyone who has an unusual news item to contribute please send to the news Editor.

The present Recorder Office force, consisting of Alvin E. Stephens, Ralph G. Maurer, H. C. Kirkpatrick, William Jarrell and Harold Ogden, present some contrast which deserve notice.

The range of weight varies from 282 to 130 lbs., the ages vary from 48 to 17 years, the family history shows that there is one Irishman, two Englishmen, and two Dutchmen on the force, there is a bachelor, a shiek and the others are completely out of luck, the work ranges from editing and business management to folding papers, and newspaper experience varies from 38 years to practically none. However, with this setup we are one big family working together, and with the cooperation of the many friends of The Boone County Recorder and the many new ones whom we expect to make, WE WILL GIVE YOU A BETTER PAPER.

JUDGE J. M. LASSING TO REPLACE THE HON. A. B. ROUSE AS STATE REVENUE AGENT

Judge J. M. Lassing was nominated Monday that he had been appointed by the state Tax Commission as State Revenue Agent to succeed A. B. Rouse, of Glasgow, who resigned to accept a position as clerk of the Federal Court for the Eastern Kentucky District.

The appointment of Judge Lassing to this important position will be gratifying to his many friends in this county and the entire First Congressional District where he numbers his friends by the legions.

He has held many prominent offices both in county and state. He was Judge of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky for two terms and when he retired from the bench he returned to Boone county and has devoted his time and energy to the interest of public improvements. His hobby is good roads and he has devoted most of his time in this line of work and the network of Federal and State highways in this county stand as a testimonial as to his ability along these lines.

The Recorder feels that it voices the sentiment of the entire state in saying that the state Tax Commission made a wise choice in appointing Judge Lassing.

Local alumni, former students, and friends of Western State Teachers College will be interested in knowing that the Bowling Green institution will give a series of weekly radio broadcasts, beginning on October 15.

The programs will be broadcast from Van Meter Auditorium on College Heights Tuesday afternoons from 4:00 to 4:30 o'clock, CST, over radio station WHS. (Kilocyte Frequency 820. Power 50,000 watts.)

The Louisville radio station has donated the time for the broadcast as an educational contribution.

The committee in charge of the programs and arrangements is composed of Dr. Earl Moore, chairman; Dean F. C. Grise, Dr. D. West Richards, Mrs. T. C. Cherry, W. L. Matthews, and Kelly Thompson.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS HAVE HOPES OF $12.00 PER CAPITA

Louisville, Ky., October 1, 1935—The Board of Directors of the Kentucky Education Association at its annual fall meeting reiterated its position on the matter of a $12.00 per capita for schools. Great satisfaction was expressed over the attitude toward education of the leading candidates for office. The Board was particularly pleased with the declared policy of non-interference with the new School Code until it has had sufficient trial to give opportunity for intelligent alteration.

The K. E. A. Planning Board was directed to make a study of the question of Teacher Retirement preliminary to an actuarial study to be made before the enactment of legislation on the subject. This work will be directed by Dr. Leo Chamberlin of University of Kentucky.

One of the most outstanding actions of the Board was the appointment of a committee to plan for the state-wide celebration of a Century of Progress in Education in 1938. This celebration will be participated in by every level of school market.

The annual autumn series of district educational meetings starts in the Middle Cumberland District with the teachers from eight counties, meeting at Somerset on October 3 and 4, to discuss class room problems and hear addresses by leading school men of the country. Dr. Frederick Archer, of Louisville, Mineta Merton of Wisconsin, an expert in Visual Education, and W. P. King, Executive Secretary for Kentucky will be among the speakers. Mr. P. H. Hopkins, Superintendent of Schools at Somerset, and President of the K. E. A. predicts that this assembly at Somerset will go on record as strongly favoring a permanent school fund, non-interference with the new school code, and no reduction below a $12.00 per capita.

It will have the new telegraphic service furnished by Transradio, and it will carry the features of the United Features Inc. A thirty-two page Goss press, nine Linotypes, two Linow machines, Linotype and other modern equipment have been installed in the plant. The paper starts off with seventy men on the editorial and mechanical payroll.

270 TONS STONE CRUSHED
Two hundred and seventy tons of agricultural limestone was crushed the past week in the Boone county soil improvement program according to Joe Broecker assistant county agent. Good progress is being made by the pulverizer.

Stone was crushed the past week for Dr. Northcutt, Logan Keith and Joel Gray. The pulverizer moved Monday to the farm of F. H. Rouse and will serve Boone county farmers who have their stone piled in as rapid order as possible.

Recent soil tests are showing more strongly the need for both lime and phosphate. Limestone crushing will be available for a limited time to Boone county farmers at the lowest price ever offered. Numerous farmers are working with the assistant agent in pooling orders to secure phosphate at a considerable saving. Lime and phosphate combined with the seeding of legume and pasture mixtures will mean hundreds of thousands of dollars in soil improvement and increased crop production for Boone county farmers.

The County Agent's office at Burlington will be glad to advise with any farmer on his soil improvement problems. Mr. Broecker's help will be available on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of each week.

FROST

3,000 ACRES CORN DAMAGED BY FREEZING WEATHER DURING THE PAST WEEK

Three thousand acres of Boone county's 1935 corn crop is reported to be damaged by the freezing weather the past week according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The killing weather caught the county's 13,000 acre corn crop in all stages from the milk to the mature stage.

A survey of leading growers in various sections of the county indicated that the later corn on mill land was damaged more than that in the river bottoms. The damage to the stover or stalks was greater than to the ears. The majority of the corn has not been cut.

WILL THEY TAKE HEED?

Mr. E. J. Adams, chairman of the special board of investigation of the Federal Trade Commission, warned advertisers and broadcasting stations in an address at Chicago, Ill., June 11, 1935, before the annual meeting of broadcasters, advertisers and agency men, to tell the public the truth about what they had to sell or else lose this source of revenue. He said:

"There is no value in advertising unless the reader or listener believes what he is told in the advertisement. Every time he is deceived, his confidence is reduced. Unless truth in advertising copy is demanded by publishers and radio stations, the public will not long respond to advertising appeals, and this source of revenue for publishers and radio stations will come to an end."

In recent years, most publishers have "rejected advertising copy to sell questionable products, and misleading advertising copy to sell good products," he declared. As they have done so, many such advertisers have turned to the broadcasting stations where less scrutiny of advertising subject matter was observed.

"If many radio stations expect to survive, they must respect and protect listener confidence. The programs must be clean, and the representations by advertisers must be reliable and truthful," Mr. Adams asserted.

WHO OWES YOU A LIVING?

Millions of people are being educated in our country today to believe that someone owes them a living. The laws of nature do not seem to recognize this doctrine.

Just go out into primitive country and see who owes you a living—you will soon find that your existence depends on your ingenuity and initiative.

Governments were organized to go nature one better and make it a little easier to live and to take care of the helpless whom nature would otherwise unceremoniously remove.

But today millions of perforce healthy, able-bodied people are being taught to loaf at the expense of the savings of others, instead of to rustle for themselves.

Such a system can endure only so long as there are stored-up savings to confiscate, then the inexorable laws of nature will prevail.

An epidemic of pests completely devours a tree or a field of grain, and then the pests die. Nature does not owe them a living.

The same thing can happen to governments and to the human beings who make the governments—If they eat up their capital to maintain idleness, they will eventually find that nature refuses to hear their demands that "someone owes them a living."

Thus may not be a pleasant-sounding philosophy, but it is a fact which money-coated, political cure-alls try to hide.

HOW TO COOK YOUR HUSBANDS

A good many husbands are entirely spoiled by mismanagement in cooking, and so are not tender and good. Some women go about it as if their husbands were bladders and blow them up. Others keep them constantly in hot water. Others let them freeze by their carelessness and indifference. Some keep them in a stew by irritating ways and words.

It cannot be supposed that any husband will be tender and good managed in this way. Turnips wouldn't, onions wouldn't, cabbage heads wouldn't, and husbands won't; but they are really delicious when properly treated.

In selecting your husband, you should not be guided by the silvery appearance, as in buying mackerel; nor by the golden tint, as if you wanted salmon. Be sure to select him yourself, as tastes differ. And, by the way, do not go to the market for him, as the best is always brought to the door. It is far better to have none unless you will patiently learn how to cook him.

A preserving kettle of the finest porcelain is the best, out of which you can get nothing but an earthenware pickle. It will do, with care. See that the line in which you wrap him is nicely washed and mended with the requisite number of buttons and strings nicely sewed on. Tie him in the kettle by a strong silken cord called Comfort, as the one called Duty is apt to be weak.

Husbands are apt to fly out of the kettle and be burned and crusty on the edges since, like crabs and lobsters, you have to cook them when alive. Make a clear, strong, steady fire out of Love, Neatness and Cheerfulness. Sit your husband as near the fire as seems to agree with him. If he sputters and fizzes do not be anxious. Some husbands do not until they are quite done.

Add a little sugar in the form of what confectioners call kisses, but no vinegar or pepper on any account. A little spice improves him, but it must be used with judgment. Do not stick any sharp instruments into him to see if he is becoming tender. Stir him gently; watch the while lest he lie too flat and close to the kettle and so become inert and useless, you cannot fail to know when he is done.

If thus treated, you will find him very digestible, agreeing nicely with you and the children and he will keep as long as you want, unless you become careless and set him in too cold a place.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS

Hampton Institute, the great institution of education for colored students has opened this fall with a total enrollment of 952, about equally divided between sexes. With this number of energetic young colored students in such an institute there is a possibility that America will have another Booker T. Washington.

Noisy Hugh Johnson can't be kept off the front pages. That seems to be the reason why he was the first leader in the NRA. His latest is to predict that "one of these days somebody is going to kill Santa Claus or put such a crimp in him that he won't be able to keep your problems asleep by waving a wand over them." Donald Richberg succeeded Johnson and for a time he was called "Assistant President." Now, it is said he doesn't ever see the President, and nobody else missed him. If you want to know who's the present head of the NRA, ask Ripley. Maybe he can furnish the answer.

Should Burlington suddenly grow into an industrial center, it would require months to wreck all the houses, barns, and fences that are now located in the original surveyed streets and alleys.

There is enough free press material coming to The Recorder weekly to start three fires daily and then a sufficient amount left (providing we saw fit to use all of it) to fill the entire paper.

A first-class street lighting system is the surest protection for small towns against robbery and theft.

A close scrutiny of both Chandler's and Swope's platform reveals that there is very little difference between them.

Editorial of the Week

Henry W. Toll, a former Colorado legislator, who is executive director of the American Legislators' Association, has compiled some interesting statistics relative to the average legislator.

A sample survey of state legislators in 16 states, shows that 46 per cent of the members of the state senates are college graduates and 11 per cent more attended college but received no degrees. Degrees from business colleges are counted as "attending college." In the lower house of state legislatures 31 per cent of the members are college graduates and 11 per cent more attended. Taking both houses together, 34 per cent of all state legislators are college graduates and 11 per cent more attended college.

Further statistics show that of the 7500 legislators in all the 48 states, 24 per cent are farmers and the same number are lawyers. Other professions add 5 per cent and the rest are classified as "business men, retired, and miscellaneous."

It is true that some of our most able men never attended college, but the real American citizen of today knows that a college graduate is better qualified for legislative duty than is the average non-college man.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
BY WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—The Republican party leadership has made its first moves for the 1936 campaign.

G. O. P. Ready for Fight

The executive committee of the Republican national committee has held a meeting here, a session that started and ended with enthusiasm bubbling over. The reason the members gave for all of their joy was, as expressed by Chairman Henry P. Fletcher, that "the tide has definitely turned and we are going out to defeat President Roosevelt for re-election."

Whether all of this joy is justified, no one can tell, but certainly the Republican wheelers for the first time in almost five years have shown signs of genuine fight. They are convinced that Mr. Roosevelt and his New Deal are in a tail-spin and they are committed now to help the present administration to continue until it crashes—help it by calling attention to every shortcoming and every mistake it has made.

While, as I said, the executive committee meeting simply bubbled over with enthusiasm, unbiased observers could not help reaching the conclusion after they watched the situation that the committee did very little of a constructive nature. It may be that this group was not intended to map out many plans, but if it did not have that purpose, one is inclined to rise and inquire: Why hold a meeting?

The one outstanding action taken was the authorization given Chairman Fletcher to establish a young Republican club division in the national committee headquarters here. The rest of the session that lasted all day apparently was given over to the exchange of ideas. All politicians and observers as well recognize the necessity for the exchange of ideas but the question is being asked around Washington what they are going to do with these ideas.

Rank and file Republicans may take heart in the circumstances that brought their party leadership to headquarters four months earlier than they ordinarily meet.

It is a good sign, from the Republican standpoint. It ought to mean that they are all set to do business and to keep doing business until they have elected a candidate to the Presidency in November, 1936. But still, none of the Washington writers was able to determine exactly what is going to be done. The Washington writers can hardly be blamed, if inside information that leaks out is correct, because the executive committee really did not get very far with any plans.

I said above that the wheelers appeared to be full of fight. There was every evidence of this. There was also evidence of possibilities, at least, that there may be family fights. There is no doubt that many members of the national committee do not like Chairman Fletcher. Likewise, Chairman Fletcher is not enthusiastic about certain members of the committee over which he presides. It is made to appear, therefore, that there may be some mud slinging before the machine is attuned for the campaign next year. If there is much of it, the Republican party may as well save the money it is preparing to spend, as money always is spent in a campaign, to defeat Mr. Roosevelt. It won't have a chance if it is going to fight without a united front against such opposition as the President and his party set-up is prepared to give.

It may have been by coincidence or it may have been by design but whatever the reason, the action of Robert H. Lucas, former executive head of the Republican national committee, in filing a libel suit against one of the party members is not going to help either Mr. Lucas or Charles D. Hilles, national committeeman from New York. Mr. Lucas has sued Mr. Hilles and Frank R. Kent, Baltimore newspaper columnist and political commentator, for $200,000 libel. He charged in a suit filed on the same day that the executive committee met here that Mr. Hilles and Mr. Kent were "conspiring" to destroy him politically. It is unlikely that Mr. Lucas can sustain his charges in court but whether he can or cannot sustain them, the court action against a prominent member of his own party, a man with whom he was associated in party leadership, naturally will have a disrupting influence. It will go far beyond the two personalities involved because obviously the names of other party leaders will be dragged in.

Mr. Kent said after learning of the libel action that Mr. Lucas was acting "silly" and he was not alarmed at all. The comment here among observers who know both Mr. Lucas and Mr. Kent seem to think that the action was brought by Mr. Lucas in order to upset Mr. Hilles. Mr. Lucas has disliked Mr. Hilles for years and so, in the opinion of many astute political writers, Mr. Lucas is seeking to wreck any political aspirations Mr. Hilles has by joining him as a defendant in a suit against Mr. Kent.

Mr. Lucas, it will be remembered, is the individual who got mixed up in a rather sou'wester in the effort to beat Senator George W. Norris in Nebraska. Senator Norris has bolted the Republican party and supported Democratic nominees through the last eight years, meanwhile continuing to claim Republican affiliations when he sought election to the senate. While it was never proved how much Mr. Lucas had to do with it, the belief has always prevailed that it was Mr. Lucas who conceived the idea of persuading George W. Norris, an obscure grocery store proprietor in Nebraska, to file for the United States senate against Senator George W. Norris who was then seeking re-election. Punishment was meted out to the Groceryman Norris who, it appeared after the thing was over, was more or less of an innocent bystander who was willing to lend the use of his name.

Thus, when a few weeks ago, Mr. Lucas personally sent a questionnaire to the hundreds of Republican state and county chairmen, seeking their views as to a Presidential nominee for the party, those who remembered his services with the Republican national committee immediately wondered what his object was. I have tried to ascertain what the purpose might be and have thus far had no success other than the statement which Mr. Lucas made to me.

He told me at the time of his poll that he wanted to discover exactly what the sentiment was of those party chairmen far removed from the hot bed of party control. It was his conviction, he said, that the method he was employing would bring to the attention of those in control of the Republican party facts that should awaken them and keep them from allowing the party machine to be subordinated to the wishes of a few. He declined to name those few.

Now, however, he is in the limelight in a new fashion. If he has been damaged, as he claims, by the conspiring of Mr. Hilles and others, then he ought to collect and those who conspired ought to be exposed. Nevertheless, unbiased observers remain without a conviction that Mr. Lucas has been the victim of such a conspiracy.

Let us turn from a discussion of political rows and personal enmities to learn something about one of the most calm and competent women who has ever served in a public capacity.

About Miss O'Reilly

I refer to Miss Mary M. O'Reilly. It is probable that few of those who read my observation on Washington affairs ever have heard of Miss O'Reilly, nor is it strange that they have not heard of her for I do not believe there is any individual more retiring and less desirous of publicity than she is.

For 32 years, Miss O'Reilly has graced an office in the treasury. Starting as a minor clerk she continued as a servant of the public in the office of the director of the mint. She did a job at once so faithful and so efficient that promotions continued to come until eight or ten years ago she was made assistant director of the United States mints. Administrations came and went through all of those years and Miss O'Reilly continued to do her job, to do it so faithfully that no one ever thought of what her political affiliations may have been.

A few days ago, there came from the White House an executive order which said that the treasury might continue to keep Miss O'Reilly on the pay roll for a year after November 1—she will be seventy years old on that date and under the law would be forced to retire. Secretary Morgenthau, however, recognized the unique capacity and quality which Miss O'Reilly possesses and has extended her term of service.

I was telling a Washington visitor the other day the system employed in the national Capital for the identification of streets, explaining that the north and south streets bore numbers and the east and west streets were named after letters in the alphabet or with names beginning with those letters in the order of their appearance in the alphabet. In the course of my explanation my friend discovered that there was no street given the letter "J" and it resulted in a little research work to determine why this had happened.

From records of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of Washington and from the office of the register of deeds, I found definitely that the letter never had been used alone although out beyond "the first alphabet" where names are used for streets and the names begin with the alphabet in regular order, there are streets whose names begin with "J." But there was no "J" street and never had been.

Further inquiry developed what I believe to be the basic reason, namely, similarity of the letter "I" and "J" when written.

FOR YOUR CONSIDERATION

The report comes to our office that Ed. Anderson of the Hebron-Limaburg road picked a handful of nice blackberries on Owen Edwards farm on October 2nd of this year. On first thought we came to the conclusion that possibly Mr. Anderson had discovered a new variety of berry, but later reports indicate that they were the real blackberry. We are now expecting a letter or a caller to say that he still has green blackberries on his farm.

OVER 30,000 KENTUCKY PEOPLE

OVER 30,000 Kentuckians owe their sole employment to the distilling industry in Kentucky.

Over one hundred million dollars are invested in this same industry—enough to make a path of dollar bills over 10,000 miles long.

Unless you vote "Yes" to Repeal the State Prohibition Amendment on November 5, most if not all these 30,000 people will be deprived of employment, and a $100,000,000 industry will be driven out of Kentucky.

Why It Is Necessary to Vote on November 5

Prior to 1933, Kentucky was dry under both the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and a State Constitutional Prohibition Amendment.

In 1933, national repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment legalized the distilling industry only so far as the Federal Government was concerned.

National Repeal still left Kentucky with State prohibition laws which, under our State Constitution, could not be repealed until the November election of 1935.

Pending that date, the Legislature in 1934 passed an act known as the Liquor Control Act, which now permits (as an emergency measure) the sale of alcoholic beverages.

The Liquor Control Act, which is merely an emergency measure enacted pending the repeal vote, must not be confused with the State Constitution's Prohibition Amendment.

The Prohibition Amendment is a permanent part of our State Constitution unless the people of Kentucky vote to repeal it on November 5.

A vote for Repeal in November is NOT a vote to repeal the Liquor Control Act now in effect. It is simply a vote to put an end to Constitutional Prohibition in Kentucky, and to replace it with a system by which each county, city, town or precinct may determine for itself whether or not alcoholic beverages may be sold therein.

If you wish to help over 30,000 Kentuckians to keep their sole means of employment—if you wish to help keep thousands of honest workers off the relief rolls—

VOTE YES ON NOV. 5

The Junior Girl Reserve Club entertained the Senior Club on Oct. 4 with a tea. The club room was decorated with the club colors. Songs, led by the Seniors, were sung and then the tea was served, after which an enjoyable social hour was spent.

The Senior Class has elected its officers, although the class colors and motto have not as yet been decided upon. The officers are: President—J. Peeno; V-Pres.—Kenneth Wolley; Secty.—Kathryn—William Dolwick.

Ambitious boys? That's the Hi-Y

Boys personified. And here's what makes us think so—on Oct. first, about thirty-five of the boys went to Mr. Harold Crigler's and cut corn for him. He was behind in his work because of illness of his son, Harold, Jr., who is a member of the Hi-Y Club. Now aren't those boys ambitious?

Junior has been very ill and is in the hospital at Covington. We now hear that his condition is somewhat improved and the doctors hold out high hopes of his recovering. We all wish him a speedy recovery as that bright face and cheery remarks are missed this year around the school.

The Freshmen boys are in a very bad state of suspense at the present for they have been informed that the formal initiation into the Hi-Y Club will take place on Wednesday, Oct. 23. The upper classmen are doing their best to console them but they expect the worst. Poor Freshmen!

The Sophomore Class are following their elders, the Seniors, and have organized their class. Their present officers are: President—Jack Turner; V-Pres.—Avalon Hood; Secty. and Treas.—Kathryn Dolwick; Song Leader—Esther Kottmyer and Edwin Walton.

The P. T. A. will have a meeting on Thursday, Oct. 10, with the various rooms of the school assisting with the program, which will consist of a Cross-Section of a School, vocal numbers by the Glee Club, and a Candle Service by the Girl Reserves. This is a very important meeting and everyone is invited to attend.

Roofs look alike, but they don't wear alike. The best way to judge roofing value is by the record of the merchant who sells it and the name of the manufacturer who makes it.

How Calotabs Help Nature To Throw Off a Bad Cold

Millions have found in Calotabs a most valuable aid in the treatment of colds. They take one or two tablets the first night and repeat the third or fifth night if needed.

How do Calotabs help Nature throw off a cold? First, Calotabs is one of the most thorough and dependable of all intestinal eliminants, thus cleansing the intestinal tract of the germ-laden mucus and toxins.

Second, Calotabs are diuretic to the kidneys, promoting the elimination of cold poisons from the system. Thus Calotabs serve the double purpose of a purgative and diuretic, both of which are needed in the treatment of colds.

Calotabs are quite economical: only twenty-five cents for the family package, ten cents for the trial package. (Adv.)

Surveys indicate that turkeys weighing 11 to 14 pounds are preferred by consumers, especially in cities. Second choice is for birds of 8 to 10 pounds, and third choice for heavy ones, or those weighing 15 to 20 pounds. Prospects are for good prices.

Tests by the U. S. department of agriculture failed to produce cottonseed meal poisoning in dairy cows, even where 10 pounds of the meal was fed for 10 months. Cottonseed meal is one of the cheapest sources of protein in many parts of the country.

Common bluestone will control moss in ponds, when used at the rate of 8 pounds to a million gallons of water. Write to the Experiment Station, Lexington, for directions for estimating the amount of water in a pond and for using bluestone.

It is usually better to level off and tramp ensilage as it is put into the silo, although the moisture of the corn may make this unnecessary. Dry corn should be disintegrated, tramped and probably washed.

Good potatoes may be made into culls through careless digging. It always pays to use care in digging. Allow them to lie a while before picking them up, and then protect them from injury as they are placed in baskets or sacks for removal to storage.

The new wheat contract is open to all wheat producers who can establish a base, whether they signed the first contract or not. The first 1936 adjustment payment will be payable next summer, after compliance with the contract for that crop year has been checked.

Lesson for October 13

THE STORY OF JEREMIAH

LESSON TEXT—Jeremiah 1:6-10;
26:8-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt go to all that I send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. Jeremiah 1:7.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of Jeremiah.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of Jeremiah.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Taking a Stand for God.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Attacking Entrenched Evil.

1. Jeremiah's Call (1:1-10).

It was pre-ordained (vv. 4, 5). Before Jeremiah was born God ordained him a prophet to the nations.

His diffidence (v. 6). This seems to have grown out of his youth and inexperience.

His hesitancy overcome (vv. 7, 8). God graciously appeared to him and made clear that he should go where sent, speak as commanded, and to be not afraid of the faces of his enemies. This was accompanied by the assurance of the divine presence. It matters little as to the strength of the foe if the presence of God is with the messenger.

The divine message given (v. 9). The very words were put into the prophet's mouth, not merely the thoughts but the proper words to express the thoughts.

The nature of his ministry (v. 10). It was to be wider than that of prophesying. Six words were given as descriptive thereof. The first four are destructive in their implication; "root out," "pull down," "destroy," and "throw down." The last two are constructive; "build" and "plant." The destructive precedes the constructive.

Jeremiah's Grief (9:1).

The unbelief of the people made him feel that his efforts were fruitless. Seeing so clearly the awful doom which awaited this people, he wept sorely. The true prophet of God takes to heart the seriousness of his ministry and sorely grieves over the wicked unbelief of the people.

Jeremiah's Prophecy in the Temple Court (26:1-24).

Jeremiah's solemn warning to Judah (vv. 1-7). The Lord commanded him to stand in a conspicuous place in the Temple and proclaim the judgment which was about to fall upon them. The object was to provoke them to repentance. If they did not repent, God would make the Temple as Shiloh. Shiloh was once the dwelling place of God; now it had fallen into decay. So will it be with the Temple. Jeremiah was sent to speak the words which his Lord had told him and not to diminish a word.

Jeremiah on trial (vv. 9-11).

Cause of arrest. He was arrested for speaking all that the Lord had commanded.

The charge (vv. 8, 9). They charged him with a capital crime, which involved pretending to speak for God and speaking against the Temple and the city. This would make him to be guilty of blasphemy and sacrilege, both of which were to be punished by death (Deut. 18:20; Lev. 24:16).

The princes sit in judgment (vv. 10, 11). We thus see that matters of state were not entirely in the hands of priests, but in part were controlled by members of the royal family.

Jeremiah's defense (vv. 12-15). Threats of death did not deter him from preaching, but only inspired him to repeat his message with clearness and tenderness.

Reiterated the divine commission.

He urged them to amend their ways and to obey God and thus avert the divine judgment (v. 13).

He gave himself up (v. 14). He did not resist the powers of government. Knowing that God had sent him, he was content to trust God for deliverance.

Warnings of fatal consequences. He frankly told them that God had sent him and if they killed him they would be guilty of defying God.

Jeremiah saved (vv. 16-24).

The princes pronounce him not guilty (v. 16). They were convinced that Jeremiah was speaking the truth.

The elders plead for Jeremiah (vv. 17-23). They cited two cases; Micah (vv. 18, 19) and Urijah (vv. 20-23). They argued that killing God's prophets did not turn aside his judgment but intensified it. The only way to avert the judgment is to turn from their sins.

Jeremiah rescued by Ahikam (v. 24). He was a man of such influence that he was able to interfere at such a critical time.

Daily Living

He is wise who can instruct us and assist us in the business of daily virtuous living; he who trains us to see old truth under academic formulas may be wise or not as it chances; but we love to see wisdom in unpretending form, to recognize her royal features under week-day vestiture.

Blessings

Reflect upon your present blessings, of which every man has many; not on your past misfortunes, of which all men have some.

THERE was an inscription on the back of the gold watch.

Presented to Henry Smithers in recognition of 35 years of loyal service.

Jones, Ward and Co.
"It's beautiful, Henry!" Mrs. Smithers said.

Mr. Smithers was slumped in an armchair, hands dug deep in trouser pockets. "Well, he said, 'I suppose it's a pretty swell way of telling a man that he's no good any more.'"

Tears floated in Mrs. Smithers' kind brown eyes. She forced them back, put one arm around her husband's shoulder and stroked his gray head.

"Don't take it like that, Henry. You ought to be very thankful. They've given you a generous pension. Now you can enjoy a rest."

Mrs. Smithers did her best to smile, but in her heart she was afraid. Men retired against their will from jobs held almost a lifetime, forced into inactivity, went to pieces quickly.

Next morning, in spite of protests from his wife, Mr. Smithers rose as usual at seven. He shaved, dressed and was the first down at breakfast.

He was moodily munching a piece of dry toast when the click-clack of feminine heels sounded on the stairs. Doris took her place at the table.

"Good morning, daddy!" Unfolding a napkin, she turned her plangent little face with its bubbling blue eyes in the direction of her mother. "Gee, daddy's lucky, isn't he?" she said. "No more rushing off with me to catch the 8:15 in the mornings. All day to read his papers and do as he likes."

George, tall and glowing from his morning shower, slipped into his seat in time to echo the sentiment.

"Yes, dad," he said. "Wish I had a little of the spare time you're going to have. I haven't even had time to try out my new fishing rod."

Mrs. Smithers kept her eyes on the coffee she was pouring. She knew what was passing in Henry's mind. Without his job, he was like a fish out of water.

All morning Mrs. Smithers' patience was sorely tried. Henry just moped around. He wandered aimlessly in and out of the kitchen like a man hopelessly lost. Once when she scolded him he made no answer. Just looked at her with a hurt expression in his dull eyes.

After lunch Mrs. Smithers decided that something must be done. She was afraid of what might happen if this went on. Resolutely, she dried her hands and went to find him. Henry was nowhere in the house. The old brown hat he sometimes wore was missing from its accustomed place in the hall. He must have gone off somewhere for a stroll. Mrs. Smithers went to the telephone and put a call through to the office of Jones, Ward and Co.

Mr. Ward, the president, listened with astonishment. Then he said, "But, my dear Mrs. Smithers, we can't take your husband back! He's earned his retirement. If you think the pension's not adequate, perhaps we could..."

Mrs. Smithers had to begin all over again.

"It isn't a question of money. Don't you understand? Henry's whole life was in his job. Now you've taken it away! I'm afraid! So afraid! Can't you find a place for him somewhere, anywhere? Oh, please, please!"

Gradually the president came around. Yes, he began to see. If she'd tell Mr. Smithers to come down in the morning they'd talk things over. Mrs. Smithers hung up the receiver with trembling fingers. She'd done it! There would be no need to tell Henry that she had called the office. Just say they'd phoned and wanted him back.

When George came home from work she was almost frantic. They drove down to the village to make inquiries. The butcher put them on the track. His little boy had seen Mr. Smithers heading down towards the river where high banks overlooked the most dangerous part. Mrs. Smithers, white-faced, exchanged glances with her son. George drove grimly, sending the car bouncing and bucking along the deep-rutted lane. The last fifty yards had to be covered on foot, through trees. As they came out close to the river bank, Mrs. Smithers uttered a little weak cry of distress. Halfway up the slope lay a crumpled brown object. It was Henry's battered old hat!

George gripped his mother's arm and steadied her. They climbed to the top and looked down. Immediately below them, at the water's edge, sat Mr. Smithers on a large rock—fishing! Mrs. Smithers' eyes closed and a little prayer of thankfulness went up. Then she looked down again and cried out:

"Goodness gracious, Henry! Don't you know it's getting dark?" The scolding tone in her voice was to hide her relief. "Come on up. We've got good news. They phoned from the office. They want you to go back!"

Mrs. Smithers raised the fishing rod, swung the baited hook to another part of the stream and let it fall in again with a little plop.

He looked up at the bank. "Me—go back to that stuffy old office?" he exclaimed. "Not on your life! Look—" He laid the rod aside and held up an insignificant little fish about 4 inches long. "I just landed it," he said with eyes that shone proudly. "Tomorrow I'm going after the big ones. This new rod of yours is a dandy, George. Say—I'm just starting to live!"

BENNIE set his lips in a very firm line and resolutely kept his eyes upon the ledger. Through the open window came the syncopated tinkle of a piano and the rhythmic click of dancing shoes. Merely by raising his head Bennie could have looked across the narrow court directly into the room whence came those sounds. He could have seen the keyboard, with Morrie Neal's nimble fingers skipping over it, and beyond, a flash of bare legs as Beth tapped upon the platform.

Now it must not be assumed that this self-denial was a matter of conscientious regard for duty with him. To be frank, Bennie rather heartily despised his job and on most occasions was quite ready to neglect it for diversion. Ordinarily, to nothing could have been so pleasantly diverting as to watch Beth dance, even from this distance and with the foreshortened view. But today there existed most unusual, not to say unhappy, circumstances: Beth and Bennie were "on the outs."

It had all happened out of a clear sky. For almost a year they had gone together with never a quarrel. And in the past few months plans for marriage had become a frequent topic between them. As soon as Bennie completed his study of wireless, there would be a government position waiting. Perhaps he would be sent to some romantic spot and Beth would go with him as his wife. Lately they had been figuring the time in months, for with Beth's help Bennie was rapidly acquiring an expert knowledge of his subject. But now—well, that was just a shattered dream—their romance irreparably ruined.

Bennie found a sort of bitter satisfaction in dwelling on its finality. They were, he told himself with savage conviction, as far apart as if they had never met. Beth could go her own sweet way, and if it led her right into the arms of that—that rat, Morrie Neal—why, all right. He, Bennie, didn't care a snap. She had had her chance last night to choose, and she had said:

"Bennie Jackson, you're the meanest, most suspicious fellow I ever knew! Of course I'm going to keep on taking the lessons Mr. Neal's giving me. What's wrong with that?"

So Bennie had picked up his cap and stalked out of her apartment, very coldly. He wasn't the kind to let a girl see that she had hurt him. Maybe Beth had forgotten about the treasurer's office, right next door to the dance director's, and that Bennie went there several times each day to return accounts to the safe.

Well, if that was what she wanted, she certainly could have it without any more interference from him. He was going to finish his wireless studies in a hurry and then get as far away as possible from Zenith studio and Hollywood and Beth Millard. He reached in the desk drawer for the little manual he always kept there, determined to spend a few minutes reviewing code.

As he took it out, his eyes strayed in one fleeting glance to the window opposite. Immediately they riveted there; he sat upright, tense and startled. The shade was being pulled down over the lower half of the window. He just had time for a glimpse of a man's hand on the cord; then it was completely drawn and Bennie was staring at a blank buff square.

The music and the clacking tap of feet had ceased. Involuntarily, Bennie's teeth came hard together and he felt a rush of hot blood mounting to his cheeks. He stood up and started to turn away.

At that moment the sound of the piano was resumed. Bennie halted in his tracks, puzzled. Yes, there could be no doubt about it; now he even heard Beth's shoes again. He faced around, irresolute and wondering.

Suddenly he stiffened, listening with renewed intensity. . . . The next instant he had sprung to the phone and was frantically pounding the switch.

"Give me the studio police—quick!" Two minutes later four men with drawn revolvers preceded Bennie on the rush into Morrie Neal's office. Neal sat at the piano, his face taut and strained. Beth was still tapping feverishly.

The door at the far side stood open. The studio policemen rushed across through it. There came a yell, a string of oaths, a sound of heavy scuffling—and the thing was all over. The four uniformed men emerged, securely grappling two others whose looks revealed their profession.

Beth ran into Bennie's arms and flung there, crying:

"Oh, darling, you're wonderful! I was so afraid!"

The treasurer of Zenith studio came out of his office, mopping his brow with a silk handkerchief, and gripped Bennie's hand warmly.

"You're a real hero, my boy!" he exclaimed; "but I don't understand—I don't see how you knew! Why, those thugs made Morris and Miss Millard here go on with their practicing and told the rest of us they'd shoot the first one who let out a peep!"

Bennie grinned down into Beth's upturned adoring face.

"Here's where the credit goes," he replied; "if she hadn't remembered how to tap out a message in Morse code, I'd have been half a mile from here by now, thinking she didn't love me!"

Too Much Showmanship

By E. C. SCHURMACHER
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

YOU ask me, senior, why American performers are barred from acting in my restaurant. The reason may be traced directly to Senior James Capehart who came here as a funny man in an American revue, imbibed so freely that he missed the boat train to La Guayra, and through what he was pleased to call his showmanship, caused many complications.

The trouble started when Pablo, my waiter, informed me that Senior Capehart's bill amounted to fourteen pesos, not counting the glassware which in a spirit of frivolity he had hurled across the street at the window of my competitor, Pedro Favita, owner of the Cafe de Cordero Rojo.

I approached the intoxicated senior, and suggested that as he seemed unable to pay, a bit of dishwashing was in order.

"Forget the dishwashing," said Senior Capehart with a shudder. "If celebrities can bring you business, you're practically a success right now. Just leave it to my showmanship!"

He had once been an impersonator, he said, and could represent your notable Americans so ably that anyone would be deceived.

"And what has that to do with me?" I demanded.

"It's easy," he said. "Favita stole a march on you with General Tarano, didn't he? Now suppose you go him one better. The crowd always follows celebrities. Use a little showmanship! Who is the most popular man in Caracas today?"

"It is the renowned matador, Garcia del Hoya, whose likeness decorates that poster over the bar."

Senior Capehart arose and surveyed the poster carefully. "A pipe!" he claimed. "A dead cinch! Tonight I shall give the performance of my career for you, impersonating Garcia del Hoya!"

At his insistence I dispatched Pablo to his hotel to get what he called his make-up kit. Then swearing Pablo to silence, I sent him to bring back a matador's suit from the store which supplies all the costumes for the fiestas.

That night, with great trepidation, I awaited Senior Capehart. He did not appear until ten o'clock when we had the most customers. When he did enter, so perfect was his impersonation that I would have sworn he was the great matador, Garcia del Hoya, himself.

The customers cheered enthusiastically as he stepped up to the bar.

"That's nothing," he said. "Tomorrow night I will give you an even greater impersonation. Tomorrow afternoon I go to the office of the chief of police to study him."

"But," I objected, "His Excellency, Rafael Numero, chief of police, seldom goes out in public. Don't you think it dangerous?"

"I shall play my part with the discretion befitting a great artist," he said.

Senior Capehart had done his work well. On the following night the talk about the renowned matador had so spread around Caracas that our bar was crowded. Business was better than it had ever been.

Just as I observed this, Pedro Favita, my competitor, descended upon me. "De Valavera!" he hissed. "I know the full extent of your perfidy. The clerk at the costumer's confessed that he rented you that matador's suit."

I tried to quiet him. "I also know," he continued, "that Senior Capehart rented a uniform there, of a chief of police, in which he will masquerade tonight. I will denounce him the minute he comes in. I will let all Caracas, know how the honorable Senior de Valavera sponsors importers and cheats!"

Almost as Favita finished speaking, there appeared in the doorway a figure in the dress uniform of the chief of police, with his mustachios waxed in a most military manner.

Favita spied him instantly. "Name of a pig!" he cried. "Impostor! Come here that I may unmask you!"

There was immediate silence among the patrons. The uniformed figure seemed to hesitate momentarily, then slowly approached our table. Favita's hands shot up and grabbed the waxed mustachios, giving them a ferocious tug.

There was a startled cry from the owner and a look of amazement on the face of Favita—for the mustachios did not come off. Their owner was the real chief of police, as the squad of policemen who dashed into the cafe and marched the frantic Favita off to jail very volubly assured him.

It was full a half hour later that Senior Capehart appeared. He was in ordinary street clothes for which I was profoundly thankful.

"I don't know why you are late," I said, "but I am grateful indeed that you did not carry through your impersonation."

"But I did!" he exclaimed in amazement. "About two hours ago I gave the greatest impersonation of my career in excellence of make-up, for I was before the most critical audience I have ever faced!"

"And that was . . . ?" I asked sarcastically.

"The chief of police and Pedro Favita!" said Senior Capehart. "I called on each of them and told them that someone would try to impersonate the chief of police here tonight. And in doing so, I was disguised as the clerk of the costumer where you hired that matador's uniform!"

OVER 100,000 TO BE ADDED TO CCC ROLLS IN OCTOBER

A new Civilian Conservation Corps enrollment program, effective October 1, 1935, is now in progress to replace men who dropped out prior to that date, and to increase the strength of the corps above the total of 519,000, the figure reached August 31, of this year, as announced by Mr. Robert Fechner, director of Emergency Conservation Work.

It is expected that over 100,000 young men and veterans will be enrolled by the War Department in the CCC during October.

The reduction in the age limit for CCC enrollees makes it possible for physically fit youths of 17 to participate in the Emergency Conservation Work, provided they come from families now on public relief rolls.

Dr. Fechner said that at least 40,000 American youths of 17 are now eligible for enrollment.

A survey shows that 213,377 juniors were selected for enrollment during the June, July and August expansion. Seventy-five per cent of the number were twenty-one years old or under. The War Department Records show that a total of 43,097 enrollees of the Conservation Corps left the forest camps to accept outside employment during the three months ending August 31, 1935.

INTERESTING CALLER

Dr. J. M. Adams, a prominent Ft. Mitchell dentist, stopped in at The Recorder Office last Friday to exchange a few words with the new editors. Dr. Adams is well known in this county as most of his early days were spent in Burlington. He stated that his father, the late William Adams, was one of the first subscribers of The Recorder when it was originally founded.

DECISION FORCED ON THE A. A. PROGRAM WILL BE HIGHLY IMPORTANT

One of the important questions coming before the United States Supreme Court in the near future is the case of the Hootic Mills Co., of Massachusetts against the government, involving the constitutionality of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Argument in this case will probably be heard on October 14 or 21. The government is seeking to collect $43,000 in processing taxes from the corporation named, plus penalties and interest on the amount due.

The United States circuit court of appeals for Massachusetts handed down an opinion in this case last spring, declaring the Agricultural Adjustment Act unconstitutional, on the ground that it delegated the legislative power to tax to the executive branch of the government. It was further held by the court that the act was unconstitutional because, under the guise of a tax, the government purports to control the production of agricultural commodities in violation of the Tenth Amendment.

The Tenth Amendment provides that all powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution are reserved to the states or the people thereof.

Another case, involving the constitutionality of the Bankhead Cotton Control Act, will come before the Supreme Court early in December. This is the case of Lee Moore against the Texas and New Orleans Railroad Company. The road in question refused to carry Moore's cotton, on the ground that the processing tax had not been paid and that it would be illegal under the law for the railroad to transport the cotton.

The attitude of the Court with reference to these two cases will be awaited with no less interest than that which attended its decision in the N. R. A. case last May.

The Supreme Court is now housed in its magnificent new building, which, with its furnishings, cost nearly $10,000,000.

$50.00 REWARD

A reward of $50 is offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of any person or persons who unlawfully enter any school house or other buildings belonging to the Board of Education. (This will also apply to the recent New Haven robbery).

BOONE COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Wm. Phillips and Bailey Greenup, who are employed at The Central State Hospital at Lakeland, Ky., were week-end visitors of their families here.

DISCUSS CHINA

Mr. William C. Walton, former U. S. Marine Corp Officer will discuss agricultural and living conditions in China with Boone County Utopia Club No. 2 members at their next meeting, Wednesday night, October 23, at Burlington at 7:15 P. M. Mr. Walton spent several years in China and is familiar with conditions from first hand experience.

This meeting will be the first of a series of winter discussions to be held by the Utopia Club.

RECREATIONAL CENTER

Plans are under way for the development in Boone county of a rural recreational center through a WPA project. Requests for such a project have been made according to H. R. Forkner, equipment for a number of such camp sites will be available in Kentucky and it is hoped that Boone county will be fortunate enough to secure one.

A recreational center would serve as a meeting place for the holding of 4-H Club Camps, school and other public recreational events and if properly conducted should be a valuable asset to the county.

TOBACCO CROP

PROSPECTS GOOD

Boone county growers report one of the best tobacco crops in recent years. The crop is curing out good in the barns and many growers are ready to start stripping as soon as weather conditions permit.

The crop this year turned off a large number of sticks per acre, but is of an exceptional light quality. Many leading growers are of the opinion that the crop should be carefully bulked down the first time the tobacco comes in good case and stripped out at an early date. The crop is of very thin quality and will not stand coming in and going out of case too often. Each time the crop comes in case and goes out the color gets darker.

Boone county farmers this year grew approximately 2,170 acres which is estimated to yield around approximately 1,768,350 pounds.

POTATO CONTROL

FIREWORKS PLENTY ALREADY AND MORE CERTAIN TO FOLLOW

There were some real fireworks in connection with the hearing held in Washington, October 3, with reference to the enforcement of the Warren potato control bill. On the day previous to the hearing, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, in an interview given to the press, made it clear that he was eager to tackle the job of enforcing this piece of legislation. Without going into details as to his reasons, his comment was that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration had "always tried to use common sense."

During the course of a dramatic address at the hearing, Congressman Warren of North Carolina, author of the potato control law, demanded to know whether the Department of Agriculture intended to "nullify" this act of Congress.

Senator Bailey who also hails from North Carolina, was on hand and supported the stand taken by Mr. Warren. Various other members of Congress, among them Ralph O. Brewster of Maine, a former governor of that state, were present and clashed with A. A. officials when they insisted that the members of Congress should abide by the rules laid down for the conduct of the hearing.

Congress failed to pass the Third Deficiency Appropriation Bill at the last session, which contained five million dollars for the enforcement of potato control act. Lack of funds is one of the excuses that the Department may plead in the event that the act is not placed in operation.

However, an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act makes potatoes a basic commodity, making it possible to deal with the question of potato control by various other methods than those outlined in the Warren bill.

The government will likely take some steps under the A. A. to assist in the orderly marketing of this year's potato crop, in the effort to improve the price received by the growers.

Six o'clock dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Cotton Friday evening were: Mr. and Mrs. Dewey Benson and family; F. M. Walton wife and daughter; Mr. and Mrs. John Conner; Mr. and Mrs. W. L. McBee and Wilton Stephens.

Boone Ryle, noted Boone county citizen or many years plans to leave his native home in Boone county and go to Hollywood, Fla., where he and his entire family, with the exception of his two oldest sons, Irvin and Reginald, will make their permanent home. Mr. Ryle who has been in ill health for the past several years, has spent a portion of the last few years in Florida, and feels that the climate there is far better for his health.

Mr. Ryle has been a prominent farmer and carpenter in Boone county and expects to follow the same line of work in Florida. Among the many sports that he enjoyed, base ball was outstanding. He has followed this sport for 25 years and has played on some of the best teams in the county.

The Recorder and his many friends regret losing such a valuable citizen, however, we wish him and his family all the success possible in the tropical state.

CORN-HOG VOTE TO BE HELD IN STATE

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 15.—According to information from the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in Washington, a corn-hog referendum vote will be held in Kentucky October 26, it is announced at the university of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

All operators and owners of farms which produced corn or hogs this year may vote whether they signed 1934 or 1935 corn-hog contracts or not. Each eligible person is entitled to only one vote regardless of the number of farms he may own or operate, no matter where located. Ballots of contract signers and non-contract signers will be tabulated separately.

Community committeemen are to determine the eligibility of the voters, and direct the referendum in the community, under the general supervision of the county adjustment committee. The voting place will open at 8 a. m. Persons unable to vote in person may mail their ballots so it will reach the polling place not later than October 26.

In preparation for the referendum, county meetings will be held the week of October 14 and community meetings the following week, in which the corn-hog situation and the adjustment program will be discussed.

SEND CHECKS OR CASH FOR DEMOCRATIC FUND

In order to assist in financing the Democratic State campaign for Lieutenant Gov. A. J. Chandler and his associates on the ticket, all who believe in the policies he has espoused are requested to contribute to his campaign fund. Contributions sent to the State Campaign Fund through The Boone County Recorder will be sent to the State Headquarters in Louisville. Checks should be made payable to Frederick A. Wallis, chairman of Finance Committee, Louisville, Ky.

HAWAII MAY POSSIBLY BE THE 49TH STATE

The members of Congress, in company with Samuel Wilder King, delegate to Congress from Hawaii, recently sailed from San Francisco to visit this possession of the United States with a view to recommending the admission of Hawaii as the 49th state of the Union. Mr. King introduced a bill on the subject at the last session of Congress and it is still pending.

Hawaii, which was annexed to the United States in 1898, is at present under a territorial form of government. Its chief city is Honolulu, which is 2200 miles from San Francisco.

The Hawaiian Islands formerly known as the Sandwich Islands, are looked upon as the crossroads of the Pacific Ocean. They are 20 in number, but only nine are inhabited. According to the census of 1930, the population was 366,000, representing an increase of 48 per cent over the previous decade. Of this number, less than 22,000 are of native Hawaiian stock. Among the other nationalities represented are the following: Japanese, 138,000; Chinese, 21,000; Korean 4,000; Filipinos 3,000 and Portuguese, 27,000.

Whether the American meeting pot would be capable of assimilating these heterogeneous racial groups and mold them into a pattern deserving of statehood, is a question which Congress will be called upon to decide.

SIXTH DISTRICT KY. BRANCH NATIONAL CONGRESS P. T. A.

A call has been issued to all units affiliated with the Sixth District, Ky., Branch of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers to meet on November 1 in Holmes HI School, Covington, Ky., at 10:30 A. M.

State and district dues are now due and payable to Mrs. B. T. Bedford, State treasurer, Reservations for the meeting are to be made with Mrs. George Smith, 1052 Grand Ave., Newport, Ky., not later than October 29th.

Mrs. Herbert Jones, 618 E. Ninth St., Newport, Ky.

IN NUMBER OF HOGS, FIGURES VERY SIGNIFICANT IN VIEW OF PAST YEAR'S HISTORY

The number of hogs on farms throughout the country on Jan. 1, 1935, was approximately 37,000,000, or about two-thirds of the average, as of Jan. 1, 1928-1932. The prospects are that in the event of the extension of government control of the corn-hog situation, care will be exercised not to set the loan rate on corn at too high a figure.

Recognizing that there is need for an increased supply of pork, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration will pursue a policy calculated to encourage farmers to feed their corn to the hogs, rather than hold it. Since the supply of hogs is limited in number, the heavier they come to market during the coming year, the greater will be the supply of pork.

RELIEF

$31,763,982 SPENT IN STATE BETWEEN APRIL 1933 AND JULY, 1935

Congressman Virgil Chapman of the Sixth District of Kentucky made a survey of relief expenditures in Kentucky the past two and a half years this week, after consulting records in the office of Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins in Washington, and Published the figures.

Federal funds totaling $31,763,982 were spent in Kentucky on unemployment relief from April, 1933 to July, 1935, according to the report of M. Chapman.

A Kentucky quota of $17,010,000 for work relief was set meanwhile by the Works Progress Administration. Of this amount $16,605,591 has already been allotted and $4,324,560 in warrants have been signed by Controller General McCall.

Federal funds spent in the 28-month period were $1,849,798 in the First Congressional District; $3,581,034 in the Second District; $1,834,999 in the Third District; $1,985,800 in the Fourth District; $2,095,695 in the Fifth District; $2,777,094 in the Sixth District; $3,396,399 in the Seventh District; (in which Hazard is located); $3,277,411 in the Eighth District and $5,321,811 in the Ninth District. The balance of the money for Kentucky amounting to $5,643,821 was expended on state-wide relief activities.

Approval of an additional allotment of $279,000 for work relief in Kentucky for the month of October was announced this week by Aubrey Williams, Acting Works Progress Administrator.

This action brings Kentucky's total allotment to $1,079,000 for the month of October, since the original allotment for this month was $800,000.

George H. Goodman, State Director of Works Progress Administration reports that projects calling for $3,046,000 have already been approved by the Federal Government and the money made available so that work will start immediately.

EDWARD O. LENHOF

Edward O. Lenhof, aged 27 years, of 415 West 12th St., Covington, Ky., fell to his death from the 29th floor of the Carew Tower Building, early Saturday morning. He was a painter employed by the Emery Estate, owners of the building. The remains were removed to the Taliaferro Funeral Home in Erlanger, Ky., for preparation.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Katherine Lenhof, four children, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Lenhof and three brothers. Funeral was from the Taliaferro Funeral Home Tuesday morning at 8:30 A. M., with regular high mass at St. Henry's church at 9 A. M., by the Rev. Edmund Corby, pastor. Interment being in St. Mary's cemetery.

FARMERS CAN HAVE ELECTRICITY ON VERY EASY TERMS

The Rural Electrification Administration at Washington is ready to loan money at 3 per cent under proper conditions to bring electricity to the farm homes of the country. In most instances it will be found desirable for farmers to join in promoting a non-profit cooperative association, in order to secure electric service in their cities.

When new electric lines are constructed, the government will accept the lines as security for the funds advanced, so that it will not be necessary for farmers to mortgage their property in order to secure service.

LIME PROGRAM BENEFICIAL

Boone county farmers are going to benefit greatly from the Boone County Soil Improvement Association program according to Joe E. Broderick, Assistant County Agent. All farmers who have had stone crushed to date have expressed their intentions of combining the application of two to four tons of limestone per acre with 300 to 400 pounds of super phosphate and following with a good seedling of legumes and grasses.

Such a plan under experimental conditions have given from two to four times the yield of both hay and pastures per acre. These increases have not been held to one year. From one application increases have been secured for 15 years or longer. Both lime and phosphate are usually applied before the grain crop. The grain crop uses the phosphorus for the fertilizer application through increased yield and leaves the residues for the hay and pasture crops.

AN EXPENSIVE LESSON WELL LEARNED

The best of all teachers is experience. It is often expensive—but, if the lesson is thoroughly learned, it is usually worth the price.

Experience has taught the average American much about how not to invest his savings—and, of equal importance, how to invest them.

He has learned that the average individual has little chance of investing safely for himself. The promise of great profits is appealing—but not when subsequent events prove that they are to be earned at the risk of his principal. And he has seen the value of securities he once believed to be gilded, tumble to almost nothing under the impact of depression.

Today many millions of these average citizens are pursuing different and wiser investment courses than they ever thought of a few years back. They are turning their money over to agencies which can be trusted to handle it properly—to invest it safely—and to increase its worth gradually and soundly. Life insurance, trust funds and similar institutions, with their intimate knowledge of conservative finance, have become America's foremost channels of investment.

We are beginning to understand that security must come first—a lesson unfortunately learned at the price of untold dollars.

HITTING THE LITTLE FELLOW

Tax laws designed to punish big business, under the guise of revenue producing measures, may wreck their principal damage on little business and one little fellow—the wage-earner, the small investor, the white-collar worker.

In addition, they may make it impossible for the little business and the little fellow ever to go ahead—to progress, to prosper, to grow.

A recent editorial in the Los Angeles Times said: "This is a 'big' country accustomed to doing things in a 'big' way. To dwarf such a heritage would be in truth to return us to the horse and buggy days. To go forward, to explore, investigate, experiment, to attain the heights by trial and error is expensive but necessary to human progress."

"The small, poorly financed business or individual is often an initial stepping stone to great things. The poor man becomes rich; the small business grows and one day is a 'big business' boasting a worthwhile heritage of accomplishment. There has been incentive all along the line."

"It may be wrong, but success, business success at least, is predicted upon financial independence. To rule that the small and struggling shall never grow big and aggressive is to knock the props out from under our national habit and set us back a century."

It seems that the whole aim of politically-minded persons today is to punish, to discourage and to prevent success, to dwarf achievement, to stifle initiative, to throttle ambition, to poison the springs of enterprise, to raise our taxes on "bigness" to the point where a man or a corporation, once it gets beyond the size of a corner grocery, is just working for one tax collector. We pass regulatory laws giving job holders, not executives and stockholders, the final say as to business practices and operations.

Whether this represents fascism, socialism or any other -ism, it is directly opposed to every American tradition. And it is a threat to the future of every principle for which our forefathers fought.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS

The farmer don't raise tobacco because he thinks that people should smoke, the restaurant owner don't sell soft drinks because he thinks that the people should drink them, and a newspaper man don't advertise products because he thinks that these products are the things that people should buy. However, the public should remember that everyone must have a source from which his bread and butter is to come.

There are a number of counties in the state that don't have enough books in their various schools to make one good library. And to even speak of their laboratories is a disgrace to the schools.

A newspaper can please part of the people part of the time, part of the people all the time and all of the people—part of the time, but WE have our first one yet to see that can please all of the people all of the time.

A. B. Chandler nominee for governor received endorsement and the open pledge of active support in the November election from the Kentucky membership of the United Mine Workers of America.

Ten thousand lives were lost last year—and $260,000,000 worth of property was destroyed by fire. This is somewhat a slam to our Great Nation, when never before has the average citizen enjoyed a better opportunity to obtain improvements to his home which will reduce or eliminate fire hazards.

The greatest economic danger in America today is in the theory that the people look to the government for too much support.

Editorial of the Week

DON'T FORGET THESE PEOPLE

Realize that some of her sons and daughters are doing in this world. There is a tendency for people to forget about others unless they are before you daily. We find it really surprising when we see that there are so many Boone Countians, especially young men and women, out in the world with high positions and booming businesses.

Among some of these are: George Robbins, City Attorney of Richmond, Ky.; Robert Beemon, Professor at Holmes High School of Covington, Ky.; Wm. Finn, who is connected with the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.; Edwin Duncan, officer of the U. S. Navy; George Rogers, lawyer, located in New York City; Richard and Johnst Northcutt prominent doctor and lawyer respectively of Covington, Ky.; Miss Ruth Kelly, connected with the census taking bureau at Washington, D. C.; Jas. Rogers, President of the Kenton County Bar Association, Erlanger, Ky.; John R. DeMoisey, Coach and assistant principal of the Harrodsburg city school at Harrodsburg, Ky., and many more of which we do not know their exact location or position. Among the last mentioned are Robert and Warren Lasing, Robert Nixon, Garnett Huey, Oakley Stephens, and a number of others that we have no record of.

It is these people that put Boone county on the map and they should be given full credit for their accomplishments.

SEEN and HEARD

NATIONAL CAPITAL
By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—American admirals and naval aviators of course are all hoping that Great Britain and Italy will not become involved in a war—but if they do, they will be watching with great interest to see how Mussolini's terrific air force comes out with the superior British navy.

Britain's attempt—regarded as certain if she keeps on her present course—to blockade Italy, and close the Suez canal will surely be followed by attempts by the Italian air force to bomb the British fleet out of the water.

Which is highly interesting to Gen. William Mitchell and naval aviators, on the one hand, and practically all American admirals, on the other. Since shortly after the European war, they have been fighting this question of how important the air force was, and primarily whether a battleship can live against an air attack in force.

Mitchell's part in this attack encounter is chiefly remembered because he refused to recognize any limitations on his public utterances. It will be recalled that he was finally court-martialed and convicted in 1925 after he had denounced the high command as guilty of "treason." Hardly anybody could be found to agree with that word "treason," whether they agreed with Mitchell on the idea that battleships were obsolete or not.

But on the main points of the fight a great many military aviators, both army and navy, agreed absolutely with Mitchell, always recognizing that he purposely made his attacks as sensational as possible so as to attract public attention.

Naval aviators, in particular, however, have been gagged ever since by the mechanics of the navy's promotion system. Every so often a board of senior officers considers the list of officers of various ranks. It picks out those it considers eligible for promotion. All promotions are made from this list. The selection board is changed every time, but if an officer is passed over twice, normally, he might just as well give up. He will not be promoted. His career is ruined.

Why They Are Mum

Now remember that virtually all the admirals believe in battleships, and regard airplanes, for the most part, as mere adjuncts. And remember that a given percentage of younger officers in any grade must be passed over in the selection processes. And it becomes clear why very few young aviation enthusiasts in the navy speak their minds in public. They cannot afford to antagonize the men who will be passing on their eligibility for promotion.

But if worst comes to worst in the Mediterranean, the ability of the air-plane and the submarine to crush the surface ships will be demonstrated beyond any power of argument, or the old battleships, so dear to the admirals, will vindicate their faith in it.

Incidentally if the admirals win, it will be just too bad for Mussolini. Their contention has always been that the airplane was splendid for scouting, and annoying the enemy—much as the cavalry used to be in Civil War days, when Jeb Stuart raided all the way around the federal army, which was highly spectacular and profitable in captured supplies, but did not change the character of the war very much.

After everything else is swept away in the fighting, the admirals contend, the battleships will still be floating, and still able to hurl destruction-dealing broadsides. Their masts will have been torn away by bombs dropped by planes. Their hulls will be leaking in various compartments from torpedoes fired by submarines. But they will still be on the job, and—here is the heart of their argument—nothing else will.

If they are right, Italy will be blockaded—the Suez will be closed—Mussolini will be unable to send supplies to his African legions. If they are wrong, nobody knows what the answer will be. Always assuming that in the early clashes the tremendously superior Italian air force crushes the British air force.

Cotton a Trouble Maker

Cotton is apt to produce tense diplomatic situations again, with fears, that the United States may be forced into a world war, just as it did in the early days of the 1914 conflict. It will be far more important than wheat, for the simple reason that the United States this year has no wheat of consequence to sell. In fact, it will probably buy some from Canada. Copper may be the runner-up to cotton as a trouble maker, this curiously enough effecting a possible combination of the West and South in another political alliance.

This situation is far more serious than the news from Washington or anywhere else has indicated. It is glossed over the word "sanctions" in reports from Geneva, Paris and London. Stripped of diplomatic language, consider just what it will mean if France, as Washington expects, goes along with Britain in applying league sanctions to Italy.

It means nothing else but a virtual blockade of Italy. Not just for goods declared to be contraband of war, but everything. It means that the United States, even in its own ships, could not send a pound of cotton or a piece of machinery or a basket of food to Naples and Genoa. It means that every American ship traversing the Mediterranean would be crossing a war zone, with all the possibilities that act involves.

Which presents a very tough nut for President Roosevelt to crack. Either way he moves means trouble, either foreign or domestic.

Save that he has made it clear he has no intention of seeking to put the United States in the League of Nations, President Roosevelt has stuck rather closely to the Woodrow Wilson policies. Two of these were freedom of the seas and international co-operation for the preservation of peace. On the last, of course, Wilson was willing to go the whole way. He opposed a senate reservation to Article X, saying that article was the "heart of the covenant" of the league.

May Have to Choose

But the point is that Roosevelt will be forced to choose, unless the Italo-Ethiopian situation clears up most unexpectedly, between two of those policies. He may choose freedom of the seas, and insist on America's right to trade with Italy even if the league proclaims a blockade under the guise of sanctions. Or he may choose co-operation to preserve peace.

The first would lead to an extremely dangerous international situation. It might easily involve the United States in war. Even the contention that we had the right to trade with Italy would put this country in a curious and difficult diplomatic hole. For it would be contended by league members that their action would force peace very shortly—that Italy could not possibly continue her aggressive war if blockaded—cut off not only from supplies from abroad but from supplying her forces waging the war. Hence that the action of the United States would be the one thing that made possible the continuance of the war the world is so anxious to avert.

To take the other course would cause vast resentment among those anxious to see the price of cotton boosted, and the surplus of cotton which has been hanging over the market since the Hoover days, sold at a profit.

If it seems unlikely, one has only to remember 1915. Great Britain put cotton on the black list. She knew it was being used to make explosives. But even before this official act she was interfering with shipments. So Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia made a long prepared speech coming very close to demanding war against Britain, on the side of Germany.

It was in reply to this that Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, referring to the Lusitania, commented that "a dead baby floating on the water is a more poignant sight to me than an unsold bale of cotton."

No New Taxes

President Roosevelt has definitely decided that there are to be no new taxes until after election. There are two motives for the recent budget statement attacking critics and saying there is no need for new taxes.

1. Politics. The President has learned of the increasing tax consciousness of the ordinary citizen, and of concern even by farmers as to where the money would be coming from to finance the New Deal. He is also concerned about the worry of business over tax prospects. For example, he has been told that one consideration holding back investment in new enterprises is the "play safe" attitude of rich men who are not willing to gamble when the government promises to take so large a proportion of the profit if they win, but does not help on losses if they lose. Change in the income tax laws, which permit deduction of only $2,000 for net losses in one year, is part of this.

2. Soldier Bonus. The President laid great emphasis on the point that this happy situation of no more taxes, despite gloomy prophecies by critics, can be attained only if there are no new expenditures. He was hitting directly at the soldier bonus, and at courts which will pass on the processing taxes.

He can play both reasons at the same time in January, when the bonus comes up in congress, by using the tax consciousness of the people as an argument to congress not to override his certain veto of bonus legislation.

Present study of the available figures indicates that the President is "holding out" about half a billion dollars, which will be unused on July 1 next, and, as congress provided for the availability of the four-billion-dollar fund for two years, this half billion can be used in the fiscal year beginning on that date.

But nobody thinks this will be enough for that fiscal year. Experts all agree that no upturn of business within reason is going to absorb all the three and a half million men who are to be on work relief projects. Hence there must be another work relief appropriation.

Millions in Grain, Coal and Lumber

LAST year, Kentucky distilleries bought nine million bushels of grain—worth $10,000,000—enough money to give $30.00 to every farmer in the State... Kentucky distilleries used 800,000 Kentucky-made barrels—manufactured from 3,000 solid carloads of white oak lumber, a native Kentucky product... Kentucky distilleries used 200,000 truckloads of coal, which had taken 2000 Kentucky miners one entire month to produce... All this work and income may be lost to you and Kentucky unless you vote "Yes" to repeal the State Prohibition Amendment on November 5.

Why It Is Necessary to Vote on November 5

Prior to 1933, Kentucky was dry under both the Eighteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and a State Constitutional Prohibition Amendment.

In 1933, national repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment legalized the distilling industry only so far as the Federal Government was concerned.

National Repeal still left Kentucky with State prohibition laws which, under our State Constitution, could not be repealed until the November election of 1935.

Pending that date, the Legislature in 1934 passed an act known as the Liquor Control Act, which now permits (as an emergency measure) the sale of alcoholic beverages.

The Liquor Control Act, which is merely an emergency measure enacted pending the repeal vote, must not be confused with the State Constitution's Prohibition Amendment.

The Prohibition Amendment is a permanent part of our State Constitution unless the people of Kentucky vote to repeal it on November 5.

A vote for Repeal in November is NOT a vote to repeal the Liquor Control Act now in effect. It is simply a vote to put an end to Constitutional Prohibition in Kentucky, and to replace it with a system by which each county, city, town or precinct may determine for itself whether or not alcoholic beverages may be sold therein.

If you wish to keep PROSPERITY in Kentucky—if you do NOT wish to go back to the hard times of 1932—

HEBRON SCHOOL NEWS

Some were sighing; some were glad; Some were rejoicing; others were mad.

These are the various moods which were forced upon the pupils of this school when they received their report cards last week. But what are mere grades—after all grades do not prove that one is smart.

The days of calvary have been discarded according to the historians of the age but this cuts no ice with the Hi-Y Boys. At their meeting last week Mr. Walton informed the Club that he had engaged a man from Station W. L. W. for a program and that the two Clubs, namely the Hi-Y and Girl Reserve, would pay a sum of 5 cents at the door to pay his fee of $5. Mr. Walton stated that the man is a make-up artist and that he also does impersonations. The Club voted to share the expenses. After a little discussion on the question, a motion was made that the Hi-Y Club bear the expense and relieve the girls of the burden. The motion was accepted. This will postpone the initiation until a week later, as the program will be held on Oct. 23, but this will only give the committee longer time to think of more mean tricks. It seems that the Fates are against the freshmen boys.

All students who attended the P. T. A. meeting on Oct. 10th feel that the people of the community are backing them in the work which they are trying to do. They appreciate the interest shown and this can also be said in behalf of the faculty of the school. The program was a very interesting one, consisting of: A Reading Class by Mrs. Nancey's Room; An Arithmetic Class by Miss Reiman's Room; An Illustration of Supervised Play; A Formal Initiation of the Junior Girl Reserve; two vocal numbers by the Glee Club. We are sorry that more of you parents and others who are interested in the school were not present to see these examples of typical school-life.

Following is the way which the Sophomores have of making A's:

- 3 cups knowledge
- 1 cup desire
- 4 cups self-confidence
- 3 cups enthusiasm
- 1 cup ambition & perseverance
- 3 hours home-study

Directions: Add a very generous amount of energy and cream together thoroughly the 3 cups of knowledge with 1 cup of desire; add the self-confidence and enthusiasm well beaten together. Gradually add the hours of home study, Dredge aspiration, inspiration, and perspiration in a generous amount energy. Finally, add the ambition and beat to a still determination. Bake about 3 hours in the oven of deep thought. It is delicious if served on report cards with the creamy parental praise. This is a suggestion for the Seniors "so the Sophomores think."

The Senior Girl Reserve Club elected its delegates for the annual Conference which will be held at Crescent Springs this year. These delegates are: Vivian Hood, Evelyn Conrad, and Josephine Grant. We hope that these girls will bring back many new ideas for the benefit of the Club.

This Club has decided to start a Club for the Sixth Grade girls to correspond with the Boys' Hobby Club. This movement will be supervised by Misses Ruth Hodges and Bessie Reeves. Here's to success for this Club.

The Chapel program of last week was given by Mr. Rodamer's room. It was planned around Columbus Day and consisted of a very interesting playlet and some recitations.

This week Rev. F. D. Brown, pastor of the Erlanger Christian church will speak to the students at the regular Chapel hour—Wednesday at 10:25 E. S. T. Visitors are invited to attend these weekly programs.

Dorothy Dunaway,
School Reporter.

Lesson for October 20

THE MESSAGE OF JEREMIAH

LESSON TEXT—Jeremiah 7:1-24.
GOLDEN TEXT—Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people. Jeremiah 1:23.

PRIMARY TOPIC—What Jeremiah Said.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jeremiah's Stirling Message.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Doing What God Commands.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Will of God for Our Times.

The prophet stood in the gate of the temple in order that the multitudes might hear him. The occasion was the coming together of the people from all over the country to attend a feast. From this place of prominence Jeremiah called the people to obedience.

1. What God Requires (vv. 1-7).
1. Amend your ways (v. 3). This means that their course of living should be reformed by exchanging bad deeds for good ones. On the basis of this change God would permit them to remain in their city and country. Failure to comply with this demand would eventuate in their expulsion.

2. Personal experience (v. 4). The people regarded the temple as a charm against evil, irrespective of the condition of their hearts. Without a heart experience, the most sacred institution and ordinances are valueless. Trusting in religious forms while lacking a vital experience is the height of folly.

3. Social justice (v. 5). The proof of their having reformed was the execution of justice between man and his neighbor. The evidence of one's being in touch with God is his fair dealing with his fellow men.

4. Not to oppress the helpless (v. 6). The stranger would likely be ignorant of the laws of the land. The widows and orphans would usually be imposed upon. Protection and defense of the weak is a sure sign of godliness.

5. Not walk after other gods (v. 6). The worship of idols and conformity to heathen customs go hand in hand. True morality is determined by the individual's attitude toward God.

II. Some Solemn Warnings (vv. 8-15).
1. The teachings of false prophets (vv. 8-11). These false prophets taught the people that attention to ceremony and observance of religious form exempted them from strict attention to morals. Those who heeded the words of the lying prophets did not hesitate to steal, murder, commit adultery, swear falsely, and practice idolatry. They would even come into the Lord's house and claim freedom to practice such abominations. The sacred temple itself, filled with such worshippers, would be a den of robbers.

2. By the destruction of Shiloh (vv. 12-15). God caused his tabernacle to be set up in Shiloh, but in Eli's time he gave it into the hands of the Philistines because of the idolatry of the people (Ps. 78:56-60). The prophet declared that God would do even so with the temple, the city and the whole country. This he had already done with Israel and the northern kingdom.

III. The Hopeless Condition of the People (vv. 16-20).
Their propensity to do evil was so strong that all efforts at reclamation were futile.

1. Pray not for them (v. 16). There is such a thing as sinning unto death. In which case prayer is useless (v. 16; cf. 1 John 5:16).

2. Entire families devoted their energies to that which provoked God's anger (vv. 17-19). This was done by young and old men and women. They did it with the definite purpose to provoke God's anger. The prophet assured them that the outcome of such conduct would be their utter confusion.

IV. Judgment Sure to Fall (v. 20).
Because the people poured out their offerings to idols, the furious anger and wrath of God would be poured out upon men, beasts, trees and the fruit of the ground. How this has been fulfilled the history of the Jews makes clear.

V. Obedience to God Better than Sacrifice (vv. 21-26).

The prophet appealed to history to show that God requires heart service rather than the observance of religious forms. Blessings came to Israel through obedience, while cursings followed disobedience. On condition of obedience to his requirements God promised to own them as his people and to bless them.

The Seventh Wave

The man who waits for some seventh wave to toss him on dry land, will find that the seventh wave is a long time coming. You can commit no greater folly than to sit by the roadside until someone comes along and invites you to ride with him to wealth or influence.—J. B. Gough.

Conciliation

The essence of all fine breeding is in the gift of conciliation. A man who possesses every other title to our respect, except that of courtesy, is in danger of forfeiting them all. A rude manner renders its owner always liable to affront. He is never without dignity who avoids wounding the dignity of others.—Lytton.

Duty

He who in questions of right, virtue or duty sets himself above all ridicule is truly great.—Lafayette.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

World Conquerors

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—Conceded that Italy started hostilities against a weaker race for purely selfish motives, which among the nations that might seek to block her would come with clean hands?

It wouldn't be Britain, with her record in the opium war. It couldn't be France, with her record toward colonial possessions, and, later, toward occupied territories. Not Belgium, surely, with her reeking record in the Congo. Not Spain with the Riff to accuse her; nor Germany, which grabbed off one of the fattest cockles of Africa's heart when the grabbing was good; nor Japan, with her teeth set in China's torn flanks. Nor yet America, with long centuries behind her of infamous mistreatment for our own Indians.

Out of all history, you'll find but one world-conqueror who came with clean hands—and those hands the soldiers pierced with iron spikes as they nailed the Nazarene to the cross.

Arkansas Athletes

IF THEY craved to get on the front page, the Italians made a grave mistake by starting a war when there's a World series on—especially one where you find two opposing star pitchers from the same great state. What scandal was it said the chief products of Arkansas were Democrats and champion hog-callers?

And why shouldn't that Warneke boy be able to throw straight and move fast? Where he comes from, when the family's out of meat one of the youngsters runs down a buck rabbit or slips out before breakfast with a pocketful of rocks and comes home with a mess of squirrels. If they'd only let him take off his shoes, he could move around that infield even faster.

Also, it "comes natchell," as they say in his country and mine, to nurse one quid in the right cheek all afternoon. I was sixteen years old before I knew there was any other salad course except chewing tobacco or that oysters didn't grow in a can.

Pestered Presidents

PROBABLY California was no worse than any other section, but I'll bet Mr. Roosevelt uttered a silent cheer when he pulled out on a commodious and uncrowded ocean with the sea lions to listen to, instead of the spouting orators of America.

We elect a man to the highest office—and the toughest job on earth—and then handshake him and flag-wave him and speech-make him to death. He goes forth to see how fares the country and can't see the country for the reception committees. He has a private car to travel in and spends his time on the back platform. He goes back home to do his work and all the visiting firemen in the land come to be photographed with him on the White House lawn. (NOTE—The exhausted gentleman crouched in the middle is him.)

A President of the United States has no more privacy than a—a President of the United States. Fooled you gold-fish fanciers that time, didn't I?

It's as though we hired the exclusive services of Michelangelo and then sent him out to take orders for enlarged crayon portraits.

Kentucky Elections

THEY had a primary election in Kentucky not long ago, and we didn't know the results until fully 24 hours afterward because they've got a law down there against counting the vote for at least one day after the polls close, then allowing time to notify the families of deceased and the coroners.

As a native son, I'll never forget the thrill I had in 1932 when all the rest of the country had reported—a party named Hoover also was running that year—and then the first scattering returns came in from Kentucky: seven dead and eighteen wounded. But I'm afraid the old state is slipping. There were only 750 National Guardsmen on duty for this last election in Harlan county, where the mountain boys still have a boyish way of voting with Winchester rifles. And I can remember when a Republican governor called out the entire military force of the commonwealth to disperse one lone Democrat, Col. Jack Chittin. The colonel wasn't feeling very irritated, either—just a trifle above normal.

Those I. O. U.'s

IF MEMORY rightly serves this humble scribe, it's almost time for our government to go through the laughable routine of sending off the customary batch of those quaint "please remit" notes to remind the European powers that accumulated installments and back interest payments are overdue on that little debt of eleven or twelve billions. The usual procedure will be followed—that is, the rest of 'em will just ignore the whole theory, and somebody in Paris, where the repudiation idea originated, will denounce Uncle Sam for his hideous greed.

"Lafayette, they ain't there."

Difficult to Trace Back Ancestry of the Bulldog

Because of his English origin, the bulldog is frequently called the English bulldog, but the official and correct name for him is simply "bulldog." As with most breeds, it is extremely difficult to trace back the origin of the bulldog. When the Romans invaded England in the early centuries, one of the things they wrote about was that the country was nearly overrun with large, ferocious dogs with perpetually snarling faces. These probably were mastiffs, and could be called the ancestors of the later bulldog, says a writer in the New York Herald Tribune.

The name first appears in print in the early part of the sixteenth century in England. The name clearly indicated just what the bulldog was used for, that is, the ancient sport, so-called, of bull-baiting. However, the cruelty of this sport caused parliament in the seventeenth century to issue an edict prohibiting these spectacles, and from then on the bulldog lost its popularity. In fact, it was the impression at that time that he was good for only one use, that of bull-baiting, and the breeding was practically discontinued when it was prohibited by law. The breed became almost extinct, and yet it can be truly said that the good qualities of the bulldog were not really appreciated until he ceased to be bred for bull-baiting. Then, and only then, he came to be loved for himself alone, for he was then, as he is now, despite his snar expression, an ideal pet, especially for children.

Mound of Earth Memorial to Beloved Polish Hero

The most interesting monument of Cracow, Poland, to Americans is the great mound of earth which the entire Polish nation built to the memory of Kosciuszko, who served as Washington's adjutant during the Revolutionary war, notes a writer in the Chicago Daily News.

Kosciuszko also fought for the independence of Poland and after his death the Polish people revived their ancient way of honoring heroes. From all over the country peasants came bringing earth in their long, flowing sleeves and aprons to deposit on the site here. The mound is 1,000 feet high and is crowned with a large granite block marked "To Kosciuszko."

Kosciuszko's tomb is in a vault of the Cathedral of Cracow, a national sanctuary for Polish kings and heroes. A silver coffin, that of Stanislaus, the patron-saint of Poland, stands in the middle of the church, and near one of the chapels is a crypt containing the ashes of the greatest Polish poet, Adam Mickiewicz.

The cathedral and the other churches of Cracow are particularly worth a visit by the tourist on religious festivals, especially Corpus Christi day. At this time girls dressed in white and blue carry gaily colored images of Mary from church to church, and the entire city turns out for the processions.

Nova Scotia Discovered 3 Times

Nova Scotia, the Atlantic province of Canada, claims three discoverers. John Cabot landed on Cape Breton island in 1497, decided he was the discoverer and claimed it for Henry VII of England. Jean Denys, a Frenchman, touched on it in 1506 and thought that he had discovered it. In 1524 Jean Verrazano, a Florentine under the commission of Francis I of France, came across it and claimed it for his patron. In fact, he claimed the entire American coastline from Nova Scotia to the Carolinas, and "all the regions beyond." Although there is no proof, there is everything of a convincing nature to make fairly definite that Lief Ericson, the adventurous Viking, discovered Nova Scotia away back in 1000.

Ax of Prehistoric Giant

There were giants on the earth in the old days. This conclusion seems to be justified by the finding of a stone ax weighed 14.5 pounds. It was found in Norfolk, England, in strata that underlies glacial deposits indicating that it was produced and used by a race that antedated the Ice age. The deposit belongs to the early Pleistocene epoch and the man who used it may have lived 1,000 millenniums ago. No skeletons of giant human beings have been found to give support to the theory that a race of giants at one time inhabited the earth but no other theory has been offered to account for the gigantic size of this flint ax.

Gold in California

The first discovery of gold in California was in 1842 near the San Fernando mission near Los Angeles. No real importance was attached to the discovery until February 9, 1848, when the daughter of James W. Marshall, the overseer of a mill owned by John A. Sutter, found a piece of nugget in a mill race on a branch of the Sacramento river near Coloma. This discovery started the gold rush to California. James W. Marshall died old, alone and almost penniless in a mountain saloon.

Symptoms of Hysteria

Hysteria, a morbid state of the nervous system, produces a variety of symptoms, including high fever, which closely resemble those of organic diseases and are difficult to diagnose, writes No. 10,375, State penitentiary, Deer Lodge, Montana, in Collier's Weekly. Some time ago a man, afflicted with recurring spells, was operated on—over a period of years—by five different surgeons who were convinced by his condition that he had appendicitis.

From 1900 up to 1934 the leaf tobacco used for cigarettes increased from 13,084,037 lbs. to 326,093,357 lbs.; an increase of 2392%

It takes mild ripe tobacco to make a good cigarette.

During the year ending June 30, 1900, the Government collected from cigarette taxes $3,969,191

For the year ending June 30, 1934, the same taxes were $350,299,442 an increase of 125% —a lot of money.

Cigarettes give a lot of pleasure to a lot of people.

More cigarettes are smoked today because more people know about them—they are better advertised. But the main reason for the increase is that they are made better—made of better tobaccos; then again the tobaccos are blended—a blend of Domestic and Turkish tobaccos. Chesterfield is made of mild, ripe tobaccos. Everything that science knows about is used in making it a milder and better-tasting cigarette. We believe you will enjoy them.

INJURED

TWO HEBRON PERSONS BRUISED AND CUT

George B. Yates, 57, and Mrs. Albert Willis, 45, both of near Hebron, Ky., were reported in a somewhat critical condition at the St. Elizabeth Hospital, Saturday morning. They were injured in an automobile accident Friday, when their car hit a culvert and overturned into a creek bed near Hebron.

Mrs. Willis was thrown from the car and Yates was pinned in the wreckage until extricated by passing motorists. He was reported suffering from a possible fracture to the left leg, and Mrs. Willis suffered lacerations on the chin and forehead. They were removed to the hospital in Covington by friends. The accident occurred on a curve on State Route 20 between Hebron and Constance.

COLLEGE DISCUSSES SOFT CORN PROBLEM

In response to inquiries about feeding frosted and soft corn, the College of Agriculture of the University of Kentucky issued the following statement:

"There is a large acreage of frosted corn, especially in some areas of western part of the state. Some people believe that frosted corn will injure live stock. This is not the case. While frosted corn does not give as good results, pound for pound, as does matured corn, yet from a dry matter basis it is equal, pound for pound, to matured corn. The best way to handle the crop is to cut it, put in small snocks and begin feeding it at once. Hogs and cattle feeding soft corn to a better advantage than do horses and sheep. However, it is safe to feed to horses and sheep unless it becomes moldy later on in the year. At this time cattle and hogs will handle it with less danger than horses and sheep.

"The best way of all to handle frosted corn is to put in into the silo. It has dried up to considerable extent water should be added at the rate of about one ton of water to every two tons of silage, the water being added as the silage is being filled. Some people snap the ears and ensile them. This makes what is known as ear corn silage. If the ears are in the mix stage, no water needs to be added. If they are past this stage, the kernels beginning to become dented and hard, then water should be added as the silage is being made.

"We would not advise the putting of any class of livestock on a full feed of soft corn as soon as we would a full feed of hard corn. We recommend about 15 days be taken to put hogs on a full feed of soft corn and 30 days of fattening cattle. If late in the season it is found that all of this corn cannot be handled in this way, it can be husked and put into a well ventilated crib. If the crib is well ventilated, should run up through the center. Two pounds of salt should be sprinkled over every 100 pounds of the soft ear corn, as the crib is being filled. The salt also greatly in keeping down mold."

GENEROUS RELIEF WORK

Under the Federal government's dairy products purchasing program for relief distribution, a total of more than 127,000 pounds of butter, cheese, dried skim milk and evaporated milk had been purchased and delivered up to the middle of September. The value of these products was $20,380,000. These figures represent purchases made since August, 1933, when the program was inaugurated.

LOCAL FAMILY

INJURED IN CAR MISHAP NEAR LIMABURG

Their vehicle skidded and backed over an embankment during several of the family into the road. Gale Craddock, 18, received a broken collar bone and several severe cuts, Roxie Craddock, probably the most badly injured, received a broken leg and some deep cuts and bruises, and two of the younger members of the family were also slightly cut and bruised. Roxie was removed to the hospital where her condition is reported fair.

NINETY YEARS OF RAILROAD SERVICE

"Ninety years of railroad service in one family is unusual," says the L. & N. Magazine, "but when it is divided up between two brothers it is even more so."

The Magazine refers to brothers R. H. and Chas. T. Scoggin of Nashville, who recently received 45 year service buttons from the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. Charles, the elder, was employed by the L. & N. on July 27, 1889; R. H. entered service two weeks later. Charles is a flagman on the Pan-American between Nashville and Montgomery. R. H. is the oldest ranking freight conductor on the old Nashville Division.

The leaves on the maple trees in Burlington are a source of much trouble now but they are a great protection from the sun during hot summer months.

A. B. "HAPPY" CHANDLER

DEMOCRAT'S CHOICE FOR GOVERNOR

KENTUCKY CAN PLACE ITS STAMP OF APPROVAL

ON PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT BY ELECTING A. B. "HAPPY" CHANDLER IN NOVEMBER

"It should and will greatly lighten the burdens of the president if he knows Kentucky has rallied to his call," Congressman J. Glover Cary declared in a recent address made in support of Chandler and the Democratic state ticket.

"The party can look forward to the November election with optimism and be confident of an overwhelming victory," the congressman said. He also pointed out that the nominees on the Democratic ticket were the undisputed choice of the voters of the state while the Republican candidates had been "hand picked and ratified in a mock primary."

"This election we are about to hold is a preliminary test for President Roosevelt and his administration. It is the beginning of the fight we will find ourselves engaged in next year," he continued. He reviewed and compared conditions of the country when Roosevelt took office in March 1933 and conditions at the present time.

"President Roosevelt accepted the greatest responsibility any president was called upon to accept when he went into office," Congressman Cary declared and said that the success of President Roosevelt's program for recovery was apparent in the increases reflected in prices for farm products and improved business conditions.

Congressman Cary has been on the stump now for more than 10 days and has confined his speaking engagements for the most part to western Kentucky. During the two party primaries which resulted in the nomination of Chandler, Congressman Cary was one of the most active supporters of the candidacy of Thomas S. Khea, of Russellville, and made numerous speeches in his behalf.

Cary pointed out that a vote for Chandler and the Democratic ticket this fall was a vote "for progress in Kentucky during the next four years" and called upon all Democrats to forget their differences and "fight for that upstanding progressive Democrat, A. B. 'Happy' Chandler."

A vote for Judge King Swope, Republican candidate for governor, he said would be a vote for a political deadlock for the next four years as it was generally conceded that the state senate and house of representatives would be Democratic.

"Even if Judge Swope should be elected governor," he said "with a Democratic legislature in the saddle he would be able to accomplish but very little."

commission had written Chandler's speech was untrue and said that after having read the "recent addresses made by King Swope, I am convinced that it has all of the earmarks of Fiem Sampson who would be the chief beneficiary if Swope should be elected."

Congressman Cary outlined the agricultural banking and industrial legislation of President Roosevelt, and said that Roosevelt was "the first president to ever fulfill his promise to the farmers."

He concluded by declaring that President Roosevelt was strongly behind the candidacy of Chandler and the entire Democratic ticket. He predicted that Chandler would receive thousands of Independent and Republican votes and would be elected by the largest majority ever given a candidate for governor in Kentucky.

DEMOCRATIC RALLY TO BE HELD AT PETERSBURG FRIDAY NIGHT, OCT. 25

Hon. Orin S. Ware, Richard McArthur and Joseph Leary will speak at Petersburg Friday night, October 25th, 8 P. M., in behalf of the state democratic ticket. The rally is being sponsored by the Petersburg members of the Young Men's Democratic Club.

The Nation's accident bill for 1934 amounted to $3,500,000, resulting from 101,000 deaths, 370,000 disabling injuries and 9,821,000 disabling injuries. The automobile took more than a third of the total accidents. Occupational accidents accounted for 25 per cent, and so-called home accidents, an equal amount.

Due to the lack of funds of the Democratic party we are cooperating with Root, Humphreys, Democratic Campaign Chairman, and Keen Johnson, Publicity Director, in sponsoring a full page of advertising in this paper. A number of our leading democrats have already contributed and we hope that there are enough other loyal democrats in Boone County who will contribute, so that this advertising program may be sponsored.

MAY ARRANGE FOR SALE OF TOBACCO OVER ALLOTMENTS

Tentative plans of the AAA for the sale of tobacco produced in excess of allotments include the offering of tax-payment warrants for three cents a pound, and the transfer of allotments from one farmer to another, it is announced at the college of agriculture at Lexington.

Farmers may buy tax-payment warrants for excess tobacco at the rate of three cents a pound, the accumulation from this source being held by the Secretary of Agriculture to apply to future benefit payments.

Or farmers with excess tobacco may obtain from farmers producing less than their allotments the unused portions of such allotments. Farmers transferring unused allotments will lose the deficiency payment, which in the case of burley is 2 cents a pound.

It is thought that the cost of the tax-payment warrants, or the loss of the deficiency payment, will operate to tend to curtail the marketing of low-grade tobacco pronounced in excess of allotments.

The purchase of tax-payment warrants for excess tobacco, or the transfer of allotments from one producer to another, is to be arranged through the county agent's office.

R. L. BOWEN

ELECTED PRESIDENT OF UTILITY FIRM

R. L. Bowen, formerly vice president and general manager of Community Service Company, was elected to the presidency of this concern at a meeting of the board of Directors held in Chicago on October 2nd.

Mr. Bowen, who has many friends in this community, having made a number of business visits here, is a native of Van Alstyne, Texas, and has been connected with this company and its predecessor companies in various capacities since 1921. He began his utility career as a line walker at Graham, Texas, and has worked his way up in successive steps to his present position. His election to the presidency completes the roster of officers for Community Public Service Company. All are experienced utility operating men and have been connected with the concern for a number of years.

LIME PROGRAM MAY CLOSE

Boone county farmers are advised that the sign-up on the Boone County Soil Improvement program may close in the near future, according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. All farmers who expect to have stone crushed and who have not already done so should notify the County Agent's office at Burlington in the near future.

All farmers who have listed stone to be crushed today and those who turn in their requests immediately will be taken care of and will have their stone crushed. Farmers are advised not to wait for relief labor to get their stone out.

The Boone County Soil Improvement Program offers the farmers the best opportunity to date to have stone crushed on their farms. Boone county soils need both lime and phosphate for the most profitable growing of legumes. Numerous experiments indicate that Boone county soils can be made equal to any in the State in pasture and hay production with lime, phosphate and proper seedling mixtures. Farmers are urged to act immediately in filing their applications to have stone crushed.

C. B. Raymon, representative of the International Harvester Co., of Cincinnati, was calling on Calvin Cress last Thursday. Mr. Cress represents this company in Boone county. While here they called on Wm. Brown, of near Bellevue and sold him a water pump.

CORN HOG REFERENDUM VOTE SATURDAY

Corn and hog producers of Boone county and the entire nation will be called upon to vote Saturday, October 26th in the national Corn and Hog Referendum. The vote of the referendum will decide whether or not a AAA contract will be offered producers for the 1936-1939 years.

Educational meetings to explain the program will be held at Hamilton school on Thursday night, October 24th and at Burlington court house on Saturday afternoon at 1:15 p. m. All corn hog producers in 1935 whether contract signers or not are urged to be present at these meetings and are eligible to vote in the referendum.

The voting of "yes" or "no" on the ballot does not mean the producers will sign a continuation of a corn and hog program in some form that will guarantee producers a fair exchange or parity price for what they have to sell. Ballots may be secured at the County Agent's office or at the educational meetings. Only ballots that are cast by Saturday will be counted.

BOTH LOSE

VICTOR IN WAGER ARRIVED IN CINCINNATI LAST THURSDAY IN WAGON PULLED BY LOSER

A wager in which the winner also turned out to be the loser was paid off in full at Fountain Square Thursday, October 17.

The principals were Cecil Lane and Lee Rigby, both of Knoxville, Tenn., who picked Joe Louis and B. J. respectively, in the recent heavyweight fight. Under terms of the wager, Lane was conveyed in a coaster wagon, pulled by Rigby, from Knoxville to Cincinnati.

Several times, it is reported, Lane offered to cancel payment, but Rigby refused. The couple left Knoxville Sept. 1, and passed thru this county early Thursday morning, October 17 and reached Fountain Square shortly after noon.

TAKING THE PROFITS

OUT OF WAR

Hardly had the United States declared neutrality before the merchants dealing in war goods began to complain. To meet the restrictions of our Government the exporters began arranging sales to Italy on the basis of cash on the spot—the buyer to arrange the transportation of the shipments. At the same time New York banking institutions restricted the flow of American credits, but Italy and Ethiopia will likely get into the back doors of some big banks and arrange for loans in a way that will permit payments for American goods without having the credits of the currency mixed up in overseas financing.

Already some of the metropolitan press is complaining that the American doctrine of the freedom of the seas for neutrals has been abandoned. And there is a growing clamor against the ultimatum that Americans cannot travel on Italian ships except at their own risk. That is because the profits out of war are small compared to what they ought to be.

Same Thing in 1914

While the new law placed an embargo on shipments of "arms, ammunition, and implements of war," we are reminded by that wise chairman of the War Industries Board, Bernard M. Baruch, that there is no such thing as non-war materials. He says that "fighting countries can go without war-gas and machine guns suicker than without wheat and other food and clothing," and in his solemn tones he adds that "if you really want to be neutral, you have to go all the way."

It is apparent to the best informed observers in the National Capital that there is bound to develop very speedily a great sentiment to fill European war orders—which are already sufficient volume to be wanted by manufacturers and producers. "Why shouldn't we have the trade?" one hears. Or, why not have the profits out of war? That is likely to become a burning issue and one not easily disposed of.

But... is of recent history that the Allies bought and paid in advance for American products and shipped them in their own boats to Europe at the beginning of the great war. American shipping interests wanted their profits and got them. Americans "just had to" travel on foreign ships and the German submarines got them when they were crossing on the Lusitania.

The Question of Neutrality

Taking the profits out of war admittedly means a big loss of dollar and cents to business and financial interests in the United States. Under the act of Congress and the proclamations of the President we are starting in to take our losses, figuring that such a course will keep impetuous youths, and the war spirit subdued so that we will not enter the present and the "next war." If we have intestinal fortitude to stick by the present program we will not be drawn into this European mess. It looks easy right now, but the longer the Italian-Ethiopia war continues, even though it may not spread, the harder it will be to keep down the war fever. And that fact, even the obscure right now, must not be minimized if we are to keep out of war.

THE FARM OUTLOOK

The farm outlook has greatly changed in the last three years. When the bottom of depression was reached in the summer of 1932, it looked as if agriculture faced nowling save more foreclosures, more farm failures, more prostrated years. Slow improvement set in then, and the pace of betterment gradually accelerated. Recent surveys indicate that agricultural income is climbing, and that also, ink is taking the place of red in farm ledgers. The farmer is not out of the woods—but he can see the sunny meadows beyond.

One of the most potent factors in bringing about the improvement already registered, and one much more surking improvement that seems inevitable in the near future, has been the farmer-owned, farmer-controlled cooperatives. All of these associations have probably done more to genuinely and permanently improve the farmers' position than all the government farm relief measures proposed or passed since the war. The co-ops, possessing the great virtue of permanence, coupled with the fact that they are non-partisan, know how to get results and to keep on getting them.

The cooperative movement is still growing rapidly. New co-ops are being organized—old ones are gaining more members. That is real agricultural progress.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS

In the past, business recovery has been based upon the opening of new territory—the development of new frontiers. With no new territory to develop, no old-style frontier exists. But today there is a vast new frontier of a different type—composed of the millions of properties that need modernization, either by structural improvement or modern equipment. This new frontier is ready for development today and there are many business men taking advantage of the opportunity.

From newsboy to his party's nominee for governor of his native state—the dream of every red-blooded American youth—is the ladder which Lieutenant governor A. B. "Happy" Chandler, Democratic gubernatorial candidate, has climbed in his comparatively brief span of 31 years.

Judging from the rate of Kentucky during the last year we see evidence of prosperity returning. It was one first upward movement since 1929.

With the nominees of both political parties in Kentucky pledged against the Gross Receipts tax, popularly known as the sales tax, it appears obvious that a search for new revenues is likely to be the outstanding feature of the 1936 session of the Legislature which convenes in January.

"A modern war would make hell look like a Sunday school picnic"—S. Parkes Cadman.

Happiness is a feeling we experience when we are too busy to be miserable.

Flattery is a good cure for stiff necks, there are few heads that it won't turn.

FOR YOUR CONSIDERATION

From the writings of a contemporary we found the following article entitled, "The Making of a War."

"My overcoat in the bank goes to my wife; she can explain it. My equity in my car goes to my son, he will have to work to keep up payments. Give my good will to the supply houses; they took some awful chances and are entitled to something. My equipment you can give to the junk man; he has had his eye on it for sometime. I want six of my creditors for paupers; they have carried me so long, they might as well finish the job."

Editorial of the Week

A GOOD HALLOWEEN SPORT

Hallow'een, the evening of October 31, when the vigil of All Hallow's or All Saints is kept with merrymaking and jollity is near at hand. In the old Celtic calendar October 31 was the last day of the year, a time when witches went abroad, and it was thought that a good time could be had without undue punishment from these witches.

The Christian Hallow'een is also an evening of merrymaking and jollity—and that it should be—but the ones that take advantage of this merrymaking and jollity should see that their pranks and jokes are of the nature that their subject will enjoy them likewise. OH, of course, it is a lot of fun to run an old dilapidated car up on someone's building—out remember you may have a home or a business house some day.

And then how about the family cow—try to think of a better one than that. IN OTHER WORDS HAVE A GOOD TIME, BUT ABOVE ALL DON'T BE DESTRUCTIVE.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL

By Carter Field

Washington.—With the President and congress both away, Washington is a hotbed of rumors, most of which have absolutely no basis whatever, but all of which are interesting.

For instance, there is the one about Henry Morgenthau, Jr. The secretary of the treasury is enjoying a holiday in Spain, whereupon there is seriously circulated the story that he is to be eased out of the treasury, and is to become ambassador to Madrid. Several details are added, for example, that the administration is most anxious to have Claude G. Bowers, now ambassador to Spain, back in this country for the next campaign. He is a spellbinder of parts, and has been keynoter on many big Democratic occasions.

Now it is beyond denial that certain very important figures in the New Deal are convinced it would be an excellent thing if Morgenthau were sent to Spain—or to the Fiji Islands—anywhere out of touch with Washington. They regard him, to put it mildly, as a flop as secretary of the treasury.

But to anyone who has watched Roosevelt it is simply unthinkable that Morgenthau would be thus humiliated. He went to extreme lengths to avoid humiliating William H. Woodin, who was a far worse secretary—from the White House standpoint—than Morgenthau. Woodin disagreed distressingly with most of the New Deal policies. His personal loyalty to Roosevelt prevented his resigning, for a long time, despite the excellent excuse of his health, but he actually had nothing to do with formulating the more important phases of treasury policy.

Whereas Morgenthau has been the ideal "Yes Man" to the President. His first thought at all times is to do just precisely what the President wants, and to tell the President that any Roosevelt idea is simply swell. He has never sought self-glorification in the public prints, and has not joined in any conspiracies to unseat Presidential favorites from their places near the throne.

Morgenthau Will Stay

So this observer believes that Mr. Morgenthau will serve as secretary of the treasury as long as he wants, and when his time comes to go, will get a wonderful send-off, and with no such lame excuse as "promoting" him to be ambassador to Spain.

Then there is the story about Herbert Hoover's motive in attracting so much limelight. This is that Hoover really has no idea of being a candidate, but intends to hold the limelight and make no statement which would take him out of the apparent race before, say, next February. The explanation given for this is that Hoover wants to shield any other possible Republican nominee from being put on the spot as to the soldier bonus. By February, Washington believes, the bonus will have passed into history, with its passage over Roosevelt's veto, and hence will no longer be an issue.

This writer still believes, and on excellent authority from close lieutenants of the former President, that he craves a vindication, that he would like to have the nomination forced on him, but that with very little urging he would step out actively and go after it.

Most of the stories going around are just as silly as that one now exploded about Roosevelt's shelving Garner and putting up some one for Vice President next year who would draw strength in some state or section more doubtful than Texas is expected to be.

No Real Conflagration

Belief that Italy will eventually have to yield to economic pressure is very strong in diplomatic circles here. The opinion of the diplomats, perhaps the best informed persons as to actual conditions, is that there will not be any real conflagration. They do not believe, for example, that Britain will ever actually blockade Italy, which dire possibility would lead to tremendous consequences.

They point out, however, that, contrary to popular opinion, Germany is not sympathetic with Italy, but anxious to go along with Great Britain. They do not believe, therefore, that Germany will supply Italy with the needed munitions—using munitions in the broad sense of things necessary in time of war, and not confining it, as the United States neutrality act does, to "arms, ammunition and implements of war."

Several well-informed diplomats were questioned by this writer as to what they thought Germans anxious to sell goods would do if they saw a chance to make a nice profit by selling to Italy—especially as it has become increasingly difficult for Germany to market goods she would like to export.

Invariably the answer has been the same—that German merchants would not hesitate to go against the policy of their country if they could turn a good deal for themselves, but that they would hesitate a long time before selling anything to Italy on credit.

Italy's credit, at the moment, is not too good. Diplomats here say that despite the refusal of Austria and Hungary to commit themselves in advance to league sanctions against Italy, this distrust of Italy's ability to pay will dry up these sources of supply.

Italy Short of Gold

The gold reserve of the Bank of Italy has shrunk tremendously in the last 18 months. She is now down to something like $300,000,000 gold in terms of American dollars. Roughly this is $100,000,000 less if calculations are made in terms of the American dollar before devaluation.

Importance of this last is not generally realized in this country, save by persons who have traveled in Europe since devaluation. But actually the purchasing power of the lira has not changed in the meantime, either in Italy or on the continent of Europe.

Italy always buys a great deal of food from across the Adriatic, cattle especially. The Yugoslavians do not like Italy at all. Neither do the Greeks. They are afraid of Mussolini's imperialistic dreams. Washington believes that Italy has been compelled to pay cash for merchandise, with credits closely held, and that this is the really important explanation of the drop of three billion lire in the gold holdings of the Bank of Italy.

To the contention that Germany was able to go on fighting for years while under virtual blockade, diplomats answer that the cases are very different. Within the central powers was a stretch of territory from the Baltic to the Black seas, and extending beyond the Black into Asia. This territory has tremendous diversification of products, including those essential for war—metals, oil and food. Moreover, Germany was able to buy from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland and Switzerland. Italy must buy virtually all her metals and oil, and a great deal of food.

After effects of the World war demonstrated rather forcibly what could happen to credits. Conviction that Italy will take a ghastly economic beating in the present war, no matter what military glories she may achieve, lends point to this. And her gold supply does not promise long continuance of cash payments.

Neutrality Act

A fight to broaden the neutrality act so that the President would be authorized to prohibit export to belligerents not only of "arms, ammunition and implements of war," as the present act reads, but "munitions," so as to include cotton, copper, chemicals, acids, in fact, all materials, ranging from foodstuffs to coles, usually regarded as war supplies, will start with the tap of the gavel when congress convenes in January.

The administration is embarrassed now by the lack of authority in the neutrality law, but will be even more embarrassed when the fight in congress comes—especially because of the political pressure against even the grant of authority to ban cotton and copper.

At the time the neutrality act passed, President Roosevelt expressed only one regret—that the act did not ban foreign loans for war purposes.

The narrowness of language in the neutrality act defining war supplies was not at once noticed by officials. It was assumed until very recently, for example, that the President could add cotton, or copper, or chemicals and acids used for explosives, etc. In fact, there was a broad inference in official quarters after the President's proclamation that items would be added from time to time.

Watch Shipments

The government does not intend to hamper export trade unduly in seeking to discover if shipments to neutral countries are intended for belligerents, officials insist, but they point out that they have been catching such violations, with respect to Latin-American wars, "every week or so," and say the same sort of watch will be kept on shipments to any country which might pass them on, either to Italy or Ethiopia. Which of course means primarily Italy.

For instance, if there should be a heavy shipment of explosives or guns to Germany, the government may require substantial proof that the shipment is not going any further, or is not going to replace similar supplies sold to Italy.

Newspapers, according to officials, have enormously exaggerated the amount of raw materials Italy bought in anticipation of this war. They do not deny that Italy has laid in a supply of raw materials, but insist that in most instances the amounts purchased are not greatly in excess of normal purchases.

On the other hand is the tremendous shrinking in the Bank of Italy's gold supply.

Which would seem to indicate, especially as unofficial information is that the gold supply has been coming down sharply since September 20, that Italy has been buying heavily, despite official reports to the contrary.

Which brings up the whole question of credit. Leaving out the dire possibility that Great Britain may declare war on Italy, and blockade her, will Italy be able to buy American cotton, copper and other "war supplies" other than "arms, ammunition and implements of war"? Certainly there would be plenty of political pressure to encourage this, but would American bankers be willing to extend credit to finance such sales after Italy's gold supply has been stripped down to the danger mark—wherever that is?

Germany fought the war without much credit from neutrals, but she had tremendous supplies of the vital war requirements.

$3,600,000 IN STATE TAXES

THE revenue from taxes on alcoholic beverages is now the State of Kentucky's fourth-largest single source of income.... In addition to eight forms of taxes paid to the State, the distilling industry in Kentucky now pays seven forms of taxes to the Federal Government, four forms to counties, and four to cities within the State... Unless you vote "Yes" on November 5, all this revenue will be lost, and the taxpayers of the State will be forced to make up the deficit.

What the Distilling Industry Does for Kentucky

COAL... Kentucky distillers bought over 200,000 tons of Kentucky coal last year. The mining of this coal provided an entire month's work for over 2000 Kentucky miners—work which may be lost forever if you vote "No" in November.

GRAIN... Kentucky distillers purchased 9,000,000 bushels of grain last year, at a cost of over $10,000,000. This market for grain will be lost to Kentucky farmers if the distilling industry is driven from Kentucky.

LUMBER and COOPERAGE... Kentucky barrel manufacturers sold 800,000 barrels to Kentucky distillers last year. These barrels were made from 80,000,000 feet of white oak lumber—at current prices, worth more than two and a half million dollars in cash.

OTHER INDUSTRIES... In addition to those mentioned above, dozens of other industries and occupations in Kentucky derive some if not all their business and income from the distilling industry in Kentucky. Railroads, hotels, equipment-manufacturers, bottle makers, printing houses, newspapers, merchants of all sorts, everybody in Kentucky owes some benefit to this $100,000,000 industry.

If you want the State to continue collecting $3,600,000 per year in taxes from the distilling industry instead of from you and your neighbors—if you want the State to retain all the other benefits of this $100,000,000 industry—

HEBRON SCHOOL NEWS

SPECIAL NOTICE! There will be a Halloween Carnival held in the Hebron School Auditorium on Oct. 30. The various rooms of the school will have parts on the program, but the special feature of the evening will be an act by "Bully" Knipper, a professional Tap Dancer. "Peanuts, pop-corn, chewing gum and candy" will be available to those of you who desire them and other refreshments will be on hand for those who desire something more nourishing. This is a jolly way for everyone to spend "Cabbage Night," so come to the Carnival and benefit the Library, for whose cause the affair is being given.

In reference to the library, we think that everyone will be pleased to know of the progress made in the past year. At the time of the beginning of the campaign for more books there were 225 books on the shelves—now, there are 678 books available to the students. We are certainly grateful to those who have given us donations, among which are Miss Mary Bess Cropper and Miss Laura Katherine Evans, who donated 21 books last week. We will gladly take any books which anyone want to give us.

The Boone County Tournament was held Saturday Oct. 19 at the Hebron school. All the schools of the county showed a fine spirit of sportsmanship. Although we won only three firsts in scholarship, we won a number of firsts in athletic events. Following is a list of the winners from Hebron. We wish all the winners from other schools as well as our own, the best luck in their contest at Lexington.

Here's a shingle that's as fireproof as stone. Put it in the fire, it won't burn. Cover your building with it and your roof worries are over. It will last as long as the building. Surprisingly inexpensive too, as compared with any permanent roofing material. Makes a beautiful roof of deep shadow lines and weathered appearance. Careystone Shingles are fabricated from asbestos and cement, in three styles, which may be used singly or in combination, giving wide latitude for roof individuality. ## How Calotabs Help Nature To Throw Off a Bad Cold

Millions have found in Calotabs a most valuable aid in the treatment of colds. They take one or two tablets the first night and repeat the third or fifth night if needed. How do Calotabs help Nature throw off a cold? First, Calotabs is one of the most thorough and dependable of all intestinal eliminators, thus cleansing the intestinal tract of the germ-laden mucus and toxins.

Second, Calotabs are diuretic to the kidneys, promoting the elimination of cold poisons from the system. Thus Calotabs serve the double purpose of a purgative and diuretic, both of which are needed in the treatment of colds.

Calotabs are quite economical; only twenty-five cents for the family package, ten cents for the trial package. (Adv.)

LANDSCAPE NOTES

1. Dahlias should be cut four to six inches above ground immediately after a hard killing frost. Make the cut with a long slope. This prevents moisture entering the remaining part of the stem. Remove and burn all old stalks as soon as they have been cut. Leave the roots in the ground to mature before digging. After some freezing weather, and usually before Thanksgiving, dig and store dahlia roots.

2. Loosen the soil around the evergreens to a depth of three or four inches and apply ten to fifteen gallons of water to each plant every two weeks until winter begins. This enables the plants to go into winter with plenty of moisture, both in the plant and surrounding soil area. This has a tendency to lessen winter injury.

3. The bag-worms have been troublesome on evergreens in some sections. Remove by hand-picking and burn. Tent caterpillars should be burned by means of a torch, made by tying old soaked rags on a pole.

4. Climbing plants should be securely tied to support before winter. This applies especially to climbing roses.

5. Bittersweet has been unusually attractive this season. You can raise your own. Secure a vine and plant it in a location where it will be shaded, at least, part of the day. It needs a good garden soil that drains well.

6. Do not prune hybrid tea or monthly roses at this season. Wait until next spring.

7. Keep the crab-grass cut to prevent the formation of seed. It is bad in the lawn, remove the clippings and burn.

8. The fall is an ideal time to construct walks or drives where needed. Select materials that are available in your section and that will blend with the buildings. As a rule, it does not pay to try to save seed of annual flowers. The seed is usually cheap and of a better quality than where you try to save it.

AMONG THE COUNTY AGENTS

G. B. Nolan, of Cumberland county in Harlan county, has sold $1,400 worth of vegetables since March.

Breckinridge county farmers purchased five truck loads of sheep for $7.35 a head at a sale at Ft. Knox. Daily farmers C. Boyd, Carter and Lawrence counties formed a Tri-County Milk Producers Association, to sell milk to Ashland plants.

Two hundred fifty-seven acres were torched for 12 Graves county farmers, at a cost of $1.42 an acre. Frank Harlan of Greenup county bought 15 steers to feed out this winter.

Part of the 320,000 cans of beans and tomatoes canned by the McLean County Farmers' Cooperative Creamery were sold to the KERA.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Gray Ghosts.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.—Wearing uniforms of weathered gray, the shades of several ancestors came to me as I slept and wanted to know if it was true that practically all the old-line Republicans in New England were ready to spring to arms against the New Dealers in defense of the sacred doctrine of states' rights.

I said such was indeed the case, and they said if those d—n Yankees had only seen the light a heap sooner, the Cobb family would've been saved a lot of bother. In 1861 and wouldn't have gone busted in 1865.

I told them there had been no noticeable change since '65—the Cobb family was still busted. So they faded away.

I thought it might have been a dream, but when I woke up there still lingered the faint ghostly aromas of bourbon toddies and fried ham.

Irvin S. Cobb

The President's Proclamation.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT started something with his proclamation warning United States citizens of ships belonging to the warring nations, following the one against selling to either of them munitions or deadly arms. The second order disappoints the thousands of tourists, especially those from the southern states, who'd arranged for winter cruises aboard Ethiopian boats, and the earlier one was a serious blow to those American producers who'd counted on selling Italy increased stocks of her favorite weapon. I refer to our garlic growers.

Think of all that stuff piling up in the warehouses over here and not nearly enough gas masks to go around! And, with the supply cut off, think of the defenseless populace over there! The last time I was in Naples, about every other person I met either had eaten too much garlic or not enough. And when I moved on to Rome, I appreciated the old saying, "When in Rome be an aroma." Still I must admit that I now feel toward garlic as I do toward our celebrated California climate—I like it, but not to excess.

Uncle Sam and Sanctions.

ALL we have to go by are the dispatches, which may be wrong; but if I were an Italian out in Ethiopia and a fortune teller had said to me lately, "I seem to see you going on a long journey where you'll meet some dark stranger who will be very antagonistic," I know I'd be homesick and reckon probably I'd start doing a little serious thinking.

And if I were Mussolini, I'd be saying to myself that maybe I made a mistake by not considering the example of another great champion, John L. Sullivan. Any time the prospect was for a close fight, John L. drew the color-line.

And if I were Uncle Sam—as indeed, in our small ways, we all are part of him—I'd answer those mash-notes which will be pouring in pretty soon, bearing foreign postmarks, by stating that I positively was not going into the "sanctions" business. The name may be new, but the smell is both reminiscent and suspicious. In fact, it's the same old smell.

The Head That Wears a Crown.

WHAT with one of the leading movie families having what delicately is known out here as a rift, the dispatches from Greece just did make the front pages of some of the papers. This is the center of the rifting industry, and the daily quotations are eagerly followed.

The news must've created a stir, though, in Europe, which is dotted with many an "ex," marking the spot when a bounced monarch landed. Any revival in the king business, which for years was so sluggish, will be welcomed by interested parties. I seem to hear Wilhelm telling the hired girl to get the crown off the parlor what-not and give it a wipe.

Still, King George might do well to book return passage before heading for Athens to remount the skittish throne that bucked him off once. Except when running restaurants, the Greeks are great hands for switching around.

A Pocketful of Change.

MR. HOOVER says that, at the end of this administration, our unpaid government obligations will exceed thirty-five billions, whereupon Senate Leader Robinson indignantly shrieks that, on June 30, 1936, the total national debt will approximate only thirty billions, seven hundred and twenty-four millions and some odd change.

But to any orthodox member of the last congress, what's a mere bagatelle of four or five billions? The boys toss those trifles off the same as Detroit batting in runs in the ninth inning of a world's series game. And anyhow, doesn't it still give us six full months next year to overtake the Hoover estimate? Why, it'll be like taking candy from a taxpayer.

...but, after all is said and done, it's the cigarette itself that counts

...the question is, does it suit you?

Now, when it comes to a cigarette that will suit you... you want to think whether it's mild, you want to think about the taste

That Chesterfields are milder and taste better is no accident...

The farmer who grows the tobacco, the warehouseman who sells it at auction to the highest bidder, every man who knows about leaf tobacco will tell you that it takes mild, ripe tobaccos to make a good cigarette.

In making Chesterfields we use mild ripe home-grown and Turkish tobaccos.

"Lonesome," a classy fox hound, owned by Marion Garnett, of Hebron, Ky., stole the entire show from 65 qualified entrants in the main event of the Dillsboro Fox Hunters Meet, which was held at Dillsboro, Ind., last week. The prize for this event was a beautiful silver cup, of which Mr. Garnett is immensely proud. "Lumber" another dog, belonging to Frank Sadler, who made the trip to Dillsboro with Mr. Garnett, won first prize in the bench show, and this same dog and another belonging to the same kennel won the prize for the best pair of show dogs. Besides these prizes, there were several other events in which the dogs of this kennel placed.

Mr. Garnett reported an excellent time on their trip and says that the meet was one of the best that he ever attended.

JAMES McNEELY

TAKING ACTIVE PART IN SOCIAL LIFE AT WESTERN TEACHERS COLLEGE

Mr. James McNeely, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. McNeely, of Grant, Ky., was recently honored by being elected to the office of President of the Social Science Club of Western Kentucky State Teachers College. Mr. McNeely was also recently appointed a member of the Program Committee of the Senior Class. He is preparing to teach and is doing his major work in the fields of History and Economics. Mr. McNeely is a graduate of Burlington High School, being a member of the class of 1932. This is his fourth year at Western and in that time he not only has made many friends but has thoroughly proven his ability as a leader and as a student.

(The above article was sent to The Recorder by the News Bureau of Western Kentucky State College of Bowling Green, Kentucky.)

408 HERDS TESTED BANGS DISEASE 11.2% REACT

Boone county ranked fourth in the state in the number of cattle tested for Bangs disease or contagious abortion according to the report of the Bureau of Animal Industry. Since starting this work on August the 1st, 1934, 408 herds and 4261 cattle have been tested, 408 hundred and eighty-seven or 11.2 per cent have reacted to the test and sold for slaughter.

Bangs disease is not only a cause of unprofitable dairy production but has become an important health problem. Undulant fever caused by the same germ causing Bangs disease and contracted by drinking milk from affected herds is receiving considerable attention from health authorities as the identity of the disease is becoming more closely recognized.

The testing work in Boone county has been vigorously pushed by Dr. Kenneth Ryle, veterinarian, Burlington who has been in charge of the testing work. Fifty per cent of all dairy cattle in the county have been tested to date. Every owner of breeding cattle has a golden opportunity to have his herd cleared up under the present program where the government pays for the testing work and pays the farmer on the appraised value for all animals that react. Every farmer should take advantage of this opportunity while it lasts.

The program in Kentucky is conducted under the supervision of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, State Livestock Sanitary Board and the Kentucky Experiment Station. All farmers who want their herds tested should notify Dr. Ryle at Burlington.

OPEN LETTER

FROM A BOONE COUNTY CITIZEN TO THE PUBLIC.

Dear Recorder Readers:

I wish to say to those who sympathize with the mother of my children in her being separated from the little boy, that I have offered to bring him back, provided that she agree to a fair division—she to keep the little girl and I the boy—each to have the other child at stated intervals.

I hear that a leading citizen threatens to spend his entire fortune to bring me to justice. I feel that I'm fleeing from injustice and I think it would better become him as a Christian gentleman to use his influence to bring this to a fair and peaceable settlement on a fifty-fifty basis, as I proposed.

I have submitted to a rotten deal long enough. For more than a year, while I have obeyed the court order as to the monthly payments &c., she has not obeyed it in that I never have had custody of my little girl for the two days a week as ordered and did not always get the boy. Am I the only one guilty of contempt of court?

While it is sad to be away from home and friends, I am comforted by the love of my little son, who now calls me "daddy" and who, had I left him there, would have been estranged from me, as was my little Corinne who also loved her daddy, before Satan in the guise of a friend destroyed my home, and if there is no justice for me in my native State, then must I remain an exile?

With greetings and best wishes to my friends, relatives and Legion brothers I am yours,

GEORGE WALTON, JR.

Today, according to a multitude of unprejudiced and non-political opinions, there are three main essentials to recovery:

First, a decisive campaign to reduce the cost of government, balance the budget as soon as possible, and thus eventually make sweeping education in taxes.

Second, less governmental interference with legitimate business enterprise, and an assurance that new laws, restrictions and rulings will not cause managements to become mere rubber stamps for Washington bureaucrats to handle at their discretion.

Third, the assurance that there will be no tampering with the instrument that stands foursquare between America and one form or another of dictatorship to the constitution.

Business asks these things. So do property owners. So do people with savings accounts and investments. And so do thinking workers, who realize that industrial confidence is the mainspring of steady, productive employment.

A balanced budget; the greatest possible leeway for honest commercial activities; a continuance of constitutional government—from these we can fashion recovery and abiding prosperity.

Editorial of the Week

A boy praising his mother is almost as old as the human race is old and there is little new left to be said about it. Every boy thinks that he has the best mother in the world and rightly he should think so. This is one of the chief characteristics of one of our greatest Kentuckians, who little has been written or said about. This young man's name is Jesse Stuart and according to critics he is the Robert Burns of America.

Stuart's boyhood days were spent on a small farm in western Kentucky and it was there that he learned to love nature in all of its forms. He is known as a poet of the earth and he writes simple narrative poetry that is being read over the entire world.

"When went to college on a little dab of one-dollar bills, I shall never forget the two one-dollar bills Mom sent me." It is the appreciative and sympathetic soul that Mr. Stuart possesses as is indicated in the above quotation that is making him one of our leading contemporary poets.

"It took my Daddy 16 years to get to vote for Bill Bryan" three times" writes an enthusiastic admirer of A. B. Chandler, Democratic nominee for governor, "but I'm getting to vote that many times for my candidate in a single year."

Every one of the first seven months of 1935 for which employment reports are available show an increase over the corresponding months of 1934.

A postage stamp the most sensible thing in the world, it sticks to one thing until it gets there.

Someone has said that a loud voice is indicative of a small mind.

One of the best cures for conceit that we know: The next time you get in a crowd of people, look around and remember that every one there can do at least one thing better than you can. It will keep your head at its normal size.

The American people are the most conscious people on earth and they will eat anything that is said to be healthful.

Trouble with most books, is that their covers are too far apart.

News Tour

By Wm. C. Walton

The city of Calcutta in India was named after Kali, the Goddess of Destruction. The figure of Kali, which stands in the Kaliphant temple in her namesake city, is a masterpiece of horror. Gleaming scarlet eyes stare from her shining ebony black face. A long lolling tongue hangs repellently from bejeweled lips. And a chain of human skulls adorns her smooth neck. The Goddess has four arms, holding the symbols of creation, blood-thirstiness and destruction. Standing before the ugly fascination of the goddess Kali, your eyes play you queer tricks. If you stare long enough, as surely you will, you will see the hideous golden tongue lick the black chin. You will see a gleam of sinister mirth come into the glittering, blood-red eyes. Perhaps it is a reflection of the subdued light of the temple, perhaps merely your own imagination stirred by the grandeur and the poverty, the ugliness and beauty of India.

It was December 1927. I was there, a funeral procession trudges its way along the streets of the Goddess namesake city. The body is being borne by his relatives down to the burning-ghat on the river front, the funeral procession elicits little interest as it nears the river front. Swarthy-faced turbaned figures gaze vacantly at the mourners. Bicycles sweep by, bullock carts plod on and now the procession has reached the stone starway leading down to the burning-ghat and soon the body will be reduced to ashes.

On the shore holy men seek salvation by shouting with a peculiar reverence the ancient stories of their ancestors. At one end of the river Indian washermen beat their clothes against the rocks and splash them back into the holy waters. At the center of the river other mourners chant prayers as the dead slowly burns to ashes.

SHARING RICHES OF THE SPIRIT

No matter how far America may go in efforts to secure a fairer distribution of material income we shall still never be a really wealthy people until there is a fairer distribution of those richer treasures of the mind and the soul—a love of all that is beautiful in art, nature, music, literature, play, and in noble conduct and spiritual aspiration.

Poet's Corner

THE RED SQUIRREL

He's busy now, the grand hurrah
Of summer days is past;
He must forget his sporting now
And go to work at last.

I see him floating up a tree,
And flash from limb to limb;
He is a busy farmer now, a
With duty urging him.

He gathers nuts for winter's store;
He estimates his need;
He is a father and, what's more;
He must his family feed.

He is a farmer wise, for, when
The nuts are ripe, then he Forgets his sport and sobers down
To strict economy.

"X" THE YES
AMENDMENT No. 1VOTE "YES"
FOR REPEAL!

HERE at last is a question on which both "wets" and "drys" can all vote "Yes". • If you are a "wet" you will want to vote "Yes" for Repeal because otherwise the State will lose its only opportunity for intelligent control of the liquor question . . . will lose the prosperity which has arisen from several of its largest industries . . . will lose employment for more than 30,000 people. • If you are a "dry", you will want to vote "Yes" for Repeal because Repeal will automatically restore to each county and community the right to prohibit or regulate the sale of liquor within its own boundaries.

Why a Vote for Repeal is Also a Vote for Intelligent Regulation

The present Seventh Amendment to the State Constitution prohibits the manufacture and sale of liquor in Kentucky.

In a decision handed down on October 8, the Court of Appeals ruled that this same Seventh Amendment also prevents any county, city or town from holding Local Option elections.

The proposed Repeal Amendment, on which you are asked to vote "Yes" on November 5, provides that each precinct, district, city, town or county in Kentucky may be empowered to make and enforce such laws of prohibition, regulation or control as it sees fit. When you vote "Yes" on November 5, you will therefore be voting for Repeal, for Regulation and for Local Option.

Therefore . . . if you conscientiously believe in local home rule and if you believe in Repeal and Regulation—

LOCAL HOME-OWNERS
SHOW KEEN INTEREST IN CORK-BACK SHINGLES

An unusual shingle is attracting the attention of Boone county home owners. This shingle not only incorporates all of the approved features of standard asphalt shingles, but also insulates the house which it covers, from extremes in temperatures. It is this insulating feature which makes this product of special interest to home owners. The manufacturer points out that Cork Insulated Shingles will overcome a large percentage of the avoidable heat leakage through the average roof and thus keep the home cooler in summer and warmer in winter with a saving in fuel bills and increased comfort for the occupants.

This shingle is slate covered outside to protect against the weather, with an underside of cork to keep out heat and cold. It is made in a number of popular colors and many attractive effects can be secured by using different combinations. Being much thicker than ordinary shingles, they produce a shadow line which adds charm to the roof.

KENTUCK FARM NEWS

Alfred Eisen and Clarence Nordwick, of Campbell county, gave a Holstein calf and a Jersey calf to 4-H club members scoring highest in showing those breeds at the county fair. Roy Prim of Alexandria and Mildred Dodge of Ft. Thomas won the awards.

Hopkins county could have a yearly income from dairying approximating $1,280,000, in the opinion of a representative of the U. C. Milk Company of Madisonville. He advocates having 10,000 purebred and high grade cows to supply milk companies and cheese factories.

Bath county farmers report getting better hay and a ton an acre more of it, on 140 acres where good seed and lime were used. Trumb Snedegar sold 600 bushels of seed for planting next spring. More moving machines were sold than in any year since 1928.

Twenty-four Fleming county farmers cooperating in growing tomatoes shipped them to the Kentucky Canning Company at Paris by truck for 4½ cents a bushel transportation cost. They believe the project will pay through having a better product and making marketing plans in advance.

Handicraft work is being revived by Harlan county homemakers, who are making stools, chairs, baskets and quilts. Native sheep's wool is used for sweaters along with vegetable dyed yarns. At a tri-state fair held recently, the homemakers showed how modern women could excel in the old fire-side crafts.

That a good herd of cows well cared for, is a paying proposition, is shown by the record of 24 cows, tested by the Mason County Dairy Herd Improvement Association for one year. They averaged 318 pounds of butterfat per cow, and brought $55 profit each above feed costs.

FOR SALE—Fresh cow and calf, 8 stock beefers, all weigh 700 lbs. Price 6½ cents. Also two good Beagle hounds, broke to hunt. Frank L. Kelly, Burlington, Ky.

RED QUILL POISON

KILLS RATS, MICE
Cold weather drives rats and mice from fields to the shelter of buildings. Before corn cobs are fufed and vegetables and fruit are stored, many farmers destroy as many rats and mice as possible.

The use of red quill bait is recommended by G. V. Oederkirk of the U. S. biological survey, who is cooperating with the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station in the control of rodent pests.

This poison is prepared in the proportion by weight of one part of red quill to 16 parts of food. It is well to use several kinds of feeds, such as cereals, mea, and vegetables, so the rats and mice can have their choice. Red quill is relatively harmless to domestic animals and should be used where ordinary poisons would be dangerous.

Where rats are burrowed under floors, calcium cyanide powder can be forced into the holes with a duster. It forms a gas as it comes into contact with the air, and persons using it should stay in the open and avoid breathing the powder or gas.

Barium carbonate also will kill rats. It poisons other animals, however, and should be used with care. It is odorless, tasteless and low in cost. Several kinds of baits are advisable, as with cyanide, such as canned salmon and hamburger. Use one part by weight of the poison to four parts of the food.

STAY HOME—IN BED?

At the Rockefeller Institute in New York there is probably the greatest authority on the common cold in the country. He was once asked what he did when he had the sniffles. He answered: "I stay home—in bed."

But what if there are chores to be done, or a sick child to tend, or the Boone County Recorder to get out on time? Do farmers and mothers and editors stay home in bed? Of course they don't, but somehow they fight off the cold.

With winter coming on it is worth remembering a few things about a common cold. All the experts agree that there is no real cure for it. Colds set up in us a lot of cold fighters. When these have done their work, the cold goes, but not before. Staying home in bed does help the cold fighters, of course, but they cure the cold; the bed doesn't.

But some colds are not the common garden variety. They linger longer than they should and you soon feel chills and fever very much like a malaria. This is an influenza type of cold and from a Japanese Medical College comes a valuable suggestion for curing it.

The influenza cold, often followed by pneumonia, is very common through the winter months, and the Japanese hospital had hundreds of cases under observation. They found that two grains of quinine taken every four hours helped to cure the patient. They suggest that the quinine is best taken with a hot drink of tea, lemonade, or, as one of them puts it, "hot grog." If this does not work, send for the doctor, as influenza colds easily lead to something worse.

Quite a few ads. in this issue of the Recorder. Read them.

Howard Adams, son of Walter Adams, of Indiana, and well known in this county, made the Recorder a friendly call Wednesday afternoon. He says his father is in very bad health.

William Horton, of the Union neighborhood, was here on business Wednesday afternoon.

Harvey Tanner, of Florence precinct was mingling with friends in Burlington Wednesday afternoon.

Cal Abdon, of Ashby Fork, was a business visitor to the Hub Wednesday.

Leland Snyder, of the Petersburg neighborhood, was at the Hub Wednesday afternoon.

The local truckmen have been busy this fall conveying stock to the stock yards.

"Mountain of Hellfire"

Emits Ammoniacal Gases

Over a great area on the frontier between Baluchistan and Persia everything is dead. Not a bird, beast, or reptile, not even an insect, survives. They have been passed by the "Mountain of Hellfire"—as the Persians call the volcano of Koh-i-Tafatan. The crater pours out dense clouds of ammoniacal gas which destroy every living thing and even burn up all plant life, says Tit-Bits Magazine.

This is the only mountain which produces this particular gas, but not the only one which exudes poison gas. In 1912 the volcano of Katmai in Alaska exploded, producing the biggest crater in the world, which is now known as the Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes. Here sulphurous gas streams out from rifts, and it is death to approach one of these deadly vents.

The Sakura Shima volcano in Japan blew up in 1914 and overwhelmed the city of Kagoshima. The loss of life was over 70,000, and a great number of these people were suffocated by pestilence gases which rushed up from earthquake fissures a long way from the mountain itself.

Before the great Chilean earthquake of 1957 poison gas rose in the floor of the Bay of Payta and killed enormous quantities of fish and crabs. They floated on the surface and were washed up on the beach, forming a wall-like line three to four feet high and twelve miles long.

The most ghastly disaster of recent times was the destruction of the beautiful city of St. Pierre by a cloud of gas and dust flung out by Mont Pelee. Within a matter of moments 40,000 people were blotted out.

Five-King Feast of 1363

Honored John of France

There is much obscurity about the origin of the famous five-king dinner of 1363 in the Vintners' hall, according to a writer in the London Observer.

Apropos of the Swan dinner recently tendered in London by the Worshipful Company of Vintners, honoring four princes of England (Prince Arthur of Connaught was unable to be present), he describes the original company as Edward III (England), David (Scotland), John (France), Waldemar III (Denmark) and Amadeus VI (Cyprus).

"John," he continues, "was at the time a prisoner in England. He had been made captive at Poitiers (1356) and was released on ransom four years later, but, on arriving in Paris, found himself unable to raise the money. His son had been left at Calais as hostage, and when he escaped, in the summer of 1363, John returned to England to give himself up.

"It seems quite probable that the Vintners' banquet was given in compliment to him, for we read that he was received in England 'with great honor,' was lodged, as before, in the Savoy and was a frequent guest of Edward at Westminster. He died in the following spring, and his body was sent to France with royal honors."

The First Battery

About 1700, Luigi Galvani found that if the legs of a dead frog were supported by a brass wire, with its feet resting on an iron plate, the legs suddenly kicked. In 1799 Alessandro Volta repeated Galvani's experiment and concluded that the movement of the legs was due to a flow of electricity caused by the connection of the two different metals, brass and iron, through the moist body of the frog. On this theory, he constructed a pile of a large number of discs of copper, zinc and moist paper and found that, upon connecting the top and bottom of the pile, he obtained a shock similar to that from the Leyden jar. He also discovered that his pile was a means of producing a steady flow of electricity. The voltaic pile was the forerunner of all modern wet and dry batteries.

Trousers in Scotland

After the battle of Culloden in 1746 the English attempted to make the Scots wear trousers, and forbade the tartan. Averse to the new garments, some ingenious Highlanders discovered that the law did not specify how the trousers were to be worn. Accordingly, when men went on journeys, they often hung a pair over their shoulders on a stick, to keep within the decree. Such infractions were punished just the same, but a few years later the law was voided and the tartan once more became the national dress.

Lion, Figure in Heraldry

The lion has been used as a figure in heraldry since 1164, when it was adopted as a device by Philip I, duke of Flanders. The lion has figured largely and in an amazing variety of positions as an heraldic emblem, and, as a consequence, in public house signs. The earliest and most important attitude of the heraldic lion is rampant (the device of Scotland), but it is also shown as passant, passant guardant, salient and even dormant. The device of Venice is the winged lion of St. Mark.

what
thinks about:

Tragedy in the News.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—To me, the biggest, most tragic story in the week's papers was not a war in Africa, or a Mexican border raid, or the passing of a gallant American soldier. It was a little press dispatch from an Ohio town where a twelve-year-old boy lived.

The family was on relief, the father out of work. There was no food in the house, no pennies to buy any food with. The little chap owned a rabbit. The parents voted that the rabbit must go in the pot to put strength into the stomachs of the hungry brood. Their son was hungry, too. But his rabbit was his pet, his one possession. So he went and he hanged

Irvin S. Cobb. himself with a loop of People, including some who have plenty of it for themselves, are given to saying money isn't everything. Maybe not, but I'll buy quite a lot of things just a little money in that poor household would have bought a boy's life. And a boy, who so dearly loved a dumb and helpless thing that he died rather than see it die, might have grown up to be somebody in a world which needs all the compassion and all the loving it can get.

The Lion and the Lamb.

NO MATTER who gets involved in it or how this Ethiopian war turns out, watch motherly old Britain emerge from the mess with something valuable—territories, concessions, mandates or what have you?—tucked away in her commodious bread baskets. Any time the lion and the lamb lie down together, the lamb stays down—provided it's the British lion you're thinking of. Let those who will, fight the battles and foot the bills. All John Bull asks is a chance to exercise the benevolent process of absorption, digestion and assimilation. There's one appetite has stood the test of the ages.

For the valor of her sons, perhaps it's fitting that, as a symbol, England should have Leo, but if you're picking something to typify her policies, my choice would be the tapeworm.

Today's Stein Song.

THINGS never come out right in this faulty world. Just as Professor Einstein, the scientist, arrives with a large crate of fresh relativity Gertrude Stein, the poet, goes hence.

For years I have been waiting to see these two massive minds brought under the same bulging roof, hoping then they'd take on a job which lesser intellects could never cope with. I wanted her to explain his theory and I wanted him to explain her poetry.

I even had the welcoming chorus fixed up.

For it's always fair weather, when good mysteries get together, with Einstein on the table and a Gertrude ringing clear!

What This Country Needs.

A LADY writes in, wishing to know what this country needs the most.

Well, dear madam, let's see: Would it be more citizens who'll quit causing the kind of government they get, for long enough to go to the polls, just once, and vote?

Or more patriots who'll quit waving Old Glory long enough to help smoke out some alien enemy hiding in the folds of the flag he hates?

Or fewer of those anti-Roosevelts who still go on the apparent assumption that when the President promised to give business a 'breathing spell,' he meant sneezing spell?

Or fewer of those pro-Roosevelts who still think any honest criticism of the man in the White House is just the same as breaking the second commandment?

But, lady, since you're asking me, I say what this country needs most is a Mae West joke to end all Mae West jokes.

Mrs. John Methven and daughter of Middletown, Ohio, spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Slekmann.

L. A. Thompson, W. C. Weaver and Albert Pettit made a trip to Frankfort Tuesday after a load of canned beef for the Relief.

Harry Cress, who has been employed in Ohio for several months, is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Cress.

The dove season is open, and those who have been hunting them say they are not very plentiful.

HEBRON SCHOOL NEWS
At last the fatal day arrived. On yesterday the Freshmen boys were initiated into the Hi-Y Club amid the laughter from the people who were present to witness this sober affair. The program consisted of a Bible reading by Geo. Riley, a number by the quartet, a song by the timid Freshmen and last but not least the initiation proper. The Freshmen were compelled to wear sacks with holes cut in the corners so that they might see what was going to befall them. The initiation was merely a physical exertion which very strangely ended in some mishap for the Freshmen. The measuring machine seemed to be crossed in some way with the power line and the poor Freshmen always seemed to get shocked at every try to measure them. The lung tester seemed to have a bad leak and somehow got into the eyes of the poor candidates. It seems that nothing goes right for the Freshmen boys.

A Handicraft Club was organized by two Senior Girl Reserve Club girls, Bessie Reeves and Ruth Hodges. It is the sixth grade girls. At the first meeting we elected officers and at the second meeting we named our club and decided upon work for the coming year. The officers are President, Anna Lou Ralston; Secretary, Osceola Williams; Treasurer, Betty Williams. Inspiring talks, reports and pleasant fellowship with girls of other Girl Reserve Clubs made the stay at Conference a very pleasing one. The hospitality of the Crescent Springs girls was all one could wish for. Those who attended this meeting from Hebron were: Misses Mary Bess Cropper, Nannie L. Roberts, Vivian Hood, Evelyn Conrad, Josephine Grant, Mary Lou Lucy, Mary Marshal, Aubrey Long, Frances Siekman, Mary Cathryn Bullock and Dorothy Dunaway. The Club certainly should be full of ideas the remaining part of the school year.

On October 23 the Hi-Y Boys presented a man from WLW for a Chapel program. The various rooms of the school are grateful to these boys for this event of much merit, especially the Girl Reserve Club thanks these boys for taking the full responsibility of the expenses.

We are sorry that the Grade Chorus from this school did not win the tournament but we want to congratulate the ones who were successful, and we hope that our girls do better next time.

Don't you basket ball fans forget that the games of this season begin on November 1 at the Hamilton School Auditorium. Back them up this year as you have done in years past. We are expecting the teams to really go places this year in and out of the county, so help them by your presence and cheering.

Democratic Party Presents Program*for commonwealth's Advancement*PROMISES AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS

The Democratic and Republican platforms are so nearly similar on a number of major points that Lieutenant Governor Chandler has charged that Judge Swope "swiped" his platform. Mr. Chandler enunciated his platform in the primary. Promises, however, are valuable only if they are fulfilled. There will certainly be a Democratic majority in both Houses of the General Assembly in Frankfort. Mr. Chandler will have a complete Democratic Administration and is not tied up with any promises to return to bi-partisanship. He, therefore, can accomplish his program while Judge Swope would not be able to accomplish anything in Frankfort.

END UNCERTAINTY

The defeat of Mr. Chandler for Governor would introduce an era of uncertainty which causes distress to business and handicaps all progressive activity in the Commonwealth. Split responsibility in the era of Sampsonism or bi-partisanship resulted in job bartering in the Legislature, ripper bills, forcible ousters, many suits testing the Governor's acts and authority and a general deadlock preventing constructive action.

A POPULAR TICKET

Mr. Chandler and his associates on the Democratic ticket were nominated by the people in a Democratic primary. They are known throughout the State. Mr. Chandler and the nominee for Lieutenant Governor, usually referred to as the banner bearer's running mate, are familiarly known as "Happy and Keen." All nominees are able and well-known Kentuckians and their election will result from a popular outpouring of public sentiment which will inspire them and enable them to render better public service.

PRIMARY ELECTIONS

The Democratic Party complied with the compulsory primary law enacted by the General Assembly of Kentucky. The Republican Party as the result of the efforts of national fixers trying to undermine President Roosevelt called a convention and made "recommendations." This nullified the primary election law.

REPEAL THE SALES TAX

Mr. Chandler has fought the sales tax from the time it first was proposed in the Legislature. He stands now against its re-enactment or continuation.

SUPPORT THE PRESIDENT

President Franklin D. Roosevelt is looking to Kentucky to endorse his program. The eyes of the nation are turned toward this State and the defeat of Mr. Chandler will be interpreted nationally as a repudiation of Roosevelt just when recovery is well under way.

SAVE BY ECONOMY

Mr. Chandler has estimated that millions can be saved by economy and thought reorganization of the State Government along the lines suggested by auditors who studied the State's administrative structure. Property owners, taxpayers and all interested in business of any kind will be assisted by such an economical government as he will give.

SUPPORT FOR SCHOOLS

Mr. Chandler is in favor of a $12 per capita for the schools of Kentucky. He is pledged to free textbooks for the public school children. He advocates reasonable salaries for teachers and elimination of politics from the schools. On the ticket with him is Harry W. Peters, for Superintendent of Public Instruction, one of the outstanding educators of Kentucky.

FRIEND OF FARMER

Farmers are supporting the Democratic ticket because of their interest in seeing the Roosevelt program for keeping up prices of farm products continued. They also feel that in Senator Garth Ferguson, who has done so much to make the State Fair a great institution, they have a true friend in the candidate for commissioner of Agriculture.

CHAMPION OF LABOR

The Kentucky State Federation of Labor endorsed Mr. Chandler at its State convention in Frankfort. The four railroad brotherhoods have endorsed his candidacy. United Mine Workers of America are supporting him. John L. Lewis, outstanding national labor leader, will visit Kentucky in his behalf.

NEW DEAL

IS PROPOSED BY CONSOLIDATED TELEPHONE COMPANY AS NEW OFFICIALS STRIVE TO GIVE THE PUBLIC BETTER SERVICE

Mr. E. G. Stephenson, new general manager of the Consolidated Telephone Co., has reported that every effort is being made to give the people of Boone county telephone service that will be satisfactory, and that the new management has plans of many improvements that will get under way just as soon as possible.

One of the late improvements was on the Hebron exchange, which has been replaced by an automatic control system and the switchboard that was at Hebron has been removed to Burlington. Also the town of Burlington will be benefited by all new cables being installed throughout the town. Mr. Stephenson also spoke of several other improvements, which, if he can put through, will certainly be beneficial to everyone.

Dependable telephone service is one of the chief factors that will tend to up-build any county to meet the present day needs. However, the telephone service in the past few months has not been what it should be due to circumstances beyond control. But now the Co. pledges themselves to give to the people of Boone county service that will be appreciated and that everyone can look forward to many improvements within the next few months.

The new officials are as follows: E. G. Stephenson, General manager, to replace C. O. Hennessey, and R. L. Morgan of Rushville, secretary and treasurer.

TAX EXEMPTION WARRANTS

All non-contracting tobacco growers who wish to apply for tax exemptions under the Kerr-Smith Tobacco Act for their 1935 tobacco crop should fill out an application bank at the County Agent's office not later than November 20th, according to John E. Crigler, Secretary, Tobacco Association.

Only one application should be filled out for each non-contracting farm by the operator of the farm, who may be the landowner or cash tenant. In case the operator is unable or unwilling to file an application, the share-tenant or share-cropper may file an application. Each application is to be signed by all of the persons on the farm having an interest in the 1935 crop, who desire to obtain an allotment. If any person refuses to sign an application, no allotment shall be recommended for that person.

The information necessary to fill out an application is:

1. The acreage of tobacco grown on the farm during each of the years 1929 to 1935.
2. The acreage of tobacco grown during each of the years 1929 to 1935 by each of the persons producing the 1935 crop no matter what farm the tobacco was grown on.

D. R. Blythe was ill Monday of this week. Mr. Blythe has been suffering from a severe cold, which seems to be a very common epidemic this fall.

PLANS MADE

FOR THIRD ANNUAL SHOW AND SALE OF 4-H CLUB TOBACCO

Plans have just been completed for holding the 4-H Club Tobacco Show and Sale at the Kenton Loose Leaf Tobacco Warehouse in Covington on Saturday, December 14, according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

The tobacco is to be delivered to the warehouse on Friday, December 13th. It is not necessary this year that the club member show his full crop. He must, however, show at least four grades—Flyings, Trash, Lugs and Bright Leaf.

The tobacco will be judged and premiums given on best basket of Flyings, Trash, Lugs, Bright Leaf, Red Leaf and Tips. There will also be Crop Awards, Record Book awards and County awards. Complete record books are required for club members to compete in the show. Five crops of over 150 pounds each qualify a county for county awards.

NOTICE

An error appeared on the Tax Payer's Notice Bills and advertising for the Verona precinct. This should have been November 30th, instead of December 30th, but Sheriff Cotton wishes to inform the taxpayers that he will be at Verona to collect taxes on Monday, December 30th, as stated on bills and advertising.

JAS. E. POOLE, NOTED LIVE-STOCK SPECIALIST, TO SPEAK

Entries in the Fourteenth Annual Fat Cattle Show to be held at the Bourbon Stock Yards in Louisville, November 13th, 14th and 15th, are the largest in history, according to Adolph S. Montgomery, Chairman of the Executive Committee. One thousand calves are now being finished by members of the 4-H Club and Smith-Hughes classes. Consignments will arrive from 36 counties. Adult classes also number one thousand head.

A total of $5,000 in cash prizes will be divided among the boys and girls showing calves, carloads, five and ten heads from counties showing carloads and counties having less than carloads, economic production and record books.

One of the outstanding events of the Show will be the banquet to be given at the Kentucky Hotel on Thursday night, November 14th, at which time James E. Poole, nationally-known authority on livestock and forecaster of livestock markets, will be one of the principal speakers. Cattle will be judged on Thursday, November 14th, and sold on the following day.

L. R. Barlow, of Union, agent for the Farmer's Mutual Fire Insurance Co., of Boone county, was in Burlington last Friday on business pertaining to his company.

CHICKEN THIEVES

MAKE TWO RAIDS IN PAST WEEK

Chicken thieves entered a poultry house belonging to W. L. Kirkpatrick last Friday night and stole 13 chickens and made a clean getaway with everything except the heads of the fowls which they pulled off and threw on the floor. The thieves were traced for some distance the following morning, but their footprints were lost when they reached the Burlington-Florence pike, where apparently they entered an automobile. Deputy Sheriff Frank Walton and Wm. C. Walton, in an effort to trace down the thieves, made a special trip to the city market to check on dressed poultry sold on Saturday, but no clues were discovered. It is believed that the chickens were dressed and peddled from house to house.

This quaint custom of beheading chickens immediately upon removing them from their perch was also practiced one night last week at D. H. Norris' farm of near Burlington. Several chickens were reported missing from this farm and no trace, other than that of the heads, was found.

Mr. Stephens was born November 3, 1885, in Boone near Union, Kentucky. ### TOBACCO CONTRACT

EASIER TO HANDLE

The new tobacco contract to cover the years of 1936-39 has been simplified and will be easier to administer, says a statement by C. M. Farrington, State Supervisor of Adjustment Programs.

In the first place the legal basis of the new contract calls for an advance rental payment, which made it necessary for the producer to show full legal control of all land covered by the contract. This involved obtaining signatures of all parties interested in the land and in many cases necessitated copies of court orders, papers of administration, powers of attorney, certified copies of cash rental agreements, and other legal documents, all of which took considerable time and proved trying to everyone concerned.

Payments under the new contract will be made but once a year, after the crop has been sold and after the operator has certified to full compliance for the contract year. The Secretary of Agriculture, therefore, is not so much concerned with proof of ownership or interest in the land, but rather is concerned with the operator's performance. If the person who signs as operator shows at the end of each year that all terms of the contract have been met, then payment will be made on the basis of performance rather than upon the basis of legal control of the land.

The contract has been drawn up with a view of eliminating unnecessary items which complicate auditing and acceptance by the Secretary. The contract will show no yearly acreage and production data nor any supporting statistical material. The only figures on the contract will be an entry showing the base acreage and the base production for the farm. This will be determined before the producer signs.

One person, to be designated, as the operator, will sign the contract. Of particular interest is the new provision whereby the operator may designate a substitute payee who will be eligible to receive the adjustment payment in the event of incapacity or death of the operator.

Contract signers agree to limit acreage and production to the allotments prescribed each year by the Secretary of Agriculture, which in the case of burley cannot be more than 50 per cent. In other words, the maximum downward adjustment for burley will be 50 per cent.

The Secretary will announce the production percentage on or before January 1 each year, with the exception of 1936 when it will be made on or before February 1st.

Robert Hensley, who is attending University of Kentucky, was home to spend the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Hensley, of Burlington.

BOONE COUNTY HERD—SECOND HIGH SHELBY BOONE-CARROLL, D H I A IN SEPTEMBER

The Purebred Jersey herd of O. R. Russ was second high in average production of milk and butter fat in the Shelby-Boone-Carroll county Dairy Herd Improvement Association during the month of September.

Mr. Russ's herd consists of eight purebred Jerseys. The herd made an average production of 702 lbs. of milk and 37 pounds of butter fat for the month of September.

WHEAT MEETING

A wheat meeting to explain the 1936-39 A-A-A wheat contract was held at the Court House in Burlington last Wednesday night and several applications were signed, according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

All wheat producers who desire to sign A-A-A wheat contracts should file an application at the County Agent's office at an early date.

A B Renaker attended a testimonial dinner at the Kentucky Hotel in Louisville last Friday evening given in honor of Mr. W. T. Beckham, State Manager of the Home Owners Loan Corporation. Mr. Beckham was presented a beautiful Radio by the 125 employees attending.

Mr. Beckham is resigning as State Manager to accept the appointment as Clerk of the United States Court in his district. As no applications for Home Loans are being accepted now, A. B. says he has joined the unemployed as far as his services are needed in making appraisals.

Mr. Al Rogers, of Bellevue, was a business caller here Monday morning.

30TH BIRTHDAY

OF PEOPLES DEPOSIT BANK

The Peoples Deposit Bank, of Burlington, which is known throughout the state as one of the strongest and most resourceful banks in this section of the country has arrived at its thirtieth birthday. This is one of the few banks which survived the entire depression without having to borrow money, and this is a credit to the entire administration of the bank as well as it is an enlightenment to its depositors and borrowers.

This bank was formerly located in what is now known as the Farmer's Mutual Fire Insurance Building, but in 1927 it was merged with the Boone County Bank and was moved to the present site, which is one of the most beautiful structures in the county.

The first president of The Peoples Deposit Bank was the late B. W. Adams, who also was County Court Clerk for three terms. He was succeeded by the late W. L. B. Rouse who in turn was followed by the late C. H. Youell. Upon the death of Mr. Youell the present President, Judge N. E. Riddell, was elected and has served in an able manner since.

Only three of the original directors are still living. They are: A. W. Corn, who is also vice-president, Henry Clore, and W. P. Beemon. The other directors are R. S. Cowen, Al Rogers, N. E. Riddell, C. F. Blankenbaker, F. L. McGlasson and Dr. S. B. Nunneley.

Much credit for the efficient management of the affairs of the bank is due cashier A. B. Renaker, who has held this position since its establishment. Other officers of the bank are Miss Nell Martin, assistant cashier, L. C. Beemon, asst. cashier, G. S. Kelly, assistant cashier, and C. L. Cropper, assistant cashier. The latter two assistant cashiers were formerly connected with the Boone County Deposit Bank but when the two establishments were consolidated they became affiliated with the Peoples Bank.

The Peoples Deposit Bank started with a capital of $20,000, one half of which was paid in on the opening day, November 5, 1905. In 1919 the capital was increased to $50,000 and the present capital is $50,000 with a surplus and undivided profits of $50,000.

This bank is an establishment of which Boone county citizens should be proud. It has weathered the storms of thirty years with little difficulty and has given service unsurpassed by few banks.

IN EARLY RETURNS FROM STATE ELECTION

CHANDLER'S MAJORITY WILL EXCEED 75,000

More Than 1,000,000 Citizens Visit Polls—4,345 Votes Cast in Boone County—Several Killed at Polls on Day of Election.

More than 1,000,000 votes were cast Tuesday in Kentucky's state-wide election, unofficial reports from the county seats showed Tuesday night. This total shattered the old record of 975,290 set by the Roosevelt-Hoover balloting in 1932.

TABELING OPENS NEW STORE IN COVINGTON

The Recorder's readers will be interested in the announcement in this issue that Tabeling's Dry Goods Store, 412 Pike Street near Main, Covington, has been changed to a modern five-cent to one-dollar store. The dry goods store built an enviable reputation due to 40 years of honest merchandising and fair dealing. The entire store has been remodeled and stocked with new goods. The public is invited to visit the store and inspect its great variety of merchandise.

RENTAL CHECKS APPROVED $766.00

Notice was received from Washington the past week that 40 A-A-A tobacco rental payments in the amount of $766.00 had been approved for payment, according to John E. Crigler, Secretary Tobacco Association.

The checks should be in some time within the next ten days or two weeks. This leaves approximately 60 rental checks that have not been approved. Each contract signer will be notified when his check is received.

The local P. T. A. met on Thursday afternoon at the school building, at which time the date for the Operetta was set for Saturday night, December 7th. Please keep the time in mind and watch for further announcements.

OBITUARY

Many hearts were made sad when the news rang out Sunday afternoon October 27th of the passing of Sara Crisler Campbell, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Crisler.

She was a devoted daughter and a kind and loving friend, her heart was always with those she loved and who are now bowed in grief. "When we so suddenly have to part it gives us terrible pain."

But we shall be joined in heart and hope to meet again. She has been a member of the Florence Baptist church for several years and was a faithful worker in the Masters vineyard.

Sara was ready and willing to go and when the summons came passed on with a smile. Now the days are longer.

And her tasks are done Somewhere the heart is stronger. And the golden crown has won.

Funeral services were held at the home Wednesday afternoon, conducted by her pastor, the Rev. DeMolsey, who paid a beautiful tribute to her memory. She was tenderly laid to rest in the Florence cemetery amid a bank of beautiful flowers to await a brighter day.

At our fireside sad and lonely Often will our bosoms swell, At the remembrance of the story And the one we loved so well.

L. L. C.

BULLITTSTVILLE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Preaching 2nd and 4th Sundays 11 A. M. and 8 P. (M. E. S. T.) Church School every Sunday 10 A. M. Sermon Topic Sunday, November 10 — Morning Hour — "Shadows Across The World." Evening — "The Sacred Writings." We invite you to worship with us in all our services.

Noble Lucas, Pastor.

There were 4345 votes cast in Boone County, an increase of 1,319 over the election of four years ago. The votes by precincts in Boone County are as follows: Beaver, 185; Bellevue, 210; Bullittsville, 176; Burlington No. 1, 237; Burlington No. 2, 217; Carlton, 206; Constance, 264; Florence No. 1, 350; Florence No. 2, 371; Hamilton, 193; Hebron, 258; Petersburg No. 1, 230; Petersburg No. 2, 184; Union, 298; Verona, 245; Walton No. 1, 299; Walton No. 2, 322.

Due to the Brock-Gilbert "delayed count" law the final results will not be known for several days.

Repeal of the mandatory prohibition clause in the state constitution, and substitution of "local option" was endangered by the turnout of voters in rural dry sections. A proposal to authorize old age pensions by constitutional amendment also was on the ballots, but only a meager effort was made to acquaint the voters with this issue and it was believed that it would be defeated. Instead, however, a large elderly vote was cast which may have meant victory of the proposal.

Leaders of both parties predicted a large majority but neither of the candidates for Governor made any such predictions.

At Hindman, in the Eastern Kentucky mountains, two men were shot to death Tuesday night in front of a store in the main business district. Two persons were injured, one seriously, in a shooting and cutting scrape at a voting place at Mitchellsburg in Boyle county. Elsewhere the election was quiet.

The vote in Boone indicates that both Constitutional Amendments will carry.

It has been predicted and all indications point to 100,000 majority in favor of A. B. (Happy) Chandler and the entire Democratic ticket as this paper goes to press Wednesday afternoon, at 1:00 P. M.

Jno. H. Grimes, V-President and A. B. Renaker, Secretary-Treasurer of The Boone County National Farm Loan Association are in Louisville Wednesday and Thursday of this week attending a two day meeting with the Federal Land Bank where an attendance of 800 officers of Farm Loan Associations are expected. The principal address will be made by Hon. Wm. I. Myers, Governor, Farm Credit Administration, Washington, D. C. at a banquet Wednesday evening at seven o'clock at the Brown Hotel.

WE CAN'T BE NEUTRAL IN THIS WAR

There is one war in which our country cannot remain neutral—war against fire.

That war has been going on for many years. It will never end completely—but good soldiers can win many valuable victories. During its course, the enemy has caused destruction running into the billions of dollars—and many thousands of lives.

The war exists because of individual carelessness, individual ignorance, individual lethargy. Fire prevention is almost entirely an individual matter. It is up to each property owner, each manager of a business, each farmer. The best building and inspection laws are impotent in the face of public indifference—the finest fire department can do relatively little, if the public refuses to cooperate.

It is not only a duty but a privilege to enlist in the war against fire. And the duties are simple. Learn what causes fire, and how fire may be prevented. Then apply that knowledge—today, tomorrow, every day in the year. Fix that faulty wiring—and have it done by an experienced electrician. Check that old furnace, now that the cold season is upon you. Throw away those old rags and newspapers and magazines that you have stacked in the attic and basement—and that you will never use. Store that gasoline or benzine in approved, safe containers. And remember that the place for matches and cigarettes is the ash tray—not the rug, the bed, or the garage floor.

We can fight fire successfully. During the last few years substantial progress has been made, and the loss is now well under the $500,000,000 a year level established not so long ago. That progress should serve to remind us how much more remains to be done—and how easy it is to achieve definite results once we really go after them.

A COUNTY AGENT AND HIS INFLUENCE

"When he had been in a community you could tell it," said one. "Why," said another, "in 1933 he was sent as temporary county agent to handle the cotton plow, up in a county that never had had a county agent and before the campaign was over, its farmers were clamoring for him permanently."

The crop production control program is bringing about one good result entirely aside from the effect on prices. Many counties that never before realized the value of a county agent now do so. The above typical conversation between two farmers causes The Progressive Farmer to comment as follows:

"To any young man or woman who wants to make a life on the farm count for more than so many years of housekeeping or so many crops produced, we commend these memories that L. H. Marlatt left behind him in the minds of his Georgia co-workers. While his specific title for a number of years before his death was extension dairy specialist, his influence was not bounded by purebred cows, nor cheese factories, nor increased milk production.

"The foundation of a happy, satisfying farm life is founded on good crops and good gardens, good cooking and good gardens, good home and farm management, but they are not enough. There must be art and music and books and social life, friendship and all-around rural co-operation. Especially under present-day conditions do we need neighborhood discussion, community development, and teamwork in all rural activities.

"We repeat: It is not all of life to farm. Thrive blessed will be those of the coming generation who, not content merely to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before, will help make the South (as Marlatt was helping make it) not merely 'A Land of Plenty' but also 'A Land of Beauty and a Land of Rural Comradeship.'"

WILL WAR TOUCH US?

We don't believe that there is much chance of the United States being seriously affected by the war between Italy and Ethiopia. There is no such emotional reaction, so far as we can see, as there was in the beginning of the Great War when everybody in America was taking sides vehemently.

If the expected war is confined to a conflict between the Italians and the Ethiopians, it is difficult to see how any American interests would be seriously imperiled. All the trade that we have with Ethiopia you could put in your hat. Our exports to Italy have been steadily declining for years and there is no occasion to worry about them.

The real possible danger to the United States would be another general European war. That is not outside the realm of possibility. It may not come as a direct result of the present exchange of belligerent gestures between Italy and Great Britain, but all of the folks who make a study of international relations seem to think that sooner or later, some incident will set off the fireworks and involve all of the Great Powers in another catastrophic conflict.

The thing that brought us into the last war was the assumption by the belligerent powers of the right to dictate to us where our ships might and might not navigate the free seas, an assumption which culminated in Germany's declaration of unrestricted submarine warfare. It is conceivable that a situation might develop in which the free passage of American commerce through the Mediterranean and the Suez Canal would be threatened or prohibited by some other nation. It would not take very many incidents, such as the deliberate sinking of American ships, to stir the American people to the point of going to war again.

We hope nothing of the sort will happen. We do not think it is likely to happen. But we must not lose sight of the fact that no nation can remain completely isolated from all the other nations of the world, and that anything which upsets the international situation may easily affect us, too.

Editorial of the Week

The Home Town First

There has been a great deal written and said about trading at home and of course some of it is junk, but the great truth remains that every dollar spent in the home town helps to build it up and make the entire section more prosperous, while every dollar spent away from the home town is gone forever.

It is true that local firms send the largest part of each dollar you spend with them outside for goods of all kinds, our part of each dollar you spend with them stays at home to rent, taxes, salaries, lights, heat, etc., and a tiny part for profit. That part of the dollar helps to build our community, it helps to make property values better, to meet the expenses of running our government and our schools, to provide jobs for people who make markets for our farmers, and in every keep the local wheels turning.

That part of the dollar spent away from that goes toward those same items of rent, taxes, salaries, etc., is spent in some other community to help that community build up, make progress and become prosperous. Did you ever stop to think that if every farmer in our trading area bought everything here, a hundred more families paying taxes. And if every person living in the community, and making their living from the community were to buy exclusively from local firms, it would provide another 100 jobs.

It is often said: "But I can't find what I want here." True in some cases. Why? Because too many of us buy outside before we look at home. If all of us brought exclusively at home our merchants could carry EVER-THING we might want. They cannot carry such stocks when they know that a certain percentage of our people are going outside to buy. It is so, as said, "But such and such is too high here. I can buy it for less elsewhere." True in some cases. Why? Because too many of us buy outside. If the local merchants had the volume and turnover they could cut prices to meet any competition. And that is only true in some lines. On most things our local merchants DO meet the best prices you can get anywhere.

If you figured up everything you buy in the course of a year, we believe that you would find it could have been bought CHEAPER here, if you figure the expense of buying outside. If you go to some other town or city to shop, the expense of the trip or part of it, should be figured in. If you buy from a mail order house, the cost of sending the order and the transportation of the goods must be figured in. Then you open run into trouble. When you buy from the local merchants you can see what you are getting and you know they will be right there, at any time, to make anything good that is not entirely satisfactory.

So all in all it might be a wise idea for all of us to try the home town first. We are sure that we would find it paid in the long run. —Hickman Courier.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS

How does business compare with a year ago? It depends on where you live—but for the majority of people, it is better.

In all but six states of the Union September business activity was greater than it was a year before, according to the U. S. News. In three of those states—New York, Virginia and Louisiana—it was worse. In the other three—Nevada, North Carolina and Texas—it was unchanged.

The United States will join with Britain, Japan, France, Italy and other Nations in a naval parley early in December. We used to think these affairs were held for the purpose of reducing armament, but the figures show that the thing has worked out the other way round. Governments talk peace while they prepare for war.

It is estimated that the national government debt at the end of the New Deal's first term next year will be $35,000,000,000. Based on thirty million families in the United States, that leaves an average debt of $1,166.66 per family.

A man has not learned to live until, among other accomplishments, he can say what he wants to, or having nothing to say, can keep quiet.

How to win a war? There is only one way. Stay out of it.

GUAM

Guam is the largest and the most southern in position of the Marianas Islands. It was discovered March 6 1521 by Gerardo de Magallanes. He named the group of islands 'La-teen Sails Islands' because of the shape of the sails on the native proas, but changed the name to 'Ladrones' because of the thieving propensity of the inhabitants. The first white man to settle on Guam was a man named Pedro a survivor of the wreck of the Concepcion lost near Tinian a neighboring island in 1538.

Guam was captured by the U. S. without a struggle June 20, 1898 by the U. S. S. Charleston commanded by Captain Henry Glass U. S. Navy. The Spanish governor Don Juan Marina his staff and troops were carried away as prisoners of war.

Guam is thirty miles in length and four to eight miles wide, the climate is tropical has a rainfall of ninety-one inches annually. Since the United States has owned Guam it has built a splendid school system, a hospital, and seventy miles of concrete road. The principal product of export is copra more than 4,000,000 pounds per year. Guam being a Naval station is a closed port. The six months I was there my communication with the outside world was by radio and commercial cable.

I KNOW

(May be sung to the air of "Trees") I know that from my childhood day His love has led me all the way;

That when temptation lingered near My secret prayer He bent to hear.

My feet oft slipped o'er stumbling stones, But still He claimed me as His own.

And when o'er unseen snares I fell He whispered, "Fear not; all is well."

I know, no matter who my foe, His wonderful love will banish woe. That He who counts the birds and beasts

Will surely care for me, the least.

So help me trust and always feel That He is near, my soul to heal.

With that St. Valentine's day massacre emblazoned in red letters on the civic score board, Chicago still holds the lead for a single clean-up, but you can't say the boys around New York aren't trying. Dame Rumor hath it that very few of the gentlemen in permanent residence there are entirely satisfied with Alcatraz—the life is so confining, for one thing—but, even so, my guess is that Mr. Al Capone, snug as a bug under a rug, is kind of glad about one fact: that long-term policy of health and casualty insurance which Uncle Sam issued to him—with the clause permitting travel eliminated—still has quite some time to run.

Irvin S. Cobb.

Borah for President.

BILL ALLEN WHITE says Senator Borah is good presidential timber. Well, the Republicans might go further and fare worse—they probably will.

Once I was sure most of the smart tricksters were naturally Republicans, just as most of the honest idiots were naturally Democrats. Lately, though, the Republicans have borrowed many of the sterling half-witted tactics of the opposition. Where there's a choice of two ends, they'll take both.

Besides, to any set of party bosses, Borah, as a candidate, would be absolutely hopeless. He makes up his own mind, instead of sending it to some reliable old guard laundry. He says what he believes. He believes what he says. When he talks, he talks about issues, not about Borah.

Pigskin and Sheepskin.

ONCE the student sought the college. Now the college seeks the student. Preferably her scouts seek the lad who perhaps is muscle-bound from the neck up and may have a head shaped like a pineapple cheese, but, if snappy and supple otherwise, he brings deathless fame to dear old alma mater by making the all-American and graduating with the degree of PFP—perfect forward passer. So it's watch the pigskin, boys, and the sheepskin will take care of itself.

Many a jerkwater university has been made immortal by one noble cub built on the general lines of a piano-mover. And with a whole team of such scholastic prodigies, she can hire a coach at four times the salary the prexy gets and amount to something as an educational center.

Well, why not? The nations most capable of governing themselves are those whose youth learned discipline, self-control and sportsmanship.

Hands Across the Sea.

VARIOUS subtle diplomatic tricks having failed to lure us into pulling England's chestnuts out of the fire for her—and who ever saw England with a burnt paw if there was a sucker handy—it's almost time for our devoted kinsmen of the mother country to dig up the line about hands across the sea and that other equally lovely line which goes so well when played on your Anglo-saxophone—the one about blood being thicker than water.

No use reopening ancient sores, but students of our Revolutionary history will perchance recall that the first hands across the sea were what you might call hired hands, being Hessian mercenaries rented at so much a head to conquer us. Whereas of later years, the most familiar hands across the sea were those greedily outstretched to clutch the Yankee's dollars, then clenched into angry fists did the said Yankee so much as hint he'd like a little something on account.

So, while the League of Nations stew in its own thin and impotent gravy, let us acknowledge that blood is indeed thicker than water—but piously continue to give thanks for 3,000 miles of the water.

The Horse and Buggy.

FRONT pages came packed with tidings to stir the pulse—war, earthquake, a famous woman fier in a crash; death for men in high places; another Cuban hurricane making up; a tragic finish for a great cartoonist whose wit and skill gave joy to millions. It's as though fate had her grim wash day, too.

Even so, the budget of news seems strangely incomplete. Let's look the flaming headlines through again to see what's lacking. Oh, yes, this must be it:

None of the younger Roosevelts got pinched over the week-end for speeding or even for violating traffic rules. Possibly the returns from the back-pedals aren't all in yet. Anyhow, the President has no cause to complain that the boys belong to the horse-and-buggy age.

FOR YOUR CONSIDERATION

Things began to get lively in Administration circles in Washington as soon as the President packed away his fishing tackle and got behind Government machinery again in Washington. Evidently Presidents have to win the clock and put out the cat for the American government and when the head of the house is away the clock runs down and Tommy goes cruising in the moonlight beyond the back fence.

Everyone is glad to see President Roosevelt back, looking hale and healthy.

THE HAPPY MAN

Was born in the city of Regeneration, in the parish of Repentance unto Life; he was educated in the school of Obedience; he now lives in the plains of Perseverance and works at his trade of Diligence; notwithstanding which he has a large estate in the country of Christian Contentment. He many times does jobs of self-denial; he wears a plain garment of humility and has a better suit to put on, called the robe of Christ's righteousness; he often walks in the valley of Self-abasement and sometimes climbs the hill of Spiritual-mindedness; he breakfasts every morning on prayer and sups every evening on the same; he has meat to eat that the world knows not of and his drink is the sincere milk of the Word. Thus, happy he lives and happy he dies. Happy indeed, is every man who has gospel submission in his will, due order in his affections, sound peace in his conscience, sanctifying grace in his heart, and a crown of glory on his head. Happy is the life and glorious the death of such a man.

EZEKIEL TEACHES PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY

LESSON TEXT—Ezekiel 33:7-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God.—Romans 14:12.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A Prophet Encourages His People.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Watchman on Duty.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Does God Care What I Do?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Individuals Accountable to God.

Ezekiel prophesied in the land of the captivity. The purpose of his ministry was threefold: (1) To show the house of Israel that they were in captivity because of their sins (14:23). (2) To show that God is righteous in his visitation of judgment upon them (7:8, 9). (3) To sustain their faith by assuring them of their national restoration, the punishment of their enemies and their final exaltation among the nations when Messiah shall reign.

I. God's Sovereign Right to the Souls of Men (18:1-4).
Every man is personally responsible to God.

II. The Moral Obligation of Sons to Their Father (Ezek. 18:14-20).

While the law of heredity gives the child a sinful nature and when the child arrives at the age of moral responsibility it begins to sin. God holds such responsible for their deeds.

III. Ezekiel's Responsibility (Ezek. 33:1-9).

As a prophet of God certain responsibilities were imposed upon him. There is a sense in which every disciple of Christ is a witness for him and therefore is responsible for the giving of his testimony to sinners. His responsibility is set forth under the figure of a watchman. Two things were required of a watchman.

1. To hear the words of God's mouth (v. 7). The source of the message of every minister and Sunday School teacher is God's holy Word. Just as the prophet did not originate his message but received it of God's mouth, so it should be with every minister and Sunday School teacher.

2. To sound the warning (v. 7). After hearing God's message he was to speak it out and proclaim it to the people. A watchman today is both to hear and to speak. The people are to be warned of the impending danger. Failure to sound the alarm makes the watchman guilty of the blood of the sinner.

IV. God's Attitude Toward the Sinner (vv. 10, 11).

God has declared in his Word that unfaithfulness on the part of his people would cause them to "perish among the heathen," that they would "pine away in their iniquity" (Lev. 26:33, 39). In view of this pronouncement some are disposed to say that their case is hopeless. To meet this attitude of despair the prophet assured them that God had no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that his sincere desire was for the wicked to turn from their way and live. Regardless of what their past had been, they were given the assurance that the future was bright if they heeded God's command and plea. No one need be despair because of sin, for God's grace is greater than human sin.

V. The Sinner's Personal Responsibility (vv. 12-20).

God created the members of the race personal beings, giving them freedom of choice. They have moral discernment enabling them to distinguish between the right and the wrong. They choose, therefore, according to the quality of their being.

The following principles govern the sinner:

1. Past righteousness will not avail for present sins (v. 12). When a righteous man turns to iniquity, his past seeming righteousness will be of no avail.

2. Past sins do not make impossible present acceptance with God (vv. 12-15). By virtue of the operation of the law of habit, every sinful act makes it harder for the sinner to repent, but God's grace is such that if the sinner repents God will forgive and restore.

3. Restitution required (vv. 13, 16). The proof of penitence is that, so far as possible, the sinner makes amends for wrongs done.

4. God's ways are equal (vv. 17-20). God holds man responsible for his own deeds. The child is not condemned because of the deeds of his father, nor can it be said that the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge. This does not do away with the law of heredity. Regardless of what one's past life has been, God's grace in Jesus Christ blots out his record and he stands accepted in the Beloved.

FIRST BILLION DOLLAR COTTON CROP SINCE 1929

A billion dollar crop this year is prophesied by Cotton Administrator Cobb in an article in the current Progressive Farmer, which says:

"The prospect as I write this is for a billion-dollar cotton crop—the first since 1929.

"Nor will this mean simply that cotton farmers will receive 1,000 million dollars this year against 484 millions in 1932—893 millions in 1933, and 882 millions in 1934. This increase to a billion dollars might mean little if the farmer's propoalso increased. But it has.

"In 1932 the cotton farmer received for his cotton only 1 per cent of the national income—$1 out of each $100. Last year his proportion of the national income had increased; he received $1.70 out of each $100 of national income. In 1935 with a billion dollars in prospect for the cotton crop (from market prices plus parity payments), the Southern farmer's proportion of the national income should be even better than in 1934.

"In other words, the promise is that the 11,798,000-bale crop of the present year will bring more than twice as many dollars as the 13,000,000-bale crop of 1932 brought. amdt eese, eels, ees AO D OD "To put it another way, the gross cash income from cotton and cotton seed for the current season promises to be about 16 per cent over last season. As the prices of goods purchased by cotton farmers will not be appreciably higher, this indicates a vastly increased net buying power all over Dixie. It should lead to further liquidation of old debts and to continued and increasing demand for all the things the cotton farmer had to forego during the lean years."

7 SURVIVE OCEAN SHIPWRECK; TELL OF FIVE WHO DIED

Motorship Hurry On Swept to Doom in Storm on Atlantic Coast.

Jidique, Nova Scotia.—Seven half-dead seamen were washed ashore near here with the news that five other companions on the Halifax motor vessel Hurry On had died in a storm which capsized their little ship 12 hours earlier.

Six of the survivors reached shore in a battered and oarless lifeboat after a night that had seen death pick off their five companions one by one. One of the dead was still in the boat.

A seventh living but unconscious member of the crew was cast ashore by the rollers. They abandoned ship off Henry Island, 23 miles from here.

Fire of the six men in the boat were unconscious when it beached, and only one was able to crawl to a fisherman's home to bring help.

Captain A. V. Gardner, fifty-four-year-old York-shireman, died.

The Hurry On, owned by the Unus Shipping company, was bound for Montreal from Halifax when the storm swept down. As she heeled before the northeast her cargo of corn shifted, forcing her down on one side. Oil poured on the water failed to help, and finally the men had to take to the boat.

Through the long night, then, the shivering seamen watched as one after another died of exposure.

Seaman G. Carmichael of St. Ann, N. S., told how his shipmates died. "The lifeboat capsized," he said. "We all crawled back aboard, but we had lost everything."

"Shortly after that the boat upset again. First Mate Alex Mackenzie never came back. He was drowned."

"Alex Wait died two hours later of exposure. Before long he was washed overboard. Those still alive had all they could do to keep in the boat themselves."

Drifts Alive to Shore. "In another two hours Captain Gardner died. He died of exposure like Wait. His body was washed overboard."

"Macaulay died soon after the captain, and we couldn't keep his body in the boat either."

"We were just an hour away from land when Fraser Maclean died. His body was brought ashore."

Chief Engineer Herman Scade of Hamburg, Germany, said: "The waves were mountainous and it was absolutely impossible to keep the bodies of the dead men in the boat."

"It was filled with water. There was nothing to ball with, and, even if there had been, we wouldn't have been able to use it."

"When we left the ship the boat was fully equipped, but we lost everything the first time it turned over."

Somewhere in the long drift to land Second Engineer Albert Boudreau of Halifax was washed overboard with the dead men. But he kept afloat and, unconscious, drifted ashore down the beach from the lifeboat.

American Indians' War Whoop Startles Chinese

Hong Kong.—A band of full-blooded American Indians invaded Hong Kong on a "round-the-world tour," startling the Chinese with one of their native warwhoops, rendered by request.

There were seven in the party, all from the Osage reservation, in Oklahoma. Their boat, the President Polk, gave them a thrill by buckling its bow in landing at the Kowloon docks, slightly damaging the wharf.

"The object of our tour," Paul Beartrack, spokesman for the party, said, "is to help educate our children. By showing them some of the geography they will study about later on, they ought to have more of an interest in their work."

At home, Beartrack makes his fortune by raising cattle and boring for oil.

"I'm a lot better off, I know, than most other Indians in America, and I realize that my children are going to have an even greater opportunity to progress than I have had, but even so, we have taken long strides since the white man first occupied our country. Some of us are still pretty backward, but there are such types among all races of people and the whole should not be judged by a few."

His Bride Sleeps Under Blankets; She's Missing

Monroe, Mich.—Returning from a Niagara falls honeymoon, John Weisberg, twenty-two, discovered at a Monroe tourist camp that his bride was missing. She had been sleeping under blankets in the rear of his car. Later he found her at a gas station near the Michigan-Ohio line where unknown to him she had got out of the car and gone into a wash room. John had driven away thinking she was still under the blankets.

Elks Grow Effeminate

Bankt, Alta.—A possibility that members of the elk clan are growing more effeminate—if an elk can be effeminate—was seen here recently when a large bull elk was observed trotting down a game trail with a woman's dainty swimming suit draped over one prong of his huge antlers.

It was believed the animal blundered across a clothesline and neglected to remove the colorful garment from his horns.

HEBRON SCHOOL NEWS

We've always heard that 'a bad start assures a good ending' but we're hoping that the Cardinals are going to change that old proverb into 'a good beginning assures a good ending.' The basketball teams really started out well on November 1, the boys having won over the Hamilton five by a score of 15 to 14 and the girls winning 11 to 7. But remember, fans, a little backing will help the Cards a lot, so attending the games as much as possible.

This week the Hebron Cardinals will play the Cold Springs teams on the home court on Friday, Nov. 8.

We hardly know how to thank everyone for the cooperation shown in the putting over of our Halloween Carnival. We are certainly pleased over its success and we feel sure that every one who attended enjoyed at least part of it. Several had their fortunes told, others fished for prizes, while still others drank cider and ate pie, homemade candy and pop-corn. The program was very interesting one starting with the masquerade parade and continuing with side-splitting comedy playlets, of which were: "The Death of Ima Grouch," "The Luck Hunt," and "And the Lamp Went Out." We know that the students will enjoy having more books to read and for references.

To have no school Friday, the Girl As the 7th and 8th grades Reserve and Hi-Y clubs had their meetings Thursday afternoon. The Senior and Junior Girl Reserves and the Sixth Grade Hobby Club had a joint meeting in order that reports from Girl Reserve Annual Conference might be given. The following reports were submitted: Banquet—Evelyn Conrad; Personality and Charm—Mary Marshall; Finance—Aubrey Long; Music—Dorothy Dunaway; Program—Mary Lou Lucy.

At the last meeting of the Hi-Y Boys, it was desired to uncover some singing talent "a diamond in the rough" so to speak among the Freshmen. Some one suggested that they sing a number of their own selection. They chose that old standby "Polly Wolly Doodle." The rhythm was very good but they were somewhat lacking due to the fact that they had no accompaniment. After this the club decided that Orville Conrad, Junior Gar-nett, Kenneth Shinkle and Stewart Houze had not put forth a sufficient effort toward the rendering of the song, therefore they were asked to sing a quartet. They chose that immortal tune "Old Kentucky Home." They sang the song very well in spite of the merriment among them which gave vent to a fit of laughter at frequent intervals. Perhaps with a little practice, real talent will be discovered.

The Hi-Y Reporter at this time wishes to stress the importance of all Hi-Y Boys' attendance at the Conference which will be held at Brooksville. The ideas which can be derived from such a meeting are sure to be many and of a great benefit to the respective clubs.

On Wednesday of this week Rev. Hutter of the Hopeful and Hebron Lutheran churches will speak to the entire school. Visitors are always welcome at these weekly meetings.

On Nov. 13, Mr. Lucy's home-room will have charge of the Chapel program. At that time the Latin play "Off with His Head" will be given.

The event of chief interest to most students this week is that N-K-E-R meets this week-end and there will be no school Friday.

GO UP

While living costs in September were still 17.2% lower than in September, 1929, they were 3.1% above the level of the same month in 1934 and had increased 8% since August, according to figures put forth by the National Industrial Conference Board. Food and coal prices led the advance though there were also increases in the cost of rent and clothing.

INSURANCE MAN TO THEATRICAL STARS HELD FOR FORGERY

Admits Diverting More Than $300,000 of His Clients' Money to Own Use.

New York.—John J. Kemp, member of the Million a Year insurance club and other organizations, friend and broker to a host of theatrical and radio stars, was arrested here on charges of forgery and grand larceny. Arrested in his office at 551 Fifth avenue, Kemp, fifty-one years old, and distinguished looking, told detectives: "I expected this for seven years." He admitted that during that period he has converted more than $300,000 of his customers' money to his own use. He said that he had spent the money in lavish living, denying that he had lost it in gambling or speculation.

Charge Rogers Forgery.
The specific charge against Kemp was that he forged the name of Mrs. Betty Rogers, widow of Will Rogers, to a dividend check for $1,524.51, made out to her by the Equitable Life Assurance company, in which her husband held four policies totaling $285,000. The check was issued June 20, 1934, and was sent to Kemp's office, although it was made out to a Mrs. Rogers' name. Detectives said that that had been the procedure for years, as the humorist had unlimited faith in Kemp.

Among the autographed photographs of stage, screen, and radio celebrities which lined the walls of Kemp's office, the largest was a picture of Will Rogers, bearing the humorist's inscription: "To my good friend, John J. Kemp."

Kemp admitted, according to the police, that he cashed the Rogers dividend check after he had indorsed it and used the money himself. He said he regretted his actions and told the police he had resorted to larceny only because he was in financial difficulties.

Opera Star a Victim.

Another check transaction, involving Vivienne Segal, light opera prima donna, led to Kemp's arrest. Miss Segal sent Kemp a check some time ago directing him to use it to pay a premium on her insurance. The company informed Miss Segal it never received the money. Detectives then investigated Kemp's business affairs and discovered his other peculations.

Kemp had been in business for 20 years and was widely known on Broadway and in Hollywood as the "actors' insurance man." Will Rogers had paid tribute to him in a newspaper article published shortly before the humorist's death.

The Million a Year club to which he belonged is an organization of insurance brokers who sell a million dollars' worth of policies in a single year. He is also a member of the Lambs, the Friars, the New York Athletic and Westchester Country clubs, the National Democratic club and the American Federation of Actors.

Canine's "Ghost" Haunts; Return Solves Mystery

Kansas City, Mo.—Because he had trained a wire-haired terrier to let itself out into the yard and regain entrance to the house by whining and scratching at the door, B. M. Curtis and his family spent an eerie 35 hours in their home when the dog disappeared and its "ghost" walked in its stead.

Strange as one of Poe's tales of horror, for two days and a night, Curtis and his family heard the whining and scratching of the dog. Search as they did, shudders ran their spines as they failed to locate the terrier. On the second day, about convinced the dog was dead and its ghost had returned a servant suddenly cried, "Skipper is in the walls!"

An extended search revealed that the dog had ventured into a bathroom airshaft leading from the attic. A rescue through the vent found the terrier unharmed.

Life of Sick Man Saved by Telephone Operator

Sydney, N. S. W.—Rescuefulness of a telephone girl brought medical aid to a sick man who was able to do nothing more than lift the receiver. An operator, responding to the call, heard only the ticking of a clock and the sound of heavy breathing. The operator transferred the call to a doctor, who decided that some one was ill at the other end. Given the address by the phone company, he doctor rushed to the house and found Robert McKay in a state of collapse beside the telephone.

Barber Cuts Hair Under Light of Street Lamps

Buffalo, N. Y.—Jerry Brick was getting his hair trimmed when all but section lights in the North park section failed. He had an "urgent" date and appealed to Barber Ed Brader. The barber moved a chair out to the sidewalk and under the light of a street lamp, finished the haircut, and welcomed additional customers.

Hon Lays Square Egg
Granby, Conn.—At last a hen has laid a square egg. The honors go to a Rhode Island Red owned by George N. Curtis. The egg, while not exactly square, has enough flat surfaces so that it can be stood on end, a fact which Columbus proved by less convincing means. The hen made no comment on the event.

THE POWER OF PRAYER

When an outstanding figure in the field of medical research comes out flatly and declares that prayer has power to heal bodily ills it is something to pay attention to. Dr. Alexis Carrel, world-famous surgeon of the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research and winner of the Noble Prize in medicine says in his new book, "Man the Unknown," writing as a medical man:

"Our present conception of the influence of prayer upon pathological lesions is based upon the observation of patients who have been cured almost instantly of various affections. . . the only condition indispensable to the occurrence of the phenomenon is prayer. But there is no need for the patient himself to pray or even to have any religious faith. It is sufficient that someone around him be in a state of prayer."

I have been greatly impressed by the growing belief in the power of prayer to heal. Dr. Carrel's words will go far to confirm believers in their faith.

"Pauper" Dies; Find Wad Hidden in His Clothing

Chicago.—Dead, a supposed pauper in the County hospital. Yet he had $4,000 sewed in the lining of his clothing.

Charles Sweeney of 6136 South California avenue, retired policeman, recently identified the body of the supposed pauper as that of his brother, John Sweeney.

The money was a mystery to Charles and when he was told that a bank book indicated that he may have had $4,200 more in a bank, the brother was dumfounded, saying:

"I don't think he ever had a good job. He would wash windows or shove coal. But he never held a job long. He preferred to hang around Madison street 'fophouses.' I hadn't seen him for a long time. He told me when we met last that he had money, but I didn't believe him."

The brother was found by Policeman Thomas Brennan after a search of the police retired list disclosed a Charles Sweeney.

John Sweeney had told hospital attendants that he had such a brother, but he had told so many other bogus stories that they did not believe him. He died of pneumonia.

Dog Locked in Office

Barks Into Telephone

Martins Ferry, Ohio.—Locked in a mine office, a police dog knocked over a telephone, shook the receiver book with his paw and barked until he was released. The telephone operator at the Wheeling Steel corporation switchboard saw a light flash from the company's coal mine office and heard the dog bark.

Shortly thereafter word came from the mine office that a strange dog had been locked in by mistake. It was released.

Ghost Tale Proves to Be Tramp's Shittrail!

Sandusky, Ohio.—"Doesn't that look like a ghost to you?" Capt. Henry V. Ringholz asked his companion Officer Patrolman Grathwol as they were cruising past Oakland cemetery at dawn. A chase and subsequent capture revealed the "ghost" to be Jim Grady, an itinerant—clad only in a shirt. "Somebody stole everything but my shirt," Grady told the officers who took him to headquarters and re-outfitted him.

WHAT WAR COSTS IN DEATH AND POVERTY

The cost of war is seldom fully realized. At present, when conditions in Europe are in many respects similar to the conditions which preceded the World War, it is important for Americans to familiarize themselves with facts presented by Dr. Clarence Poe in The Progressive Farmer. Says Dr. Poe:—

"No matter whether war comes this particular year or not, the lesson for America is the same:—

"1. There are going to be disputes between nations and these disputes are going to be settled by war...so long as no potent machinery is available to settle them in peace.

"2. In the fury and hate and madness of war's free-for-all fight in a crowded room we shall inevitably suffer injuries or insults sooner or later that will drag us into war. And this is true regard less of all our pious resolutions to stay out—and will be true as long as there is no effective Supreme Court of Nations to safeguard our rights.

"Even if Mussolini and Haile Selassie should not fight, therefore, they will nevertheless have performed a priceless service to America if they wake us up to the seriousness of the dangers to which we are exposed...the seriousness of the dangers to which young men who read this article and the sons of older mothers and fathers who read this article are exposed. Vividly indeed has the money-cost of war been presented by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, in these four unforgettable sentences:—

"The World War, all told, cost—apart from lives—400 billion dollars. With that money we could have built a $2,500 house, furnished it with $1,000 worth of furniture, placed to an 5 acres of land worth $100 an acre and given this home to each and every family in the United States, Canada, Australia, England, Wales, Ireland, Scotland, France, Belgium, Germany and Russia. We could have given to each city of 20,000 inhabitants and over, in each country named, a five-million dollar library and a ten-million dollar university. Out of what was left we could have set aside a sum at 5 per cent that would provide a $1,000 yearly salary for an army of 125,000 teachers and a like salary for 125,000 nurses.

"Such is the appalling money-cost of war—a cost so great it drains half the men and women around us to live out their whole lives hounded by a poverty that real world peace could convert into comparative independence and comfort. And yet even this appalling money-cost of war must seem but a trifle thing...when we think of the millions of corpses and other millions of maimed, gassed, and permanently invalidated suggested by these World War figures for only a few nations:—

	Mobilized	Dead and Wounded
United States	4,355,000	360,000
Germany	13,000,000	6,111,862
Great Britain	6,600,000	3,000,000
Canada	619,636	232,045
Italy	5,615,000	1,597,000

End Painting Expense

HOW frame houses are improved when covered with Careystone Siding! Instead of weather-worn surfaces which require frequent painting, we see attractive walls which will never need any such protection. And the extra thickness added to the walls by Careystone will make the house cooler in summer and warmer in winter.

Modernizing a house with Careystone is an investment, not an expense—an investment which repays its cost many times in paint savings, comfort and improved appearance. Let us give you a free estimate.

1935 Red Cross Poster

THE compelling appeal of the most famous of Red Cross world war posters has been adapted by the distinguished artist Lawrence Wilbur in the 1935 Red Cross roll call poster.

"The Greatest Mother in the World" was the title given to the original creation of Alonzo Earl Foringer, eminent mural artist and illustrator of New York. The poster gave the keynote of the Second war fund drive of the Red Cross, and millions of copies were distributed throughout the nation.

In submitting a design for the 1935 poster, Wilbur, who has painted a number of posters for the Red Cross, placed the shadowy heroic figure of mercy in the background, with the practical Red Cross nurse succoring a sick and wounded child in the foreground. "Still the Greatest Mother" is his title.

The posters are distributed through 3,700 Red Cross chapters and 9,000 branches in an appeal to every man and woman to join as a member during the annual roll call.

How Calotabs Help Nature
To Throw Off a Bad Cold

Millions have found in Calotabs a most valuable aid in the treatment of colds. They take one or two tabs the first night and repeat the third or fifth night if needed.

How do Calotabs help Nature throw off a cold? First, Calotabs is one of the most thorough and dependable of all intestinal eliminants, thus cleansing the intestinal tract of the germ-laden mucus and toxins.

Second, Calotabs are diuretic to the kidneys, promoting the elimination of cold poisons from the system. Thus Calotabs serve the double purpose of a purgative and diuretic, both of which are needed in the treatment of colds.

Calotabs are quite economical; only twenty-five cents for the family package, ten cents for the trial package. (Adv.)

NOT WEALTH, BUT SUFFICIENCY OF LIFE, IS REAL SUCCESS

A striking "Success Talk for Farm Boys" from President Roosevelt appears in the current issue of The Progressive Farmer. "There was a time when the formula for success was the simple admonition to have a stout heart and willing hands. A great, new country lay open. When life became hard in one place it was necessary only to move on to another. Today we can no longer escape into virgin territory; we must master our environment."

"The very objectives of young people have changed. In the older days a great financial fortune was too often the goal. To rule through wealth, or through the power of wealth, fired our imagination. This was the dream of the golden ladder—each individual for himself."

"It is my firm belief that the newer generation of America has a different dream. You place emphasis on sufficiency of life, rather than on a plethora of riches. You think of the security for yourself and your family that will give you good health, good food, good education, good working conditions, and the opportunity for normal recreation and occasional travel."

"I, for one, am willing to place my trust in the youth of America. If they demand action as well as preachments, I should be ashamed to chill their enthusiasm with the dire prophecy that to change is to destroy. I am unwilling to sneer at the vision of youth merely because vision is sometimes mistaken."

"Let us carry on the good that the past gave us. The best of that good is the spirit of America. And the spirit of America is the spirit of inquiry, of readjustment, of improvement, above all a spirit in which youth can find the fulfillment of its ideals. It is for the new generation to participate in the decisions and to give strength and spirit and continuity to our Government and to our national life."

Unknowingly Buys Own Burial Shroud

Harrisburg, Pa.—Mrs. Elizabeth Malley Fehl, forty-eight, of nearby New Market, bought her burial shroud while on a shopping tour in this city but she was unaware of it at the time. The woman died three days after she purchased a new dress and shoes and her body was clothed for burial in these articles.

MUTE GIVEN VOICE; BELIEVED MIRACLE

Once Unable to Talk, Shepherd Preaches Sermon.

Calafat, Roumania.—Peter Lapu, previously known as a mute, deaf, illiterate, semisavage shepherd, is today the most notable man in Roumania, revered by thousands of persons as a saint.

Several weeks ago, Peter attended Sunday service in the village of Maglavit and created an extraordinary sensation by mounting the pulpit and delivering an impressive sermon in a clear, powerful voice.

The action of the supposed deaf-mute in suddenly talking and addressing the congregation in lucid words was in itself deemed a miracle. The story he told made it an even more awe-inspiring event.

He related that while he was out with his sheep on the Danube plain, an old man with a huge, silver-white beard appeared before him and ordered him to go and tell the people that "there will be hell on earth if they lose their faith."

Then, he said, the mysterious figure vanished into the air.

The peasants of Maglavit, believing the shepherd to have talked with God, now kneel before him and believe him to possess miraculous powers. Thousands flocked to Maglavit to be blessed. Riches newspapers devote considerable space to him and Roumania's new Lourdes.

Every Sunday, when he preaches, his sermon are attended by huge crowds. There was nearly a riot when police sought to prevent the shepherd from holding services. Since then there has been no official opposition.

Seized by Huge Python — Says He "Saw Heaven"

New York.—Otis Lloyd, animal handler of Herrin, Ill., who knows the deadly squeeze of a 26-foot python, will recover from his injuries, but it is doubtful if he ever will handle snakes again.

"For the first time in my life I'm afraid of snakes," said Lloyd as he told of his "death 10 seconds away" and how visions of the pythons coiled around his body haunt his waking and sleeping moments.

Lloyd felt the crushing hug of the python when it wriggled out of the grasp of eight employees at Frank Buck's zoo in Amityville, L. I. Only quick action of fellow-workers, who pried him loose, saved Lloyd from certain death, for the serpent already had applied the squeeze with which it brings quick death to its prey.

Visibly pained by the thought, Lloyd said he saw visions of another land, a sort of hereafter, as the gigantic reptile wrapped its bone-crushing loop about him. He said:

"I felt him paralyze my breathing. My head felt as though it were bursting. Then I went blind, and in my semi-conscious condition I swear I saw another land."

Foundry Hand Does Not Mind Racket in Tavern

St. Louis, Mo.—A witness for a tavern keeper, called before Excise Commissioner Anderson here recently on complaints from neighbors that the tavern was too "noisy," didn't aid the proprietor's cause very much.

"The music didn't bother me," asserted the witness, who also lived nearby. "Lots of times I slept right through it."

"Where do you work?" inquired the commissioner, who must have had a hunch.

"In a foundry," replied the friendly neighbor innocently.

The tavern was ordered closed for two days.

Postman Refutes Theory, He Really Quits Walking

San Jose, Calif.—Will H. "Bill" Lake has conclusively refuted the old theory that "the postman goes walking on his day off."

The other day Bill closed 42 years of service with the San Jose post office, during which period he had walked 131,040 miles and toted a total of roughly 650 tons of mail, including a mere 2,000,000 letters.

And as celebration of the fact, Bill (who never was at the wheel in his life before) went downtown, bought himself a new automobile and started on a 1,000-mile motor journey.

DEDICATION

OF NEW CASTLE LUTHERAN CHURCH ATTENDED BY MANY BOONE COUNTIANS

The dedication of the Holy Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church, of New Castle, Ind., of which Rev. Harold Beemon, a former Boone Countian, is pastor, was attended by a large number of Rev. Beemon's relatives and friends, Sunday.

The new church was modeled from the plans of a $27,000 church and was constructed from beautiful stone, which makes it one of the most artistic structures of its kind in the state of Indiana. For ten years the congregation struggled against odds of little financial resource but under the able leadership of Rev. Rilling, former pastor, Rev. Beemon, and many of the congregation they were able to construct the present building. The untiring efforts of the followers of the church were shown when Rev. Beemon said: "THIS CHURCH which we dedicate today stands as a memorial to the earnest unselfish efforts of a small but faithful band. The steadfastness of their faith is fittingly symbolized by the enduring stone with which this church has been erected."

Those from Boone county that attended the dedication were Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Beemon, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Beemon, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Beemon, Mr. and Mrs. Augusta Dringenburg, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Al Darby, Adren Sorrell Wilda Beemon, Nina Darby, Thelma Anderson and Mrs. Fannie Utz.

NOTICE

TO THOSE WHO LIKE TO HUNT AND FISH

The Boone County Game and Fish Protective Association co-operating with the State Game and Fish Commission is making an effort to better hunting and fishing in Boone County.

The system which has been adopted in regard to game is the one which has been so successful in Pennsylvania as evidenced by the best supply of game in the United States. The system consists of the setting apart certain lands in separate sections of the County as refuges for game in which the supply of game will be allowed to accumulate and then when it reaches the saturation point the game will then scatter to the surrounding country.

The County Association with the co-operation of certain land owners have set apart three reserves in Boone County which are marked on all sides by signs so that no one may intrude. One is near Walton, one on Gunpowder Creek, and one near Hebron. These reservations consisting of 7,000 acres are being stocked with quail and pheasant at considerable expense to the State Game and Fish Commission and we appeal to the good citizens of Boone County to assist in this worthy cause.

These reservations will be patrolled by Wardens and we ask the assistance of every person in assisting the officers in the enforcement of the law. The fine for hunting on a reserve is $25.00 plus the costs.

The Game and Fish Commission and the County Association have placed in the streams of Boone County during this last year thousands of fish from the hatcheries, and if the good people will assist in the enforcement of the laws it will not be long before we will have plenty of fish.

We earnestly request that all persons interested in this cause join us in the Association and assist us in bringing the game and fish back to Boone County.

We want you to understand that the Game Wardens are the friends of all of the hunters and fishermen in this County and if you abide by the laws you need have no fear.

The expense of the Game and Fish Commission is paid out of the money derived from the hunting and fishing license, so buy your license and help.

Yours for better hunting and fishing in Boone County.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE

School Attendance for the month of October was very good. Many of the schools had 95 percentage of attendance or above. In other cases where the attendance was not 95 percentage of attendance sickness was the primary cause.

Irregular attendance causes failures thereby prolonging the number of years a child must spend in school and due to this he enters his life's work long after his school mates are on their way to success.

Due to irregular attendance a child many times grows discouraged after being left behind by boys and girls of his own age and wishes to stop school. At this point parents find it hard to compel children to attend school and the child becomes a problem. Parents should make every effort to keep their children in school every day.

If we can help any parent in this problem of keeping their child in regular attendance we will be more than pleased to consult with you.

We appreciate the cooperation of the patrons of the school in administering the new attendance laws. We are interested in the education of every child and with your help we will help the child to obtain his birthright—a good education.

The following is the record of attendance for the month of October:

FORMER BURLINGTON GIRLS ON HONOR ROLL AT K-F-O-S

Misses Helen Berkshire, Roberta Berkshire and Melcent Berkshire, formerly of Burlington, now enrolled at the Kentucky Female Orphan School, of Midway, Ky., were three of twenty-seven students of that institution who made the honor roll for the first six-weeks of the school.

Helen, who is a senior at K-F-O-S was honored by being the only senior who made all A's for the first term. Melcent, who is doing post-graduate work, was one of the two from the entire group doing this work that was placed on the honor roll. Roberta, who is doing her first work at K-F-O-S, was one of the four freshmen placed on the honor roll.

This is a record of which not only the girls should be proud but also their former teachers, who helped to give them their early training.

FORM FOR C OF 240 P. I STORIES

Those appointed from this county are No. vello Lee Hull, Beaver Lick, and Paul Tanner, Florence.

GRIDIRON

CLASSIC BETWEEN KENTUCKY WILDCATS AND TENNESSEE VOLUNTEERS.

Two things are necessary for a satisfactory Thanksgiving Day: a big roasted turkey for dinner and a football game between the University of Kentucky and the University of Tennessee.

This year the annual Wildcat-Volunteer gridiron battle will be fought on Kentucky's Stoll Field in Lexington, scene of many a clash between these two institutions since their long series began at the turn of the century. This game has become recognized as the outstanding gridiron classic of the south.

Regardless of how good one of these eleven might be or how weak the other might be, a royal battle ensues when they get together. This was proven three times in recent years when Tennessee, heading for the Rose Bowl and a national championship, paused long enough to play Kentucky, which was disastrous for the Volunteers who, on each of these three occasions, was held to a tie by the Wildcats.

This year the two eleven, for the first time in a decade, appear to be evenly matched. Both teams have tasted defeat but both still are highly regarded and both are considered dangerous by any foe. When they meet on Stoll Field at Lexington Thanksgiving Day it will be a toss up.

A Kentucky sophomore, Red Harp, Pineville, is one of the star halfbacks on the Volunteer eleven this fall, but Kentucky, not to be outdone, has a brilliant quarterback who hails from Tennessee. He is Norris McMillan, a senior from Millington, a suburb of Memphis. Kentucky's two great halfbacks, Bob Davis, Dayton sophomore, and Bert Johnson, Ashland junior, will be hopeful of showing Tennessee a new set of "touchdown twins" on Turkey Day.

Don't forget the Oyster and Chilli Supper to be given by the Ladies of the Bullittsville Christian Church Saturday evening, Nov. 16.

WILLIAM BRADFORD

William Bradford, aged 86 years, passed away Wednesday morning at his home 505 Dixie Highway, Elsmere, Ky., after a long illness. The remains were removed to the Tallafarro Funeral Home for preparation.

Mr. Bradford had lived in Elsmere for 45 years and is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary Bradford and one son John (Jack) Bradford, Junior, Past Commander Simon Kenton Post American Legion, and many other relatives and friends.

The pall bearers were Clyde Hawkins, Ray Kordenbrock, Pete Relgier, Ed. Ramler, Wm. Helst and Homer Childress.

Funeral services were conducted at the Tallafarro Funeral Home Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock by the Rev. J. A. Miller, after which the remains were cremated at the Cincinnati Cremation Co., Cincinnati.

ELECTION NEWS

ENTIRE DEMOCRATIC TICKET SWEEPS INTO OFFICE BY RECORD VOTE—CHANDLER'S MAJORITY IN BOONE COUNTY ALMOST 2,000—7TH AMENDMENT REPEALED—OLD AGE PENSION APPROVED

The final tabulation of the votes cast in the state election last Tuesday gave the state Democratic ticket approximately a 100,000 majority over their Republican opponents, the largest majority that any group of state officials have ever swept into office with.

Chandler led the ticket, and his running mate, Keen Johnson, Richmond publisher, was second. Other Democratic candidates did not have as large majorities over their opponents, but were safe by 50,000 upwards. Chandler received 1,976 votes more in Boone than did Judge King Swope, his Republican opponent. He carried every precinct in the county except one as did his subordinate officers.

The Democrats also elected the majority of the Senators and Representatives. However, many of these were Rhea Democrats, and it is possible that there may be a conflict when the two houses are called in session. The Republicans elected more Representatives than was generally anticipated.

Repeal forces, seeking elimination of the State's "dry" amendment to the constitution, pulled far in the lead during the final returns. It is believed that the margin for repeal was certain to pass the 100,000 mark. The "wets" of Boone County received a majority of 688 over the "drys."

The old-age pension amendment steadily climbed to and above the 500,000 mark as the final returns were tabulated over the entire state and the Boone County majority for this amendment was 1,836.

Returns from the vote on school board members of Boone County, which were elected from the county at large for the first time, give J. L. Jones, Florence, and Roy Kinney, Beaver Lick, the highest vote. In the Walton-Verona district Conrad and Lusby were victorious over a number of other candidates.

Paul Renaker emerged over two other candidates for town Marshall of Florence, by receiving a majority of 34 votes over both of his opponents.

A number from Burlington attended the basket ball games between Florence and Hamilton at the Florence Gym. Friday night.

POPULARITY

OF NEW DEAL TO BE TESTED BY LITERARY DIGEST VOTE.

Individual ballots have been mailed to voters of Burlington and nearby communities in a new Literary Digest poll of 10,000,000 persons to ascertain the present popularity of the New Deal and should be distributed by the Post Office locally within a few days, according to advice received today from the magazine's publishers.

Kentucky's returns in this new referendum will be tallied as a unit so they may be compared with the voting in other States, it is announced.

The voting of the post-card ballots is secret as no signature or other identification is required and the return postage is paid by the magazine. To guard against tampering and counterfeiting a specially manufactured card board is used for printing the ballot, according to the sponsors of the poll, and all spurious votes can be detected immediately and destroyed.

The ballot asks a yes or no answer to the question: "DO YOU NOW Approve the Acts and Policies of the Roosevelt 'New Deal' to date?"

A similar poll to the same 10,000,000 persons was conducted in the spring of 1934, following the first year of the Roosevelt administration. Final returns then showed a vote of 61.15 per cent. for the New Deal to 38.85 per cent. against it.

Another question on the ballot in the coming referendum asks each voter how he voted in 1932 to ascertain if there has been any shift in political sentiment since the last Presidential election.

Ballots are reported being mailed from the magazine's headquarters in New York at the rate of over 500,000 per day and will continue until every section of the country has been sent its proportionate share of the total being mailed.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO KNOW ANYTHING

It doesn't take brains to push the throttle of your car to the floorboard.

It doesn't take cleverness to weave in and out of traffic at sixty miles an hour to the consternation of the slower moving highway users.

It doesn't take any intellectual capacity to hang onto the steering wheel, give her the gun, and see if you can make the speedometer touch ninety-odd.

In other words, you don't have to know anything to drive fast.

Drivers who regard streets and highways as the Indianapolis bowl, might be divided into two classes.

First, those who are weary of living and don't mind if they take innocent parties along with them into eternity. Second, those who are so stupid as to not realize that several thousand pounds of metal moving at terrific speeds is as lethal a weapon as a machine gun—both for the occupant and for anyone else who happens to be in the locality.

Speed—and speed alone—is responsible for the great majority of automobile accidents. All other causes pale into insignificance beside it. As even the most mentally deficient driver should be able to realize, an accident occurring at sixty miles per hour is almost invariably more serious than one occurring at 20.

The roads of America are strewn with corpses because a relatively small number of drivers are doing their best to emulate Malcolm Campbell.

It is reported that James Purdon publisher of The Maysville Independent, would demand editorially the removal of Gov. Laffoon as Democratic national committee man from Kentucky for "giving aid and comfort to the enemy."

Be critical—of yourself. In three days a good story is an old story.

A serve-self cafeteria is a good place to practice sales resistance.

Law of improvement: Your 'best' today isn't good enough tomorrow.

THE TREND TOWARD SOCIAL SECURITY

The most striking recent trend in life insurance is the increasing popularity of policies of the guaranteed future income type.

A generation ago the great bulk of all life insurance was of the pure protection type. It guaranteed that the widow or other dependents of the policyholder would have a certain sum in the event of his death. Relatively little attention was paid to the investment side of life insurance, and the industry did not offer, as it does today, an exceedingly varied assortment of policies designed to fit almost any conceivable case.

At present, life insurance buyers want protection for dependents, as in the past. But they want more. They know that the majority of men are penniless in their old age, and must obtain subsistence from relatives or organized charity. They know that many of these men were wealthy, that many more had good jobs and seemingly good investments. They passed the age when they could work—their estates or their investments were destroyed through some unlooked-for happening—and old-age poverty was the tragic result.

So these modern life insurance buyers, in constantly increasing numbers, are obtaining policies that will assure them living incomes in their declining years, as well as money to leave their dependents. Millions are thus, through their own foresight and thrift, achieving social security.

Editorial of the Week

NEW OFFICIALS

The citizens of the Commonwealth of Kentucky have spent several months of their time, much of their energy, and a great amount of money in selecting a group of state officers, whom they believe will serve the state, for the next four years, in a manner that it has never before been served. This group of officials, headed by the 37 year old Governor-elect, weathered two primaries and then swept through the regular election with a huge majority and this feat alone marks them capable of steering the ship of state over the rocky roads that it encounters in every term. The voters of Kentucky not only selected a group of well educated and experienced officials but also placed their stamp of approval on the New Deal which has had its backers and slackers since the inauguration of President Roosevelt.

It is generally known that the officials-elect will have a certain amount of opposition, but with the determination and fighting spirit that they have shown they will undoubtedly overcome all such opposition.

The heavy poll of votes, which shattered old records in many counties of the state, is proof that Kentucky citizens are becoming more educated to the necessity of voting on all issues.

We all can see that prosperity is reviving and we can rightly expect an even greater revival within the next four years.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS

The United States claims that the 84 warships now being built are necessary. Japan feels that our 35,000 ton ships must be built with offense and not defense in mind.

Counting just the people going along regularly to our public schools—and the overflow under school supervision—one in every four persons of our entire population of all ages is today going to school.

It seems that the revolt of Laffoon and Rhea had little effect on the voters of Kentucky.

It was reported that James Purdon publisher of The Maysville Independent, would demand editorially the removal of Gov. Laffoon as Democratic national committee man from Kentucky for "giving aid and comfort to the enemy."

Be critical—of yourself. In three days a good story is an old story.

A serve-self cafeteria is a good place to practice sales resistance.

Law of improvement: Your 'best' today isn't good enough tomorrow.

The present telephone system of Boone county, of which we understand, is to be greatly improved in our mind the greatest need of the county. Under the new management we are anxiously looking forward to a service that will give no one grounds for complaint.

News Tour

By Wm. C. Walton

Port Said Egypt is the entrance of the Suez canal. From the canal you pass into the Red Sea. It was 1927 that I visited Bombay India, the city is noted for its gardens and villas, the population is over 1,000,000 people, the streets are full of elephants, donkeys, goats, and flocks of pigeons then you see a Brahmi bull lying asleep in front of a temple. Sheep dodge in and out of the crowd of people. The shopkeepers quarters are called a bazaar, everything is carried upon the head, the great red fort at Agra was built by Akhor, it is filled with memories of the valiant King. It was Sabah Jahan who built the Pearl Mosque the most divine of all courts of prayer.

My visit to Ceylon was interesting, here you see the pepper tree, the vanilla beans, pimento tree, the nutmeg tree and the giant bread fruit tree. Kandy is a small village built in 1600 by Portuguese prisoners, the lake of Kandy is filled with moss and around it are avenues of palms. The Temple of Tooth lies there, the sacred tooth of Buddha, it was brought on the island by a Princess in the folds of her hair, that was 1600 years ago, it was seized by the Malharas and carried to India the Portuguese unearthed it and it was burned by the blind unbelievers, another tooth was made. It is on a lotus flower of pure gold and is hidden under seven bull shape shrines.

SEEN and HEARD
around the
NATIONAL CAPITAL
By Carter Field

FAMOUS WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

Washington.—Evidence increases that there will be a real drive for the 30-hour week when congress reconvenes. In fact, despite the bitter opposition of many business men, particularly large employers whose plants require continuous operation to obtain maximum efficiency and economy, the probability is that congress would pass the 30-hours week bill at this session if the union labor leaders were sincerely for it.

Nearly every development is grist to the mill of the measure's advocates. For example, the latest government figures show that wage payments—a rough way of stating employment—have advanced to within 71 per cent of normal. But production as a result of that employment and these wages has reached 91 per cent of normal.

It's technocracy all over again—the curiously recurring problem of how to pass the work around—how to keep enough consumers in funds to purchase the products of the decreasing number of workers.

Many experts still think that this cycle, far more than the loss of cash by the purchase of foreign bonds that later defaulted, and infinitely more than the stock market crash, was responsible for the economic troubles which began in this country in 1929.

No better illustration of this theory has ever been advanced to this writer than what he discovered in Birmingham, in August, 1929. Just a year before, the steel mills of that district had employed 42,000 men. In August, 1929, they were employing only 24,000 men. But they were turning out more steel!

Down the Line

In short, 18,000 well paid men had lost their jobs, had stopped buying at the local department store and other stores, were wearing old clothes and squeezing their pennies. Newspapers were forced to cut expenses because the stores had been forced to cut their advertising. And so it went all the way down the line—more than two months before the stock market crash. And the same thing was happening in Pittsburgh, Gary, Youngstown, Chicago and Bethlehem. The same sort of thing, to a greater or lesser extent, was happening in every other industry, which meant that the buying power of the country was being dried up.

But virtually nobody realized it!

In the last session of congress so much sentiment developed for the 30-hour bill that, in the early stages, leader after leader told a group of editors inquiring into the general legislative situation that they expected some modification of the 30-hour measure, if not that itself, to pass. It did not pass because union labor leaders traded it for the Wagner labor relations bill. They far preferred that.

There are two major objections to the 30-hour proposal, one by the big employers, and the other by some of the very people who believe that the type of thing illustrated by the Birmingham steel mills not only caused the depression, but has held back the return of prosperity.

The objection of the employers is that it will disrupt their organizations. Thirty hours a week is only five six-hour days. Such a limitation on work hours does not fit in readily with shifts. And of course there is always the objection to a blanket raise in wages, boosting production costs. This last phase is especially true now because business generally is concerned over the resentment of housewives in particular and buyers in general over advancing prices. Also because they know that security bill taxes for old age pensions, unemployment insurance, etc., are shortly going to advance production costs further.

The objection by the theorists is that any such move is just a temporary palliative. Further advances in labor saving machinery—additional shortcuts will come. They fear the 30-hour measure might prove a veritable strait-jacket.

Stock Rise Too Fast

The stock market has been rising too rapidly to suit the administration. Information to this effect comes from the same sources that enabled the writer to make this same statement in June, 1933, when it may be remembered, the administration literally smacked the market down and took considerable pleasure in the process.

The administration does not want any such crash at the moment. In fact, all it wants is a small decline, and it does not want that until after January 1.

The significance of this is that it knows many business executives plan their budgets around the end of December and at that time lay out their plans for expenditures and expansions during the year. For this process the administration wants the business leaders of the country to have all the encouragement possible. Hence it will make no move to interfere with the boom so evident in the market until after January 1.

Of course the administration even then does not want anything approaching a confidence-destroying debacle. It would merely like to see a decline set in which would carry security prices, stocks in particular, down to a level from which a slow, creeping progress could be made next summer and fall. Politics is behind all this. The New Dealers fear if the present boom continues, well through the winter, there is likely to be the normal setback in the summer and fall. The effect of this on the country would be precisely opposite to that desired.

The most encouraging sort of stock market movement to the country, the New Dealers figure, is the creeping advance. It indicates improving business prospects, not speculation. But it cannot occur, very well, after a big bull movement, especially if stock prices have been pushed up during that bull movement far beyond any sane ratio to earnings and dividends.

There's the Rub

Now that is where the rub comes in. For despite all this talk about "breathing spell" and reassuring business, every one close to the administration knows that there are going to be more taxes—after election—and that these taxes, assuming the New Deal is continued by the voters next November, will fall on business. Especially big business.

Although this is absolutely clear to anyone, no matter how remote from touch with the White House, who carefully studies the President's official utterances (he pointed out in the "breathing spell" statement that no more taxes should be imposed on the little fellow, already burdened by processing taxes, etc.), it has not been generally appreciated.

But by next summer, the New Dealers figure, the gentry who buy and sell securities in large quantities, and therefore come pretty close to controlling prices, will realize it. Hence they will be inclined to liquidate their stock holdings, if stock prices at the time happen to be high.

It is well known that stock prices are controlled by what the buyers and sellers regard as future prospects, rather than past performance. Hence the conviction that the corporations must shoulder a much greater load of tax burdens will not be helpful to better dividend prospects.

Hangs on Farm Plank

The most significant point about the recent poll taken by the American Press association, which shows a considerable fading of the Roosevelt popularity, is the clear demonstration, by putting certain unstated points together, that the agricultural plank of Roosevelt's opponent may decide whether the New Deal is to have four more years, or is to die on March 4, 1937.

Most important in the poll is not the fact that the Northeast has turned against President Roosevelt. This has been known for some time—been generally accepted since the Rhode Island by-election. Nor is the fact that New York state is included. The big point is that the poll shows sentiment against the President, apparently strong enough on the returns so far in and as of today, to indicate the President might lose the electoral votes in Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota and South Dakota. Also Wisconsin.

To appreciate the significance of this, a resort to electoral votes is necessary. In these dispatches some months back it was pointed out that Roosevelt could lose every state north of the Mason and Dixon line, and the Ohio river, and east of the Mississippi, except Wisconsin, and also lose California, Kansas and Delaware, and still have 269 electoral votes, or three more than enough.

In short, he could lose all New England, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Kansas and California, and still win.

At the time this table was presented by the writer largely to show the tremendous importance of New York, and hence the possibility that Tammany Hall could re-elect Roosevelt by straining every nerve to get out the vote, or defeat him, by mere apathy. This was on the theory that upstate New York would probably be about the same in sentiment as its neighboring states in New England.

Loses New York

This emphasis on New York is abundantly justified by the recent poll, which indicates New York is against the President. Also two of the trans-Mississippi states included in the anti list in these dispatches—California and Kansas.

So that the important new point is really involved in the additional Middle Western states—Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota and South Dakota. Wisconsin may be left to one side. No political observer believes that Wisconsin will buck over the traces if the La Follette organization sets out to deliver it to Roosevelt. Further, no one has much doubt at the moment that the La Follettes will do just that. If there should be any slip-up there, and there should be no material change otherwise in the lineup, it will be just too bad for Roosevelt. It would make the New Deal battle line so long and vulnerable that breaks would be sure to occur somewhere.

But these farm states in question, from Nebraska up to Minnesota, may be depended upon to go as the intelligent self-interest of their farm population determines.

THE RETURN FROM CAPTIVITY

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 1:1-6; Psalm 124:1-6.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. Psalm 124:3.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A New Song.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Coming Home Rejoicing.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making a Fresh Start.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Thanksgiving for God's Care.

1. The Return Predicted (Jer. 29:1-14).

It seems that false prophets were flourishing in Babylon telling the people that they would speedily be restored to their own land. To counteract this the Lord moved Jeremiah to send this letter to the captives in Babylon (vv. 8, 9). In this letter he advised them to settle down and quietly pursue their regular callings of life and not to be led astray by the false prophets (vv. 6, 7).

1. The length of the captivity (v. 10). Their coming back was to be "after seventy years." From Daniel 9:2 it is clear that seventy years means a definite time. It dates from the time when the first company was taken captive, among which Daniel was found.

2. Recovered by God (vv. 10-14). God's purpose in the captivity was to cure them of their idolatrous practices. He assured them that when his purpose was accomplished he would visit them and convince them of his good purpose toward them. Their captivity he would turn away, gather them from all the nations, and bring them into their own land.

II. The Predicted Captivity Fulfilled (Ezra 1:1-6).

1. The proclamation of Cyrus (vv. 1-4).

a. This was not by accident, but that the word of the Lord might be fulfilled (v. 1). What God has promised he will do; he never forgets.

b. By divine initiation (v. 1). "The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus." How this was done we do not know. Possibly Daniel brought to his attention the prophecy of Isaiah and Jeremiah (Isa. 44:28; Jer. 25:12). Every impulse to do good in all men is caused by the Lord. It may have been that Cyrus only saw his own action as a piece of statecraft—the creation of a buffer nation between his kingdom and that of Egypt.

c. The content of his proclamation (vv. 2-4).

(1) "The Lord God of heaven hath charged me to build him a house in Jerusalem" (v. 2). This makes clear that he had some impression of God's hand upon him.

(2) Appeal to Jewish patriotism (v. 3). He invokes upon such as possess the national religious feeling, the blessing of God, and commands them to go and build the house of the Lord God.

(3) Lend assistance (v. 4). Many of the Jews were established in business and therefore were not free to go. Many, no doubt, had lost their national spirit and therefore did not desire to go. All such were to lend friendly assistance in silver, gold, and beasts.

2. The response to Cyrus' proclamation (vv. 5, 6). The chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin and the priests and Levites presented themselves as willing and ready to go. The company which returned was largely made up of representatives of Judah and Benjamin.

3. The royal favor (v. 7-11). Cyrus brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord which Nebuchadnezzar had carried away from Jerusalem and put into the house of his gods. Now to have 5,400 of these vessels returned to their owners and sent back to Jerusalem to be put to their original use, met a hearty response by the Jews.

III. The Gladness and Rejoicing of the Returning Exiles (Ps. 126:1-6).

1. The proclamation of Cyrus as a dream (v. 1). They recognized that their going back was through the favor of the Lord.

2. Their laughter and singing (vv. 2, 3). They not only recognized this as the favor of the Lord upon them, but testified thereof in the hearing of the heathen round about them.

3. Their prayer for prosperity in the land (v. 4). They were not only going back with the consciousness of the good hand of the Lord upon them, but were trusting him for fruitfulness of the land.

4. Sowing in tears (vv. 5, 6). The seed which they were to sow in the land was so precious that they seemed to have hesitated as to sowing, and yet they recognized that joy would follow their sorrow as they brought with them the sheaves of the harvest.

Monotony

Whether we are rich or poor, we all have to fight against monotony—doing the same thing over and over until it loses interest.

We can fight monotony with variety, and one way to do this is by making a wise use of leisure. If we wish to avoid the feeling that we are merely machines, we must become interested in many things.

Production of Chevrolet cars and trucks during October totaled 69,128 units, an increase of nearly 23 per cent over October, 1934, officials of the Chevrolet Motor Co. announced today. This figure is more than 9,000 units above the anticipated output for the month, and is the highest initial month's production of any new model in several years.

As a result of the quick start on its 1936 production, Chevrolet had some 60,000 cars in the hands of its dealers throughout the country when the new line was announced Nov. 2. This assured every dealer not only of cars for display purposes, but of additional units for immediate delivery.

The 25 Chevrolet manufacturing and assembly plants, strategically located in all parts of the United States, will be operating at capacity for weeks, and probably well into 1936, according to factory advances.

W. C. and Albert Weaver have given Thos. Adams residence a coat of paint.

Kindred Slavic Tribes Make Up Czechoslovakia

The Czechs, Moravians, Slovaks and Ruthenians of which Czechoslovakia is composed were originally kindred tribes of Slavic origin which had moved into their present locations during the general westward migration of various peoples in the early Christian era and which during the middle ages had been important nations in central Europe, observes a writer in the New York Herald Tribune.

Bohemia, the home of the Czechs, was particularly noted as a cultural center and it was her greatness that was responsible for her undoing. In 1490 her king, Ladislaus, was elected king of Hungary and the two nations were joined. This union lasted for a time, but eventually, by one of those dynastic upheavals that were so frequent in central Europe, the kingdom passed to the Hapsburgs and Bohemia with Hungary became a part of the growing Austrian empire in 1526.

Moravia, which originally included Silesia and Slovakia, had been an independent kingdom until about 900 A. D., but it was then broken up. Moravia and Silesia became fiefs of the loosely knit German empire, the former afterward being joined to Bohemia and thus passing into the Austrian empire, and the latter remaining a sort of political shuttlecock, alternately subject to Bohemia, Poland and Germany. It did not have its fate finally settled until, at the end of the Seven Years of War, in 1763, it was divided between Prussia and Austria. Slovakia, which had been conquered by Hungary, was incorporated with it and never regained its independence.

Monkey Playful Animal; Chimpanzee Very Smart

Almost any time is play time with monkeys. Give a monkey a musical instrument and he will play for hours.

Another monkey delight is to dress up and act like a human. One keeper at the London zoo trained four young chimpanzees so well that they would take a meal at a table from tin plates and mugs, and pass everything around as politely as could be reported by a correspondent in the Montreal Herald.

The Polar bears are also great fun-makers. The crew of a whaling ship once watched two bears playing on an ice floe. The main idea in their game was to push and scramble about at the edge of the ice until one was pushed into the water.

Immediately the other bear would jump in beside him, and there would be another tussle until one was forced back on to the ice. The winner would also scramble out, and the game would start over again.

Favored National University Washington was greatly interested in the establishment of a national university and referred to it in his first message to congress in 1790. In his will he gave 50 shares in the Potomac company, worth at that time about $25,000, toward the endowment of such an institution, provided congress should incline to extend a fostering hand toward it. Congress has never done this, though urged to do so by Madison, John Quincy Adams and other statesmen, and numerous bills for establishing such an institution have been introduced. There has been a question of its constitutionality and also as to the desirability of the federal government's controlling educational agencies through such a national university. The shares left by Washington were undoubtedly turned back to his estate.

Pilmsoll's Mark on Ships Not everyone can make a mark on the world to live on after they are gone as did Samuel Pilmsoll, British politician and reformer. His efforts toward reform were chiefly to improve the lot of seamen and it was through his efforts that parliament adopted the shipping act of 1876. This provided for strict ship inspection and eliminated many unseaworthy craft known as "coffin ships" which were often overcrowded and over insured by unscrupulous owners. And to this day a mark on the hull of a ship indicating the limit to which it may be loaded safely is known to sailors the world over as the Pilmsoll Mark. Pathfinder Magazine.

Origin of Fingerprinting The use of fingerprints as a system of identification is of very ancient origin and was known from the earliest days in the East, when the impression of his thumb was the monarch's sign-manual. A relic of this practice is still preserved in the formal confirmation of a legal document by delivering it as one's "act and deed." The permanent character of the fingerprint was first put forward scientifically in 1823 by J. E. Purkinje, an eminent professor of physiology, who read a paper adducing nine standard types of impressions and advocating a system of classification which attracted no great attention.

Memorial Bridge The $10,000,000 Arlington Memorial bridge, constructed as a tribute to George Washington and war heroes, is 2,150 feet long and reputed to be the largest drawbridge in the world. It connects West Potomac park and Arlington cemetery, converging with the new Mount Vernon Memorial highway, considered the finest piece of roadway construction ever completed. The bridge is 90 feet wide, has nine segmental arches of 155-foot span at the ends, spreading gradually to 184 feet in the central arch.—Washington Star.

THE WORK OF CREDIT

Bank Shows How It Gives Needed Aid to All Classes of Prudent Borrowers

How a bank loan portfolio presents a graphic cross section picture of the business of its community is disclosed by the description which a midwestern bank recently gave of its loans to customers. It revealed also how closely interwoven with its neighbors' varied lives are the threads of the bank's financial helpfulness.

This description showed that the bank had made a loan of $100,000 to a local shoe manufacturer to purchase materials, discount bills and meet current requirements.

To a wholesale grocer $95,000 had been advanced for the purchase of inventory, the loan to be repaid over a period in accordance with specified terms set forth in the loan agreement.

Assistance in Personal Matters

Another loan had been made to a home owner to the amount of $200 for painting and repairing. This was made in cooperation with the Federal Housing Administration and was being repaid in twenty-four monthly installments of $3.33 each.

A dentist had been loaned $500 to purchase new equipment. He was paying off the debt out of his professional earnings as they came in.

To a large domestic refrigerator distributor $30,000 had been granted on warehouse receipts to finance dealer shipments.

A home owner had been granted a $3,000 mortgage loan to be repaid in three years.

One thousand dollars had been advanced to an office worker on the cash surrender value of his insurance policy to aid him in meeting an emergency.

The National Total

If each of these various examples were multiplied many times the result would represent the total volume of credit cooperation which the bank was extending to its neighbors in its community, for aggregate loans to all its customers amounted to more than twelve million dollars.

If the typical examples here given were multiplied by many millions of times the result would represent the total economic cooperation which the banking system of the country as a whole is extending to aid the innumerable personal, professional, industrial and commercial activities which make up the whole business life of the nation. The nationwide total of such loans is in excess of 20 billion dollars.

BANKS PLAN ADVERTISING

Substantial funds have been set aside from reserves of the American Bankers Association to finance the development by its Advertising Department of a service of informative newspaper advertisements setting forth in brief, popular language the methods and policies under which banks operate, their effective practices for protecting their depositors' funds, the services they render and the various ways in which they cooperate with business in their own communities in fostering sound recovery and progress.

Some 350 banks are now using this material and it is available at a moderate price for all of the members in the association who care to use it in bringing about better public understanding in their own communities regarding banking and its services. It has materially stimulated the use of newspaper advertising among banks.

Many favorable comments have been expressed regarding the informative and constructive character of its messages. It is issued in two sizes: the larger size is 3 columns wide by 10 inches deep, but in some instances subscribing banks have expanded this to occupy full pages in their local papers in order to obtain a more emphatic effect. Four pieces of advertising copy are supplied each month in this service.

BANKERS SUPPORT ACTIVE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION

The Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association is promoting widely among bankers the practice of aiding their farm customers in installing on their farms better financial, accounting and operating methods. It also cooperates in the endeavors of the state bankers' associations along similar lines.

The commission has published a book on "Making Farm Investments Safe," presenting a compendium of helpful material published over a period of years as a reference guide in the daily routine of banking and farming relationships. It has also published "Factors Affecting Farm Credit," discussing in an illustrative way how farm credit can be obtained on a sound basis.

Another publication is the monthly Bulletin of the commission which circulates to about 10,000 persons, among them the county agents throughout the United States, who make frequent use of the material and suggestions prepared by the commission. Likewise, the commission has appointed 2,300 key bankers covering every county in the United States, who act as focal point in their districts in fostering better understanding between bankers and farmers.

A HUGE BANKING SYSTEM

The latest official figures covering all banks in the United States show that there are 16,042 licensed banking institutions of every kind and that over 63,000,000 persons have entrusted them with their deposits to the amount of $44,800,000,000.

Baby Killdeer Are Slow Growers; Have Long Legs

Unlike most of our other birds, baby killdeer desert their nest just as soon as their down has sufficed out. They follow their parents about in search of food. From the very start, they find it themselves, depending upon the parents only to lead them to a good feeding spot. Whenever they get cold, they give a little cry, and the parents rush to them and huddle them under their wings to get warm. Small grasshoppers, crickets, weevils, cutworms, and flies are all meat for the killdeer's diet.

Growing up is a slow process for baby killdeer, notes a writer in the Detroit Free Press. There is no sudden change in their appearance, as there is in some birds. Gradually, their legs get longer, their ridiculous little tails lengthen and finally are pushed out altogether by the incoming juvenile tail feathers.

The downy covering of their bodies is replaced also, but not suddenly. It seems that they simply swell and expand and grow taller, much as young children do. Young killdeer are good swimmers from the start. Even though their toes are not webbed, they do not hesitate to swim across puddles or even little streams when they find the water too deep for wading.

Last feathers to develop are those which enable the killdeer to fly. By that time they are practically full grown and it is hard to tell them apart from the oldsters. As long as the flight feathers have not grown, the birds have to depend upon running and hiding to escape their enemies.

Mr. and Mrs. John Lester, of Ludlow, were pleasant callers in Burlington, Friday.

Mrs. L. A. Conner and son, Harold, spent Monday in Covington.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

The Cultural Expansion SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—What a war it has been for education.

They were savages, ruthless and very ignorant. But now they know about the armored tank and the screaming shell and the admirable name-throws which cooks the flesh on the living bone. They were isolated. That old long-distance gun, she sho' kin find you wherever you are. All she wants is you' home address. They had barbaric pride—'twas the breath in their black nostrils—but poison gas would be the cure for that foolishness. Like foxes, they den in the earth. The scout plane spies on them and the bomber plane comes and makes scrap of their bodies. Like lions, the naked spearsmen advance; the machine gun levels the ranks down flat. Like moles, the fugitives burrow under the mud walls. So, with his high explosives, the white man blasts them out.

Verily, there is no excusing any race, however remote, however backward, for failure to share in the cultural beauties of this modern civilization.

Joe Robinson's Elegance SENATOR Joe Robinson, somewhere in Arkansas, Dear Sen.—I hear some of the boys are again you for reelection because you've been guilty of spats in the first degree. If your home-folks predicate fitness for office on ruggedness of feet, Primo Camera is their man. But if they want brains at the other end to balance the load, I insist you've got the credentials.

I know how you've suffered. You put on spats, and, just about the time you quit being self-conscious, the weather turns warm on you.

Still, a more tolerant day is dawning. Why, the first time I wore spats in Paducah I needed police protection. It was a good thing for me I wasn't a Yankee. And on down in the tall timber my wrist-watch was mistaken for a handcuff with a time-lock on it. I reckon they thought I was a fugitive from a Vassar daisy chain.

Now, just around every corner is a service station, a beauty parlor or a country club. And that, mind you, where once, when a boy came of age, they had to run him down with dogs to put pants on him.

So cheer up, Sen. At least they didn't prove a monocle on you. Yours sympathetically, Cobb.

A Week of Peace TO THE sentimentalists amongst us, the peril of the moment is that we may run out of these something-or-other weeks. You know, weeks dedicated to hay fever or sanitary plumbing or ankle-length union suits or anemic Armenians. You see, we only have 52 weeks to start with.

The surest way to spoil a good thing is to overdo it. That also goes for salad dressings, four-plus pants, rice pudding and the young thing who puts so much make-up on her eye lashes she looks as though she were peeping out through two buttonholes in an old plush vest. Any party could gain a lot of votes by inserting a plank in its platform calling for just one plain, old-fashioned week starting without excitement on a Monday and ending very quietly the following Sunday.

Tugwell and Native Sons UNTIL he hauled off and made that speech recently, Professor Tugwell was leading the brain trust with the title of Chief Lobe. He may still be that, but just the same, if I were Tugwell, I believe I'd follow the advice which the fire department prints on the theater programs: "Look about you now and choose the nearest exit."

Speaking of vanishing species, whatever became of the pedestrian classes in America—you know, people who went places by the quaint old-fashioned process called walking? Today the population seems exclusively to be made up of two major groups—those with cars who are riding and those with thumbs who crave to do so.

And, speaking of traveling, I've discovered what, in the modern sense of the term, is a true California native son. A native son is a fellow who has been here long enough to sell his trailer.

Two Promising Actors MY BUDDING ambition to turn actor has had a boost. A young fellow, who, I predict, will yet get somewhere in this business if he keeps on trying, was over here, and, after dinner, this party, whose name is Charles Chaplin, gave an imitation of a buzzard lighting alongside a sick horse. Such Judges as Claudette Colbert and Edna May Oliver agreed that, as a buzzard, he would fool any living creature, except possibly another buzzard.

But talk about acting, now. By special request I played the principal supporting role, that of the horse, and the sheer artistry of the performance gave delight to one and all. So now I'm convinced my future is assured, if only we can get somebody to write a show that a part in it for a sick horse.

IRVIN S. COBB.

HEBRON SCHOOL NEWS

The basket ball teams of Hebron continued on their march to the "Hall of Fame" by defeating the Cold Springs Cagers in two inspiring contests Friday night. The Girls game was never in doubt from the first quarter. The Hebron Girls were the class of the first game and the Cold Springs Girls had an uphill fight all the way to no avail.

In the boys game the interest was more intense because of the close match of the two quintets. At the half the Cardinals had the advantage of 2 points. The Cold Springs team put on a burst of speed in the last quarter after trailing during the last half and tied the score in the closing minutes of play.

When the bell sounded, the score was tied and the boys were in a heap under the Hebron goal. When the legs and arms were entangled and the referee found the ball he gave it to "Bink" Shinkle to shoot a free throw and he "froze" it and put the game on the right side of the ledger. Let's hope that the rest will be like this. We have two fine teams this year, so let's support them to the utmost of our ability. The next game will be Friday the 15th, with Lloyd at Hebron. Come out and help us win.

The school as a whole greatly enjoyed the assembly program given Wednesday 6th. The speaker was Rev. Hauter of the Hebron Lutheran church. He gave a very inspirational talk and a few musical numbers were rendered by various rooms of the school.

The weekly meetings of the two clubs were postponed because of the holiday Friday which was caused by the meeting of the N.K.E-A at Holmes High School.

Soap-Making Art Known

to Women in Years Past

A couple of generations ago every housewife had a first-hand knowledge of soap-making. This art in its early form consisted of boiling animal or vegetable fats with an alkaline solution obtained by leaching wood ashes, and then, as soon as the fat had gone into solution, stirring in salt until a curdy mass of soap was formed.

The chemical changes involved in this process, first explained by the French chemist Chevreul in 1815, are relatively simple, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune. Fats are chemical compounds of glycerin and certain waxy or oily substances known as fatty acids (which are called acids not because they are sour or corrosive but because they are readily dissolved by alkalis). When fats are boiled with solutions of strong alkalis such as sodium hydroxide (lye or caustic soda) or potassium hydroxide (caustic potash), they break down into glycerin and fatty acids. The latter then combine with the alkali present to form the soda or potash soaps. The subsequent addition of salt to the mixture causes the soluble soap to be precipitated as a solid. Salt itself readily dissolves in water and may be said to crowd the soap out of solution.

Most of the soap in use is made by fundamentally the same process. The only changes are those of detail, resulting from the evolution of a household art into a large-scale industrial process. The fats used are no longer kitchen grease, but cheap tropical vegetable oils or stockyard waste. Wood ashes have been replaced as alkali by commercial caustic soda, which is used in carload lots. Then, too, glycerin is a valuable byproduct of soap-making and is carefully recovered from the used lye.

Effect of Lightning Is ## Interesting to Chemists

Some of the effects of lightning are: A chemical action—where after a storm there is a peculiar odor in the air. Those familiar with chemistry will understand that the oxide of oxygen or ozone can be produced by an electric spark in the laboratory or by a carbon arc sun-lamp in a room. Lightning has been shown to affect the fertility of the soil and the growth of crops, notes a writer in the Montreal Herald.

Secondly: The explosive effects we are all familiar with, caused by the tremendous and rapid heating of the lightning current, explosively. This heats the column of air through which it passes, at times smashing chimneys, tearing off roofs and shingles, shattering trees, etc. The trees are stripped of their bark or completely slivered caused by a sudden chemical action in their sap.

Thirdly: Holes have been melted through church bells; all these effects depend upon the terrific and sudden heating and expansion of air in their path.

Men Without Ears

Men without ears are not uncommon among the natives of Guatemala engaged in gathering chicle, the basic ingredient of chewing gum. The loss of ears is the result of a disease which is being studied under the auspices of the Carnegie Institution of Washington—the great peculiarity of which is that it seems entirely confined to men actually engaged in chicle gathering. It never appears in towns or among the women and children who accompany the men to the forest camps. It occurs only during the rainy season, according to a Carnegie Institution investigator, who, unable to find the source of the disease, believes that some jungle animal must act as a reservoir for the disease and that it is transmitted to men by insects.

Fandy Tides Turn Tricks

Port William, thriving harbor town in Nova Scotia's famed Annapolis valley, is a seaport for only a part of each day. For the rest of the time, the port is just a busy town on an inland creek. Port William is located on a stream so shallow that the pilot of an outboard motor boat would have to use oars to avoid scraping his propeller. Yet 8,000-ton fruit steamers dock there. The tiny stream is swelled into a 40-foot deep river when the Bay of Fundy tides race in from the Minas basin. Ocean freighters come in with the tides to unload cargoes. They are equipped with specially constructed bottoms and when the tide goes out they rest on the river bed while being loaded with supplies, putting to sea again when the tides come in once more.

The Horological Institute

The object of the Horological Institute of America, Inc., is to endeavor to elevate and dignify the art, science and practice of horology; to establish a system of varying attainments for watch and clockmakers; and to issue graded certificates to qualified applicants; to serve as a center for the reception and diffusion of scientific knowledge, relating to all timing matters, and to develop standards for horological schools.

Paraguay Honored Hayes

In 1878, President Hayes of the United States, arbitrator between the Bolivians and Paraguayans over the Chaco territory, suggested a plan that while not causing a conflict, did not meet with Bolivia's approval. In 1928 Paraguay honored the memory of Hayes with a postage stamp issue portraying the American President in commemoration of the favorable Chaco decision.

INAUGURATION

OF GOVERNOR-ELECT ALBERT BENJAMIN CHANDLER TO BE GALA EVENT

Frankfort, Ky., November 18—(P)—Dancing feet and the soft strains of "My Old Kentucky Home" mingled with the latest melodies will turn Kentucky's swanky executive mansion and sedate capitol into one-day emporiums of pleasure when Governor-elect Albert Benjamin Chandler is inaugurated December 10.

Committees have been busy weeks making plans for the celebration that always marks the induction of a new administration. And if dreams of the planners of the celebration materialize, the Chandler inauguration will go down in history as one of the most successful the new capitol has had since it was first occupied in 1909 by Gov. Augustus E. Wilson.

"We hadn't planned on an elaborate inauguration," said County Judge L. Boone Hamilton, Chandler's campaign manager in Franklin County, "but it looks like the people have become so fond of our new governor that they want a real celebration when he takes office. We're going to give it to them."

Judge Hamilton is in charge of the committees making arrangements for the inauguration. One of the big tasks that faces his group is to raise money to finance the inauguration, which is a show the city of Frankfort and its people put on for the rest of the State out of their own pockets. It costs lots of money to stage an inauguration, what with several bands and all the trimmings and decoration from downtown Frankfort, where the victory parade forms across the St. Clair Street Bridge out East Second street and up broad Capitol avenue to the Statehouse.

FROM EVERY COUNTY

Delegates from every county in the State will make up the crowd of more than 10,000 expected to gather around the Wm. Goebel monument at the head of the Capitol plaza to hear the new governor deliver his inaugural address.

Although the inauguration proper takes place at high noon in accordance with Kentucky tradition, the festivities won't get under way until darkness falls on the Kentucky River Valley. The inaugural ball and reception will take place at night, up on Capitol Hill, and it will be in the form of a homecoming for all of the new executive's friends. The dress suit requirement that marked many previous inaugurations already has been abandoned by Gov.-elect Chandler. A six-gallon hat, overalls, boots, bonnets and gingham dresses will be as good admission cards to the $100-000 executive mansion as will tails, top hats and white tie and flowing evening gowns.

While the more exclusive chapter of the Chandler inauguration will be written in the limestone front, three-story, multi-roomed mansion perched on a bluff on the Kentucky River, the real celebration, will take place in the State Capitol. The crowds usually turn out in a big way in the capital on inauguration night. Several orchestras have been engaged to provide music for dancers on the marble floors of the new Statehouse. The three office floors, with their Tennessee marble floorings, make ideal dance halls, while the hardwood floored larger offices take care of the overflow crowds. The granite and marble railings and stairways afford ample resting place for those for whom the pace is too fast.

All-in-all, December 10, 1935, is expected to be one of the biggest days Frankfort has ever had. The inauguration ceremonies will be strictly a one-day show, for on December 11 the executive mansion will become the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Chandler and family, and the Statehouse, after the janitors get through their work, will become once more the scene of hum-drum activity that always accompanies the installation of a new official family.

CORRECTION

We regret very much that a number of errors occurred in the election returns for this county in last week's issue of The Recorder. Due to a breakdown of part of the machinery we were rushed at press time and the precincts were not arranged in alphabetical order, thus giving misleading returns for the various precincts. We are again running the returns in corrected form as many citizens keep these for references and comparative statistics for future elections.

Mr. L. A. Conner and wife were visiting in Florence Monday night.

NEW FEATURE

TO RUN MONTHLY STARTING IN FIRST ISSUE OF NEW YEAR

Starting with the New Year, the Boone County Recorder will give its readers early in January, a new editorial feature in the form of a monthly farm-section dealing comprehensively with the news of Kentucky agriculture and the markets reached by the products of Kentucky.

Produced entirely in rotogravure, our STATE FARMER SECTION will be crowded with pictures of farm scenes, individuals prominent in farm circles, and other illustrated features of special interest to the people of our County.

Editorial arrangements provide for complete coverage of all important farm news from Frankfort, Lexington, the markets at Louisville, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis and other points of primary interest to Kentucky. Special correspondents will cover the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the AAA, and all farm news centers in Washington. Farm organization activities will be regularly reported.

In addition to news and factual information, our STATE FARMER SECTION will carry timely articles by outstanding authorities. A special feature of the section will be a woman's page devoted to the interest of Kentucky home-makers.

The new farm section will serve as a dependable source of information for all interested in farming in this county. It is added without extra cost to our subscribers as one more contribution of this paper to the development of the social and economic welfare of our county.

NOTICE

All persons taking part in the Operetta to be given at the school auditorium in the near future are urged to be present Thursday night at the school auditorium. This is very important so please make every effort possible to be there.

Mrs. Alice Yelton.

BURLINGTON STREET LIGHTS

All through the depression the streets of Burlington were well lighted but from some cause several lights have been discontinued recently. It would appear strange that as times have improved that any lights would be discontinued when we were able to maintain all of them during dull times.

Talk this over with your neighbor on the corner, that is now in darkness, and let's have all corners lighted like they once were. It costs less than a two-cent postage stamp per day for each interested family to have a nice well lighted town. Think this over. These long dark winter nights will be a lot darker without your corner being lighted.

ARTICLE

TAKEN FROM THE JOURNAL OF AMERICAN BUSINESS RELATIVE TO THE BOONE COUNTY SCHOOL SYSTEM

An article in the October issue of the Journal of American Business concerning the school system of Boone County reads:

The Boone County public school system in the state of Kentucky has established itself firmly as a leader among the county departments of education in the Kentucky area with its institution of measures designed to overcome the disadvantages wrought by the great reduction in funds allotted to the county educational units.

With the cooperation and assistance furnished by the Boone County Board of Education, Supt. D. H. Norris has brought about revisions in the methods of procedure pursued by the county school system. These measures, based upon practical expediency, have been adopted with a view toward the incorporation of all the advantages made possible by state and Federal emergency rulings. Members of the Boone County Board of Education are Hubert Conner, Chairman, Roy Kinney, vice chairman, John L. Jones, Mark Cook and J. J. Maurer.

It is not known how the Journal of American Business received the information regarding the school system of Boone County.

Mr. Harold Conner, of Burlington, will leave Wednesday of this week for St. Petersburg, Fla., and will enter his greyhounds in the races there.

PRESIDENT

ROOSEVELT LEADS ILLINOIS POLL MORE THAN 350,000

Illinois would be in the Roosevelt column by a plurality of more than 350,000 votes, if the Presidential election were held tomorrow, exactly one year ahead of the regular date, says the Chicago Times (Ind.) in announcing the result of its three-week straw vote of the city and State.

"Roosevelt stands to come up to Cook county (Chicago), the canvass shows, with a victory margin ranging from 150,000 to 175,000. He should carry Cook county, according to the straw vote results, by 229,000. The Times poll gave the administration 58.5 per cent of the total. Of particular significance in the city was the fact that the Negro wards, which voted for Hoover in 1932, have swung around to the New Deal.

"Dissenting politicians point out that the strength of the Democratic organization has increased tremendously since the last residential election. They refer to the mayoralty election of last Spring, when, with Mayor Kelly's popularity, the Democratic organization helped produce a victory margin of more than 600,000 over the G. O. P. candidate. But whether the actual plurality is greater or less, the Times signpost of 350,000, the State is not as important as the fact that all straws are blowing in the direction of a Roosevelt victory in Illinois in 1936."

HEAVY LOSSES

Boone County farmers should give all attention to save soil fertility during the winter months, according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Experiments being conducted at the Kentucky Experiment Station indicate heavy losses of nitrogen even on less fertile and during the winter months where there is no green cover crop.

Where lespedeza was cut off close in the fall and no cover crop seeded 121 pounds of nitrogen or in terms of Nitrate of Soda, approximately 800 pounds of nitrate fertilizer per acre was lost between October 1st and June 30th thru leaching alone. Where rye was seeded October 1st with lespedeza as a winter cover and companion crop the loss thru leaching was only 2 pounds per acre.

Lespedeza thru the growing period is one of the best nitrogen building crops. The loss on cultivated land thru leaching and particularly erosion would be probably much greater. We might say our soils don't wear out, they wash or erode and leach away when there is no green cover crop growing at all times.

The Boone County Soil Improvement Program is working on the following simple plan: (1) All Boone County soils will grow excellent grasses and clovers through use of lime and phosphate and good seedling mixtures, this in turn builds up soils. (2) Proper use of winter cover crops as soon as cultivated crops are harvested.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Fiscal Court held a special session Monday, Nov. 18th the purpose of which was to discuss the Relief Projects for Boone County.

Several hunters have been arrested by Game Warden Edwin Johnson since the opening of the hunting season. Some of these were charged with hunting on the new game reserve. Although our game reserve is young, everyone in Boone County is proud of the fact that we now have a better outlook for hunting in the near future. It is the duty of every GOOD SPORT to help protect and preserve the game in these areas that are included in the reserves.

Geo. Walton, Jr. of near Waterloo was arrested and brought before the County Judge, N. E. Riddell Monday for hearing on the charges of kidnapping his small son. He was released on bond.

LIME REPORT

The crusher in the Boone County Soil Improvement Program worked 11 days from November 1st to November 16th and crushed 479 tons or an average of 44 tons per day, according to Joe Broderick, Assistant County Agent. The crusher is working at the farm of R. B. Huey near Burlington and will proceed in consecutive order to farms of Dr. M. A. Yelton, A. G. McMullen, R. L. Anderson, Howard Ryle, Chester Ayler and thence toward Walton.

NETTERS

OF LOCAL SCHOOL MAKE INITIAL APPEARANCE OF HOME COURT FRIDAY NIGHT

The first home game of the present season will be played Friday night in the local gym between the Tomcats of the Burlington school and the A. J. Jolly team of California, Ky. The Tomcats were defeated by the Hamilton Farmers last Thursday night on the letter floor by a score of 28 to 17 but showed signs of developing into a winning quintet before the season ends. Only one man, Orville Sebree, from last year's crack team, which went to the finals in the regional tournament remains for this year's team. The other men having been lost through graduation. However, several promising players have come through with signs of basket ball ability, and with the fighting spirit which seems to dominate the Tomcats and a bit of backing from the local fans Burlington should again make a credible showing.

There will be no girls game this week as the California school does not sponsor girls basket ball. However there will be a warm up game between the second teams from the two schools and following the main game there will be a game between the Burlington and Petersburg Inv. dependent teams.

Lets come out and get behind our teams from the start and help us make this one of the best seasons that B. H. S. has ever had. The admission charges are ten and twenty cents and the first game will be called at 7:00 P. M.

SUICIDE

COMMITTED BY WILLIAMSTOWN YOUTH AS HE BLOWS TOP OF HEAD OFF WITH SHOTGUN

Williamstown, Ky., Nov. 19.—A suicide verdict was returned today by Claude Neal, Grant county coroner, in the death of Ben Frank Ashcraft, 18, who ended his life yesterday with a shotgun in a barn near his home on the Sherman Newtown road, two miles west of Sherman.

The body was found in the barn by his mother, Mrs. Sarah Ashcraft, a widow. The youth had taken off his right shoe, placed the muzzle of the 12-gauge shotgun against his forehead and pulled the trigger with his toe. The entire top of his head was blown off.

Mrs. Ashcraft told Coroner Neal the youth had been despondent the past few days, but she was unable to give any reason for his despondency. He left home early yesterday, she said, after telling her he was going hunting.

Besides his mother, he leaves three younger brothers. Funeral services were to be held this afternoon at the O. P. Elliston undertaking establishment, Williams-town. Burial was to be in the Williamstown Cemetery.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

Many of our subscribers have received notices of the amount they owe for their subscriptions the past week. We have tried to be as lenient as possible in extending credit, because of the financial condition of our people. We recognize, however, that a debt which continues to pile up year after year, soon becomes a liability which many people cannot pay. We therefore deemed it best to try to clear our list up.

From now on the Recorder is operating its list on a different basis. We shall send post cards to each subscriber the month his subscription to the paper expires. If a subscriber receives one of our notices, that does not mean that we are saying his credit is bad. It is simply saying that the subscription has run out, and we are trying to remind the subscriber of the fact, and thus prevent any subscriber running up a large subscription bill. We believe that everyone can pay $1.50 easier than they can pay a bill of $3.00, $4.50, $6.00 or $7.50.

The depression has been hard on every business house and individual and the Recorder is not an exception. We cannot operate a good county paper and send it each week on thin air. We have got to have your subscription price in order to pay the high cost of paper, printing ink, electric power, labor and mailing costs, to say nothing of many incidental propositions. A county paper is an expensive thing to operate, and it has become impossible for us to continue to extend unlimited credit to hundreds of subscribers. We believe that every one of our subscribers will see this point of view from our side and will try to help us in clearing up back subscription debts and keeping the subscriptions up to date.

Yours very truly,
THE BOONE CO. RECORDER

REPORT OF

LIVESTOCK MARKETS AND GENERAL PROSPECTS

BY

NORRIS, BROCK CO.

Many of our friends and customers have made inquiry as to why they have not been receiving our market and prospect card. Quite a few thought that we had taken their names off our mailing list, not having received our cards. This opinion is entirely wrong as we have not taken anyone off. Our reason for not putting out the card is that in them we endeavor to give our viewpoint and prospects of the market, based upon good business reasoning for conclusions given in same. Owing to the unsettled condition of general business and the live stock markets we have not been able to give you what we consider reliable prospects. We have been like the boy the calf ran over. "We had nothing to say."

CATTLE—From our viewpoint cattle are bringing fairly good prices, conditions considered, and they will pay their feed bill at prospective prices of feed and show a profit. We think the best way to sell feed is by putting it into cattle, hogs, etc. If you have no cattle we advise buying young stock growing the money out of them, as forage is plentiful this season, otherwise get into cattle breeding as soon as you can as it will take some time for us to catch up in cattle. We cannot depend on the Western Breeder altogether as they are short also.

Calves—Are selling high compared to other live stock, therefore it is paying the breeder who has continued to raise calves, especially the ones who have made it a point to use good bulls on their herds.

HOGS—We think they have passed the high point for some time to come and if we can hold them at present prices they will pay a handsome board bill at the present and prospective price of corn. We say raise and feed all the hogs you can as we believe future prospects denote that there will be ample demand for the next several years. Do not run out of foundation stock. We will repeat an old and true saying, "The man that has nothing to sell is the farthest from market."

We have customers come to us daily for young cattle, stock hogs and sheep. We inquire why they have run out of Live Stock, the answer is that it did not pay to raise them. It is paying the man who remained in the business, further more he has the foundation stock with which to continue in business, producing at a profit and not having to pay exorbitant prices for feeding stock. Our observations have been that the successful farmer is the man that always has growing live stock on hand with something to sell.

LAMBS—Lambs are bringing good prices and have sold well right along and have been a paying proposition, and our advice is to stay with the sheep and increase your flock, which is hard to do, as we have numerous people come to us for stock ewes which we are unable to supply. The wise sheep owners are keeping a percentage of their ewe lambs for breeding purposes. Do not expect the other fellow to raise young stock of any kind to sell to you at less than cost of production prices. The only way to win in the live stock business or any other is to stay in the game.

The business pendulum is swinging upward. The American people are taking on renewed energy and business will adjust itself as it always has done before. The farmer needs pigs to make hogs, calves to make cattle, and sheep to make lambs and wool. The storekeeper may have a fine building and fixtures but unless he has goods to sell he has no business, and fits overhead will devour him financially. The farmer may have a good farm but if he does not raise live stock he is in the same position.

That there is actually less than a two week's supply of meat in storage or being processed.

That it takes 50,000,000 pounds of meat per day to feed this country. That only a little more than half

THE END OF FREE SPEECH?

One clause of the Public Utility Act of 1935, the bitterly-debated Wheeler-Rayburn bill, should be read by every citizen interested in the fundamental rights guaranteed us by both the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

Here is the clause: "It shall be unlawful for any person employed or retained by any registered holding company, or any subsidiary company thereof, to present, advocate, or oppose any matter affecting any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, before the Congress or any member or committee thereof, unless such person shall file with the (Securities & Exchange) Commission a statement of the subject matter in respect of which such person is retained or employed, the nature and character of such retainer or employment,....." Punishment for violation of this clause is a fine up to $10,000, imprisonment up to 2 years, or both.

Now consider the possibilities: If, for example, Joe Brown, clerk in the bookkeeping department of a holding or operating utility, becomes dissatisfied with his working conditions, he cannot communicate legally with his elected representatives in Congress without going through a maze of red tape. If he happens to own a little company stock, and believes some governmental policy endangers its value, and says so, he is again faced with fine and imprisonment. It will be said, of course, that the law is not designed to cover such cases, and would not be literally enforced—but the fact remains that the law, as written, covers every employee and worker, and that the administering commission has no authority to make exceptions.

This goes far beyond any question of whether holding companies are good or bad. It goes straight to the underlying philosophy of our government. It goes to the roots of the right of free speech—of which the right of protest is an inescapable part. If the legislative branch of government possesses the power to deny one group of citizens these fundamental rights, it can extend the prohibition to another and all groups. It can establish an absolute dictatorship and indefinitely prolong the political status quo through the weapon of all dictators—fear of punishment. It can abolish every democratic principle, and make the Constitution impotent.

The first amendment to the Constitution, which laid the groundwork for the Bill of Rights, says: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the rights of the people to assemble, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES."

Reread that Amendment—then reread the astounding clause from the Public Utility Act of 1935. How can the two diverse philosophies of government they represent be squared? The real issue here is Constitutionalism versus a sort of fascistic dictatorship.

ENIGME EVENT AT ## THE WHITE HOUSE

Six beautiful white horses hauled a white sleigh over the snows thru the streets of Washington in late December 1802, and stopped in front of the White House where a mammoth Massachusetts cheese was delivered to President Thomas Jefferson.

History loves to repeat itself and the Jeffersonian event left behind it so much good will and such abundant pleasant recollections that one of the features of National Cheese Week witnesses six beautiful white horses again hauling a white sleigh to the White House for a ceremony in which President Roosevelt was scheduled to become the possessor of another mammoth cheese. This time it comes from Weyauwega, Wisconsin where it was made by Raymond J. Patton, a master cheese maker. It weighs 1,250 pounds and is of the same size and proportion as the Jefferson cheese.

President Roosevelt in turn, transferred the gift to charitable organizations in Washington, to help them provide for the needy of the city.

This unique ceremony is a reminder that cheese has been an item of food in the world for five thousand years, that cheese-making flourished as an industry more than two thousand years before the beginning of the Christian era. There are more than four hundred different varieties of cheese in the world and over four hundred are known and produced in America.

There ceremony at the White House was one of the outstanding events in the nation-wide observance when annual tribute is paid to King Cheese, through the National Cheese Week celebration.

Editorial of the Week

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Only a few months ago it was widely said that the League of Nations was a colossal failure. Today there seems to be an excellent chance that it will be able to do what seemed the impossible—stop Mussolini's African colonization ambitions.

Italian troops are still fighting in Ethiopia papers, which are merely the echoes of the dictator, still say that Mussolini's war-like spirit is unquelled. But, at Geneva, Italian spokesmen are talking in much softer voices. They seem genuinely worried.

Reason: Through League action, 50 nations have pledged themselves to stiff economic sanctions against Italy—and England, leader of the League in the present crisis, has refused to reduce its Mediterranean fleet, is sending still more ships to key points.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS

The farmers of the country have shown their approval of the corn and hog feature of the A. A. A. by a seven to one vote in its favor.

Some people are worrying because the government owes several billion dollars. As far as I am concerned the few hundred dollars that I owe is bothering me more than the several billions the government owes. As a matter of fact I think the government will get its debt paid before I will mine.

If you feel a little doubt about how the names of the Ethiopian towns should be pronounced don't let it cramp your fluency. The chances are that no one else with in hearing knows how to pronounce them either.

I recall when a farmer in this section who did his chores before lantern light was almost regarded as shiftless. Now days a man who has to use a lantern to get his chores done in this section is looked upon as a poor manager by his neighbors.

As can be expected, there were a number of game law breakers on the first day of the hunting season. Of course we admit that it is hard to hold your trigger still when a quail is seen, but at that, it wouldn't be as hard as raking up fifty dollars.

Ancient China lies in two river valleys the Hoang-Ho and the Kiang. How the people came there and where from is little known. Chinese is the oldest of all extant civilizations, but one of whose origins we know the least. 2200 B. C. rulers were elected and before that no ruler governed all of China. Jin-Sho in 2852 B. C. taught the use of fire and Fu-Fi invented the process of making iron, in 247 B. C. the emperor Tsin-Chi-Hwang-Ti built roads and canals and erected the great Chinese wall after he had driven back Hsing Nu the ancestors of the Huns, he also burned all the books. China today has nearly a third of all the people of the world 440,000,000. My first visit to China was in 1926, to the city of Shanghai on the Wham Po river 60 miles from the Yellow Sea. Shanghai is the world's largest Port, ships of all nations enter and leave the port. You can see many strange sights in Shanghai, and what I was most interested in was the way the Chinese lived.

SEEN and HEARD around the NATIONAL CAPITAL By Carter Field

Washington.—Even the Republicans are surprised at certain Democratic attacks on James A. Farley as a result of his pre-election claims. Demands that he resign, coming from an outstanding Democratic newspaper, put together with the fact that the Democrats registered a net majority in the Empire state of 360,000, cause some insiders here to wonder if there is something underlying the situation they do not understand.

It is perfectly true, they admit, that Farley's pre-election claims gave the Republicans a chance to do some crowing over their regaining of the control of the New York assembly. But it was pretty sad crowing, mostly done before the vote tabulation showed that huge Democratic majority.

Privately, Republicans were searching around for comfort next day as far as New York state is concerned. They finally decided that Tammany put forth all its effort because of its necessity for getting a strangle hold on the board of aldermen, and thus short circuiting Mayor La Guardia. Whereas there were no fights calculated to bring out a big vote upstate except in Erie county, where the Republicans did pretty well.

Actually, however, it always has been Farley's strategy to claim everything, concede nothing. He has explained his theory to newspaper men many times. For example, in 1932 Farley knew perfectly well there was no chance of Franklin D. Roosevelt's carrying Vermont. But, as he told friends at the time, if he conceded Vermont, publicly, all the party workers in that state would lay down. Whereas if he claimed it, and sent them speakers, money and assistance generally, they would be up on their toes fighting.

As a result, the shrewd Jim commented, "We might win a corner here, and a sheriff there, and a member of the legislature somewhere else." Then, next election, these winners will be on the job working for our ticket, and will not have to be paid orajoled. In fact, his theory is that three or four hard fights, even in hopeless territory, will be apt to produce a winning by and by.

Logic Accepted

Now the fact is that no politician who ever won a campaign disavows with that logic. They may not practice it, because they may not have the time and energy to spare. Generally they think they haven't, anyhow, and so often they do not make these hopeless fights. But there is seemingly no limit to Farley's energy, and he has actually had all the money he needed in every campaign, regardless of plaintive statements to the contrary. His strategy, incidentally, is abundantly justified by what has happened in upstate New York as a result of campaigning in hopeless territory. With a live, fighting Democratic organization in every upstate county, the old-time majorities above the Bronx have shrunk until they are swamped by the Democratic majorities in the big town.

This was demonstrated in this election, where despite a very sizable showing of Republican strength upstate, the net vote in the entire state was 350,000 Democratic.

In fact, the main hope of the Republicans about the Empire state, whose 47 electoral votes are so vital to any hope of beating the New Deal next November, lies in the belief that so many New Yorkers vote Democratic locally, but Republican nationally. This was certainly a factor in the Al Smith races for governor. Smith's record of running a million votes ahead of his national ticket in 1920 is still unmatched.

Those Wiley Poles

The government at Warsaw may not appreciate it, but it has a very effective embassy in Washington. In fact, a great deal more effective than is considered necessary by the milling interests of this country, not to mention speculators in rye.

The Wiley Poles, apparently, were just shrewd enough to realize that this administration does not like speculation, loves to see speculators get it in the neck, and lacks utterly any desire to help these "non-producers" pile up profits, despite the obvious fact that such profits would boost income tax receipts for the treasury.

All of which is concerned with rye and rye flour, not very exciting in themselves, but highly interesting to those who produce them, and those who buy and sell them.

It also concerns the feverish desire of many European countries, in the last few years, to make themselves self-supporting on foodstuffs, against the evil day when war might cut off their imports. In this particular case it has to do with the efforts of Poland in that direction.

This desire on the part of all European countries, practically, became very apparent to the farming interests of this country several years ago. Also to the milling interests and the grain trade generally.

They wopt all over the shoulders of their senators and representatives, as a result of which congress passed a law which made it mandatory on the secretary of the treasury to add what is called a countervailing duty to the tariff on food products in certain circumstances.

The certain circumstance is when the producing country pays a bounty for the production of that foodstuff. The idea is to boost the tariff precisely that same amount, so that the payment of the bounty in the producing country will not give the foreign producer an unfair advantage over the American producer.

Rye Poured In

Last spring prices for rye were high in this country, and some of this Polish rye and also some Polish rye flour began pouring in. Whereupon there were loud cries from the grain trade for the treasury to put the "mandatory" countervailing duty in effect.

Treasury officials consulted with the State department. Also with the Polish embassy. The State department folks did not like it much. It flew in the face of Secretary Hull's well-known opposition to trade barriers. Mr. Hull himself talked about it with the Polish ambassador.

One lieutenant of Mr. Hull was such a frequent attendant at cocktail parties of the Polish embassy that one of the underlings there humorously asked him if he "had learned to speak Polish yet." He tells this story on himself, so it is not a question of the Poles laughing about their own accomplishments. They are much too shrewd for that.

But the Poles made quite a point in their talk with our State and Treasury folks of the fact that the American farmer was not being hurt by this Polish competition in the slightest degree, whereas the American consumer was being benefited.

Hopkins' Faux Pas

The two people who are most detected by Harry L. Hopkins' faux pas in attacking Gov. Alfred M. Landon of Kansas, the resentment that the "never put up a thin dime" accusation aroused, and the prompt necessity for a backdown are, in the order named, James A. Farley and Governor Landon.

Farley's chagrin is natural enough. One of the cleverest organizers and politicians of our time, he naturally hates to see his shrewdly planned campaign messed up by bungling, even if he himself is not responsible.

Landon's disappointment is far more subtle, but just as sound politically. It can be explained in four words: It came too soon.

The point is that Landon knows perfectly well he is getting out in front far too quickly. He has been publicly advertised as the probable nominee in too many quarters. For instance, by William Randolph Hearst, who has been giving the Kansas Coolidge plenty of publicity both in his newspapers and magazines. Then it was allowed to leak out that President Roosevelt told several friends on his way across the country to San Diego that he figured it would be Landon who would oppose him in 1936.

Which, incidentally, is the answer to the venom and force with which Hopkins struck.

Landon is a comparatively young man, but he has seen enough of politics to know that the old tradition about a candidate's getting too far out in front too soon is not just an old wives' tale. Most of the time it works.

A Bit of History

For example, 1920. When the Republican national committee met in Washington in December, just six months before the convention, it appeared that Leonard Wood was virtually nominated. A glance back at the newspaper files of that month will show that virtually every reporter in Washington, writing for out-of-town papers, and regardless of the slants of his own paper, was impressed by the Wood strength. In fact, if the convention had been convened the day the national committee adjourned, Wood would have been nominated on the first ballot.

All the other candidates "ganged" him. He made some bad mistakes, and when the convention met all-but a few enthusiasts knew he had no chance.

Four years later William G. McAdoo was out in front for the Democratic nomination. Alfred E. Smith was a close runner-up. Both were wrecked by an issue which neither had anything to do with starting. It was aimed at McAdoo, but it prevented the nomination of either.

The nominations of Smith, in 1928, and Roosevelt, in 1932, seem exceptions to the rule, but they prove nothing. For Smith was given a nomination known in advance to be absolutely hopeless, and it was given to heal the religious breach made in 1924. Roosevelt got a head start very largely because the South and the Bible Belt were scared to death that Smith would take the nomination again. There are many who think that if Smith had taken himself out of the race, even at the convening of the convention, Roosevelt would never have been named.

Landon was sitting very nicely, indeed, up to the Hopkins blast, when Herbert Hoover and Senator William E. Borah virtually shooting at each other, Col. Franklin Knox harrying the administration, and Landon just getting a lot of good publicity. But the effect of the Hopkins boomerang may easily be to center the fire of friends of Hoover, Borah and Knox, to mention only three, on the Kansas governor!

How Calotabs Help Nature To Throw Off a Bad Cold

Millions have found in Calotabs a most valuable aid in the treatment of colds. They take one or two tablets the first night and repeat the third or fifth night if needed. How do Calotabs help Nature throw off a cold? First, Calotabs is one of the most thorough and dependable of all intestinal eliminants, thus cleansing the intestinal tract of the germ-laden mucus and toxins.

Second, Calotabs are diuretic to the kidneys, promoting the elimination of cold poisons from the system. Thus Calotabs serve the double purpose of a purgative and diuretic, both of which are needed in the treatment of colds. Calotabs are quite economical: only twenty-five cents for the family package, ten cents for the trial package. (Adv.)

Word has just been received from
Mr. and Mrs. Boone Ryle that they arrived in Florida safely, making

They also report one hurricane on November 4th but their loss was small. They wish to extend their best wishes to everyone in Boone county.

LIVESTOCK REPORT

of the beef steer, and two-thirds of the hog is edible meat.

That about 80 percent of the corn, 90 percent of the oats and practically all of the forage and pasture crops are cashed through live stock, and would be of little value if not utilized in this way.

That there are millions of people who do not get as much meats as they should have, let alone what they would like to have. The same applies to clothing and all other basic commodities.

QUESTIONS

Are we suffering from over production or are we suffering from under consumption?

Is everybody getting as much as they want or should have to eat and wear? If not, WHY?

We are glad to announce that Swift & Company has a buyer for all kinds of cattle every market day, something we have agitated for a number of years. Our hope is that other big killers will follow, which will help our market. WHEN

Farmers at Mayfield, Ky., celebrated the arrival October 15 of the 100th carload of limestone to their territory.

W. T. Forsee & Sons of Owen-co., bought three registered cattle to improve their herds.

Farmers in Meade county are cashing in on special orders for early turkeys, getting a premium of 2 to 3 cents a pound.

Lee Hopson of Trigg county terraced 15 acres of land at a cost of $150 an acre, and will terrace 15 acres this month.

In Crittenden county, a representative of the I. C. railway helped conduct community meetings to discuss strawberry production.

The Todd-Caldwell County Dairy Herd Improvement Association was organized last month, and a tester employed.

Several Marshall county farmers are building new barns with ridge and bottom ventilators.

Mrs. John Moore, who had the only certified poultry flock in Boyd county last year, is having her flock certified again.

In Livingston and Lyon counties, 46,800 pounds of TVA super-phosphate were spread on the land last month.

Twenty-five acres of land were terraced on the farm of W. S. Shanklin in Todd county, as a demonstration for a large group of the farmers.

Demands for wheat and barley seed for winter cover crops exceeded supplies in Union county.

Mrs. John D. Henry of Morgan county has sold about $800 worth of eggs and chickens.

A Graves county farmer seeded 25 acres to hairy vetch this fall, to cut for feed.

Quite a few local fox hunters enjoyed a good night's chase Monday night. The weather was ideal for this sport.

The Day Before Thanksgiving

New England Thanksgiving Busy Time

THANKSGIVING day! How these words spelled days and days of work and worry for the colonial housewife! A festive holiday it was called by proclamation, observes a writer in the Boston Herald, but actually it represented a day which demanded more preparation than most any other in the year. Our old New England traditions required it—the Puritans did, so must we—the common understanding of the day.

In days of yore grandmother would start her Thanksgiving preparation weeks in advance. The pies must be made. Of course she wouldn't serve mince pie that hadn't "ripened." They were made in quantity and put down cellar where they frequently froze to a solidity overcome only by a hot oven just before the feast.

In passing it might be well to remind you of the custom in one New England family to have three pieces of pie for breakfast on Thanksgiving morn. Mince, apple and squash were the three dictated by tradition.

Well in advance of the traditional day one would see grandmother take down the seasoning used but a few times a year, the crackers would be ground up and gradually the stuffing for the turkey was prepared—this also went down cellar to ripen. We mustn't forget the plum pudding, which was made well in advance and hung in a bag up in the attic suspended from a nail so interested mice could not approach.

Then came the days before Thanksgiving. Sons were drafted to collect and crack the butternuts, walnuts, beechnuts, etc. (and more than one finger was smashed in the process). Daughters were drafted to peel squash, turnips, carrots, potatoes, sweet and white, and of course the proverbial tear-producing onions.

The turkey must be caught, killed, plucked, singed and hung up for a day before he was brought to the kitchen. Grandmother must make her famous nut bread for William ("he does like it so when he comes home"). "Sadie, you make the fudge—Alice, you make the molasses candy—Sue, you make— and so it goes. Everyone hustles, all wanting the same dishes, the same stove cover, the mixer spoon, etc.

"Johnny! Oh Johnny! Go down to the village and get me some more crackers—Glory me! I've run out of seasoning"—and the errands start.

Thanksgiving Preparations Started Long In Advance.

These were typical New England days of preparation for the Thanksgiving feast, all of which must be executed in addition to the regular chores of making butter for market twice a week, churning the cottage cheese, collecting the eggs, etc., etc.

Then came the day—the house must be spick and span. Dozens of pictures must be dusted, the parlor must be opened up, wood brought in for the extra stove, chestnuts gathered to put on the fireplace hearth—and on went the great process of preparation.

The folks came, hugs and kisses went the rounds, the new baby was chucked under the chin and an immediate retreat to the kitchen by the feminine members took place. By one-thirty or two the feast took place—and then the dishes. Stacks upon stacks of dishes, pots and pans (usually the turkey pan went under the sink for scouring the following day).

Games, gossip, etc., occupied a brief period until time for supper, when again the kitchen staff swung into action and made turkey sandwiches, poured the cider and cut up the pies.

As the lights were blown out it was unusual to hear the women folks say, "Didn't we have a good time, but isn't Thanksgiving a tiresome day!"

This was the Thanksgiving of yore contrasted to the modern Thanksgiving of a restful morning, a motor ride through the country or a ride "in town," a sumptuous dinner prepared by chefs who have vied with grandmother and her recipes until even she is forced to admit that she has been surprised—a delightful matinee at the theater and an evening in the game cellar at home. What a contrast—and what a pity that grandmothers of old couldn't be here now to reap the benefits of the advance of New England family traditions!

THE THANKSGIVING PIE

Thanksgiving Pumpkin Pies

From the time the first golden pumpkin makes its appearance until the last one has been taken out of storage, there's no more universally popular dessert than pumpkin pie. Although canned pumpkin is available at all times and makes excellent pies, pumpkin pie enjoys a definite season and is most appreciated during the autumn months. Everybody has his own very definite ideas of just what a pumpkin pie should be from color to taste.

OYSTER SUPPER

The members of the Constance P. T. A. are sponsoring an Oyster Supper at the school house Saturday evening, November 23. Besides soup there will be ham sandwiches, salad, pie, cake, coffee, ice cream and candy. Also a fish pond, a special attraction for the kiddies. Come and enjoy the evening with us.

COMMITTEES WORKING ON NEW TOBACCO CONTRACTS

Boone County AAA Tobacco Control Committee have been working hard the past week attempting to get bases on the new 1935-36 tobacco contract adjusted so that each grower will have the most equitable base possible.

The adjusting of bases to be was a visitor in Burlington Saturday. Mr. Snelling says he has the contract signer or not is an impossible job for any man or group of men. The committees however, are doing a conscientious job and it is hoped the new base will be satisfactory to all. It is hoped the new contracts will be available at the time of signing allotment cards. Allotment cards will be ready in about two weeks.

Decide NOW To ## SELL IN LEXINGTON THIS YEAR

The Lexington tobacco market, largest in the entire burley belt, is now open and ready to receive tobacco for the opening of the 1935-36 sales season, which starts here Monday, December 2.

Much could be said about the advantages in selling in Lexington—there is more room, more buyers, more competition—but the most important thing is that tobacco DOES bring more when sold in Lexington.

LAST YEAR LEXINGTON SOLD 60,339,118 POUNDS OF TOBACCO FOR AN AVERAGE OF $18.56
LAST YEAR ALL OTHER MARKETS SOLD 196,747-206 POUNDS FOR AN AVERAGE OF $16.44

For an additional $2.12 per hundred you will find that it pays to come a long ways to sell in Lexington. Just ask your neighbor who sells here.

BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY

NUMBER 39

SALE

OF TUBERCULOSIS CHRISTMAS SEALS BEGINS

Forty thousand Tuberculosis Christmas Seals have been mailed to individuals and the schools of Boone county according to R. V. Lents, of Constance, who is in charge of the sales in Boone county.

The school that sells the most seals per pupil enrolled will receive a beautiful loving cup, and the school that sells next most seals per pupil will receive an elegant electric clock. The pupil in each school that sells the most seals will receive a handsome gift that can be used every day with his name printed on it in gold letters.

Mr. Lents says the seal campaign will end Christmas. If Boone county had a Tuberculosis Association a certain per cent of the proceeds of the sale of the seals would go to this chapter, but in as much as the county has no such chapter, the money will be used in our schools, for health promotion and education. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," and for the prevention of tuberculosis and other diseases, and the education of our youth Boone county's part will be spent.

Boone county's quota has been set at three seals per person, and Mr. Lents is asking everybody in the county to cooperate by purchasing a few seals. If you cannot obtain seals from your school write to R. V. Lents, Ludlow, Ky., Route 2, and he will gladly mail you the number you wish.

The seals sell for one cent each and everybody can afford to buy a few. The selling of the seals is the only means the Kentucky Tuberculosis Association has for keeping its hospital for tuberculosis patients.

ATTEMPT TO FIRE

GREENE SCHOOL BUILDING BECAUSE TRUANT OFFICER WAS FORCING HIM TO ATTEND CLASSES—WINFRED KIRTMAN HELD AT WILLIAMSTOWN

Winfred Kirtman, a Grant county youth, of 17, attempted to burn the Greene School building, of which he is a pupil, yesterday, because the truant officer forced him to attend classes during the rabbit season.

After admitting that he attempted to fire the little school building Winfred was taken to Williams-town, the county seat, where he is to be arranged before Judge C. A. Pettit in Grant County court.

The fire was discovered by Sol Washem, the truant officer who noticed from the window of his home the smoke coming from the school building. The fire was extinguished without difficulty and an investigation was started.

An agreement made between Roscoe Akin, Woolper sharpshooter, and Ted Cress, of Burlington, to the effect that the one killing the most rabbits on Thanksgiving day would also get the rabbits killed by the loser. This agreement was carried out on that day in the wilds of Woolper, the score at noon being 5 to 2 in favor of Cress and at the end of the days hunt Cress emerged victor 9 to 7.

On the percentage basis, however, Akin outdone his opponent as he pulled the trigger only thirteen times whereas Cress shot twenty-eight times.

Even though rabbits are very scarce and their value is very small, hunting under such conditions and agreements make it a great sport.

MORE RELIEF MADE POSSIBLE THROUGH ACT OF LAFFOON

Governor Ruby Laffoon has made available to George H. Goodman, Works Progress and K. E. R. A. Administrator $200,000 for the care of from 15,000 to 18,000 indigent relief clients in Kentucky during the month of December. Of this amount approximately $20,000 will be used in continuing school lunches for needy children. The Governor said he was also considering an additional $50,000 allotment to supplement $60,000 already spent in November by the K. E. R. A. for clothing for school children in relief families.

Funds supplied by the Governor for the month of December will be disbursed by a skeleton force of the K. E. R. A., in full cooperation with city and county officials together with the various public charitable organizations throughout the state. The Governor, in his agreement with Mr. Goodman, said that time was too short for him to set up his own organization in Kentucky therefore he was entrusting the funds to K. E. R. A.

In disbursing school lunches and such clothing as may be available to relief children, he said, no distinction will be drawn between children from indigent families and those from families of Works Progress Administrator workers.

In a final checkup by the K. E. R. A. it was found the case load of indigents ran higher than the 14,500 mark announced several days ago and approached 16,000 cases or approximately 38,400 individuals. The reason for this, Mr. Goodman said, is in one Works Progress Administration district 701 clients were certified for jobs and when they appeared for work it was found they were wholly unfit, physically, to carry on with any kind of work, despite the fact all of them were willing and wanted to work.

"It is gratifying," Mr. Goodman said, "that Gov. Laffoon has stepped into the breach at a most critical moment and has done all in his power to alleviate suffering in Kentucky for the month of December. Had he not so generously acted, conditions in our state would have become pitiful in short order, with the discontinuance of direct relief by the Federal Government November 30."

"The people of Kentucky should know that Gov. Laffoon's act was a voluntary one. His act was humanitarian and saved the people of Kentucky from untold suffering."

Bill Ward, a former employee at The Recorder, arrived at Burlington Thursday. Bill says that he has worked on several weeklies since he left Burlington, but likes numerous others like to come back to our little village. He spent the week-end with L. C. Weaver and family.

COMPLIMENT

PAID TO BOONE COUNTY OFFICIALS BY NAT B. SEWELL, STATE INSPECTOR, ON EFFICIENCY OF THEIR WORK

Hon. Nat B. Sewell, State Inspector and Examiner reports that his office has examined the public offices in Boone County beginning July 1st, 1934, and extending to October 31st, 1935. The full and complete report has been filed in the office of the County Clerk and the letter transmitting the report is as follows:

Judge N. E. Riddell
Judge Pease County Court,
Burlington, Kentucky.
My dear Judge Riddell:

I am enclosing herewith for your files a copy of my report upon the recent examination of the public offices in your county. This report covers the second inspection that has been made under the 1934 County Audit Law, and I believe you will find that it presents a much fuller and more systematic set-up of your fiscal affairs than was possible in our first report.

The county officials of Boone County are to be commended for the interest they have shown and for the handling of fiscal affairs and in the keeping of public records. The present fiscal year will in my candid opinion, show even better results than were possible in the last year.

Please be assured that this department is interested in your work and is desirous of co-operating with you at all times in promoting your program of public service.

Sincerely yours,

NAT B. SEWELL,

State Inspector and Examiner

The report shows that the total received from all sources less commissions, exonerations, land sold for taxes, discounts and exonerated polls amounts to $68,575.57 and that there was collected an excess of $113.48, making a grand total of taxes received $68,689.05. Other income received from truck licenses, interest on tax sales and deposits in banks, criminal costs, Sale tax, Delinquent tax and other miscellaneous income of $22,152.10. Making a total income of $91,841.13. This fund was distributed and paid out for General Expense $19,404.76. Repair of roads and bridges $36,783.36. Road bonds and sinking fund $35,652.61 a total of $91,841.13. The Magistrates are allowed $6.00 per day for their services and were paid a total of $264.00 for a period of 15 months. The county has a road bond issue of $400,000.00 of which $51,000.00 has been retired and paid, there is no floating fund. There is cash in the sinking fund of $19,941.77. The county indebtedness has decreased since June 30, 1934, $22,000.00 in road and bridge bonds and $757.38 warrants that had not been presented for payment. The total cash balance increased $9,287.83 making the net financial gain from June 30, 1934 to October 1st, 1935, of $32,045.21.

As stated by Inspector Nat B. Sewell the officers of Boone County are to be commended for the interest they have shown at the past fiscal year.

The examination was made by the Official Examiner and his report should be welcomed by all citizens of Boone County as it shows that the officers who have been selected by our people have with fidelity to the county and themselves performed the duties of their office as the law requires. In the examination of the offices of the Inspector did not find a single instance in which he could criticize their acts. The records were complete and showed that every dollar received by the different officials was properly accounted for and paid the persons entitled to receive the same as the law provides. The complete report is on file in the office of the Clerk of the County Court, Hon. C. D. Benson, where any citizen may examine it as long as he may desire. The Settlement made with the Sheriff of Boone County will appear in the columns of the RECORDER in a short time. Our citizens should examine these settlements and report and fully inform themselves as to the financial and general condition of our county, and if any suggestions can be made the officials and members of the Fiscal Court would gladly hear them and follow any constructive suggestions made as their sole desire is for the improvement and upbuilding of Boone county and conducting the business of the county at the lowest possible cost to the taxpayers.

LEGISLATION PLAN

Governor A. B. Chandler proposes to ask the state legislature to meet, complete its organization and recess for a few days, in event it becomes impossible to complete its legislative program before convening of the General Assembly.

Wisdom of the proposal is obvious to all who are familiar with legislative problems. The new Governor and Lieut. Governor are inaugurated on December 10. The legislature convenes the first Tuesday in January. The interval between induction into office and convocation of the General Assembly is too brief to permit formulation of an adequate, thoughtfully prepared legislative program.

There is wisdom in the plan proposed by Governor Chandler. He contemplates asking the General Assembly to meet in accord with the constitutional mandate, effect its organization and then go home for a period, in order to permit time for a more careful preparation of a legislative plan.

It is reasonable to anticipate that such procedure will result in a more intelligent program. It will probably prevent days of inaction in early stages of the session, which necessitates hasty action in the closing phase. We are unable to find anything in the constitution or statutes which prevents following the plan proposed. We doubt not that the legislature will recognize the wisdom of the plan and co-operate in its fulfillment.

GROCERY CHAINS AND THE FARMER

The beller seems to be more or less widespread that chain grocery systems make a practice of "turning the heat" on the farmer—that they pursue unfair and unethical practices in seeking to buy farm products at under-market prices.

That may have been true once—it may still be true in the case of some less forward-looking chains. But it is not true of the larger, more successful and more progressive chains.

These chains are assertedly working wholeheartedly with the farmer—sometimes contracting for the entire crop of large producers in a locality and paying the going price. Such a course broadens the potential farm market by reducing fruit and vegetable prices to the extent that the average family can buy more—and the reduction is made possible not by shoving the farmer's end, but by reducing the handling and overhead expense costs.

These chain stores are also dealing with the established farmer-owned and controlled cooperatives, which are large and aggressive enough to see that their members get a decent price for what they sell. It is very natural that chains and farm cooperatives should thus pull together. Each is predicated on the same principle—that mass buying and selling makes possible efficiency and economy obtainable in no other way. In this way each is of definite value to the public, in that each helps provide an ample supply of stable quality produce at a fair price. Each represents a sound and modern way of doing business.

Agriculture should be one of the greatest beneficiaries of the scientific application of the "mass production" idea to the buying and selling of foods.

The Literary Digest poll has never been wrong. Some wise have suggested that its prelection polls be used to determine the winner, thus saving the government the vast expense attendant on a national election.

The Digest has now started a new poll on whether or not "You now approve the acts and policies of the Roosevelt New Deal to date." Not enough return has yet been obtained to give a decisive answer—but results are interesting.

Forty thousand ballots from five states, all of which Mr. Roosevelt carried in 1928, show that 53 per cent of the voters are against the New Deal. A similar poll, carried on in early 1934, show that 61 per cent were favorable.

Editorial of the Week

A REAL GENTLEMAN

(The late E. A. Skillman)
There is no deed that a man can do, no accomplishment that he can make, no favor that he can extend, nor any peculiar act that he can practice that will make him an unusual man of the past more so than will the act of being what people call a real gentleman. The average man when overtaken by death is soon forgotten, that is by the majority of people, but the real gentleman, after death, is daily the topic of conversation, neighbors and fellow business men.

I have in mind, the late Edward A. Skillman, who on two occasions was a citizen of this county. In his middle years he was principal of the local school for several years, at which time he lived up to the title A REAL GENTLEMAN. His pupils, his fellow teachers and the citizens of the town will verify this. After teaching in this county he moved on and taught in other school systems and finally became connected with newspaper work and it was this work along with his longing to return to Burlington that brought him back as Owner and Editor of The Recorder, where again, as you know and I know, he showed himself as a real gentleman.

We have in our office a portrait of the late Mr. Skillman, sitting at his desk, working hard to give the people a better County Paper—and the expression shown on his face in this portrait reveals that it was with pleasure that he was doing this work.

Not a day passes that someone does not come in our office and immediately upon seeing the portrait say: "THERE WAS A MAN THAT WAS A REAL GENTLEMAN IN EVERY RESPECT."

If a man of sixty can see a world full of fine business prospects and a future of ease, comfort and contentment, he is truly an optimist.

During the past year according to the National Safety Council 15,000 fatal accidents have taken place in the home. The bedroom was shown to be the most dangerous place, the living room second, the stairways, the kitchen and the bathroom next in order.

A number of winter fires, which happen annually in this county, can be prevented if the heating system in every home is given a thorough examination and repairing before the extreme cold weather arrives.

One of the best investments for a few cents for any citizen interested in the social welfare of the nation is the buying of a few Christmas seals.

One of the hardest things in the world to make is a satisfactory explanation—or even harder is a satisfactory excuse.

Shanghai, China is called the Paris of the Orient, it has a population of 1,500,000 inhabitants. The first person you meet on arriving ashore is the Jinri Sha Coolie. The Coolie is the laborer of China. All the large ships that enter the port of Shanghai are unloaded by these Coolies, man-power is so plentiful that machinery is not used. Eight cents per day is the average wage of the Chinese Coolie. Baskets, suspended from a Bamboo pole across the shoulders, are the mode of transportation for all products and the loads that they are capable of carrying are immense. A common sight along the Whangpoo River is the River Coolie who spends his entire life on a boat with his family, pigs, geese and chickens. His occupation and the method by which he gathers his food is playing up and down the river gathering garbage that is thrown from the ships of all nations. A person views poverty in its lowest form when he visits China.

Our Scotch Neighbor

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—

When I first knew him, he was plain John Buchan, writing the best Scotch novels since Robert Louis Stevenson. Then, in 1918, he was Colonel John Buchan of the British wartime press bureau, shrewd, kindly, and deft, handling a bunch of rampaging American correspondents as gently as though they were so many new-laid eggs and he, personally, had laid every last one of them. When he became Sir John Buchan, a lot of us said: "Well, he earned his honors but no title ever can swell that Scotch head." Now, at Ottawa, the flags fly and the cannons roar for Baron Tweedsmuir, governor general of our noble neighbor nation to the north, but if his lordship doesn't mind, I'd like, personally, to go on thinking of him as my friend, John Buchan, a very great gentleman.

They'll like him up there, we're going to like him down here. And, if any of you Canadians has any doubt as to his diversified talents, wait till you see him casting a trout-fly across a likely pool.

Casualties in the News

CASUALTIES seem to be almost even as between the New York gang war and the Ethiopian war, but the New York dispatches make spicier reading. They print the names and addresses of the deceased.

Borah's hat is in the ring. It may be distinguished from some of the other hats in the ring by the fact that his is not a size six and five-eighths.

So there's to be another new "empire" hatched in the Orient, with China furnishing the eggs and Japan the incubator. This certainly is a great year for weaker nations to wake up of a morning under a strange flag.

At Panama, a deadly serpent bit an army lieutenant. He took serum and went to a party, and the snake died in 20 minutes. Whereas, heretofore lieutenants have been regarded as comparatively harmless.

Fashions for Men

TRUE to recent promise, we now offer our winter fashion hints for American men:

Lounge effects will be in evidence on park benches.
The morning suit will be used throughout the day. Also every morning.

Unless prosperity returns mighty soon, expect a continuance of the high polish noted during recent years in connection with the seats of blue serge pants. Elbows also will display a bright sheen or patina.

Trousers may or may not be turned up at the bottoms. It depends on whether wearers are sensitive about fringes or just naturally don't give a darn.

There will be very little change—in many cases, no change whatsoever—in the pockets of business suits.

However, the careful dresser will ask the tailor to install a special receptacle for carrying tax notices in. A favored perfume will be attar of moth balls.

The Family Influence

SIX members of the Virginia-born Lady Astor's family are now in the British parliament, if you include Lady Astor herself—and you'd better. So hereafter her ladyship can rest the voice occasionally and there'd still be an Astor to carry on.

She's not like some equally determined conversationalists, though. When she speaks, she has something to say—and says it.

On the other hand, only three members of the Lloyd-George household won seats at the recent English election.

Maybe it's a good thing to elect a whole family group, by the crate-load, as it were. It saves having to remember a lot of different names.

Now you take our congress, wherein always there are so many names that don't mean a thing on earth except for roll call and salary purposes. Often, toward the end of a congress, the Congressional Record is merely a symposium of the last words of the unbearably dead.

Being an Actor

A MAN spends half a lifetime trying to learn to write, and, if he succeeds, he's lucky; and if he doesn't, he's like a fellow whose wife is being talked about—probably the last man in town to hear the bad news.

But, overnight, you can get to be an actor—at least you can get the actor's viewpoint. For instance, I've just finished a very bitter argument at the studio over the next picture we're going to shoot. There's a director who insists on cluttering up the show with a lot of other people. He's also very tiresome about dragging in a plot. I still feel I have the right idea about a proper vehicle for the display of one's theatrical talents.

It's a two-hour monologue, interrupted only by tumultuous applause.

NEHEMIAH REBUILDING THE WALL OF JERUSALEM

LESSON TEXT—Nehemiah 4:4-9, 15-18.
GOLDEN TEXT—"The people had a mind to work." Nehemiah 4:4.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Friends Work Together.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Teamwork.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Team-Work.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Co-operation in Religious Work.

I. Nehemiah's Mission to Jerusalem

(Neh. 2).
While performing his official duty as cupbearer to the Persian king, Nehemiah learned of the distress of his brethren at Jerusalem. The walls of the city were broken down, its gates burnt, and the remnant of the captives were in great affliction and reproach. This news greatly moved him. He definitely asked God to give the king a favorable attitude toward his project. In answer to his prayer he was granted a leave of absence from the Persian court and credentials from the king. He journeyed to Jerusalem and made a survey of the city by night without disclosing his purpose to anyone. Having thus obtained first-hand information, he called the representatives of the Jews together and said, "Let us build the walls of Jerusalem."

II. Preparation for the Building

(Neh. 3).
The division of labor in this project displayed Nehemiah's administrative ability. A wise distribution of labor makes difficult tasks easy. Observe some outstanding features of his administrative work.

1. He laid stress upon indifference. In administrative tasks it is proper that unfaithfulness should be pointed out. Such action serves as a warning to the unfaithful and encouragement to the faithful.

2. Help rendered by the women (v. 12). It is a fine thing for the women to take hold even in building a wall when there are no men to do it.

3. Stress laid upon earnestness of some (v. 20). Recognition of fidelity will spur one on to faithful performance of his task.

4. Every one built over against his own house (vv. 10, 23, 28). There is no incentive for exertion quite so strong as that which concerns a man's own family.

5. Certain guilds of men undertook certain work (vv. 8, 31, 32). Wise administration sometimes calls for such alignment of efforts. Men of the same class and occupation usually work best together.

III. Hindrances Encountered (4:1-14)

1. Scoffing of Sanballat and Tobiah (4:1-6; cf. 2:19, 20). The oppressors of God's servants frequently begin by hurling shafts of ridicule at them.

2. Conspiracy for a sudden attack (4:7-9). When the enemy saw the work was actually succeeding, they changed from ridicule to an attempt to throw the workmen into a panic.

3. Conspiracy with the Jews (4:10-23). They sought, by means of the Jews from the outside, to discourage those on the inside.

4. Greed and oppression of the rich (5:1-13).

The Jews of that day, like the profiteers of our day, took advantage of the poor and oppressed them so that they mortgaged their land and even sold their daughters into slavery.

IV. The Wall Completed (6:15-7:4)

So energetically did they pursue their tasks that in fifty-two days the wall was completed. When their enemies saw that in spite of all their schemes the work was actually completed, they were cast down, for they perceived that the work was of God. Upon the completion of the work, Nehemiah set his brother to rule over Jerusalem and gave instructions as to the opening and closing of the gates of the city. May we learn from this:

1. That though God's children are beset by enemies they should not fear.

2. When beset by enemies we should pray (4:9).

a. They set a watch (4:9).
b. Men were permitted to be with their families (4:13) and would thus fight better.

c. Half worked and half watched, all armed for battle.

d. They worked with sword in one hand (4:17).

e. They slept in their clothes, ready for attack (4:23). Genuine faith is always accompanied with precautionary means.

Looking Heavenward

Mystical more than magical, is that communion of soul with soul, both looking heavenward; here, properly, soul first speaks with soul; for only in looking heavenward, take it in what sense you may, not in looking earthward, does what we call union mutual love, society begin to be possible.

Count Your Blessings

Reflect upon your present blessings of which every man has many; not on your past misfortunes, of which all men have some.—Charles Dickens.

Poet's Corner

My Thanks Today, Lord

Not for my dream's fulfillment,
Not for any height attained;
But that thru all disappointment
Something still of faith remained.

Not for prowess in the battle,
Not for shrewdness in the mart;
But that, losing, I can carry
Still an unblemished heart.

Not for feet that never stumble,
Nor for hands that show no scars;
But that there are still vouchsafed
we

Visions, sometimes, of the stars.

How Calotabs Help Nature To Throw Off a Bad Cold

Millions have found in Calotabs a most valuable aid in the treatment of colds. They take one or two tablets the first night and repeat the third or fifth night if needed.

How do Calotabs help Nature throw off a cold? First, Calotabs is one of the most thorough and dependable of all intestinal eliminators, thus cleansing the intestinal tract of the germ-laden mucus and toxins.

Second, Calotabs are diuretic to the kidneys, promoting the elimination of cold poisons from the system. Thus Calotabs serve the double purpose of a purgative and diuretic, both of which are needed in the treatment of colds.

Calotabs are quite economical; only twenty-five cents for the family package, ten cents for the trial package. (Adv.)

TOBACCO GROWERS

THE TRI-STATE LOOSE LEAF WAREHOUSE COMPANY, INC., OF COVINGTON, KENTUCKY, is now open and receiving tobacco. This house is owned by farmers. Our motto is to help you Mr. Farmer who has put twelve months of hard work in raising your crop. We can and will help you by properly grading and starting your tobacco near the price that it should be sold.

We led the Covington market last season both in pounds and average price. The manager and sales starter is one of the largest tobacco growers in Boone county and by nature is interested in helping you farmers secure the best price for your tobacco. Do not be led off to some other market and be a big expense. Sell your tobacco at home where you can unload and sell the same day. We can conscientiously say that ninety-eight percent of the tobacco growers who sold with our house last year were satisfied and are now our best boosters. Northern Kentucky has a good crop this year, your tobacco will stand out as No. 1 on our floor. Some warehouse men will try to make you believe where there are redriers the price is higher. That is all bunk. Any one who has had thirty-five years experience in the tobacco business knows better. Manufacturers are not trying to discriminate against any market. Before these buyers are sent out to different parts of the Burley belt they are given the same prices on the same grades. We have all the leading manufacture buyers on our market. We have the best stick graders that can be found. Our house stands behind every basket of tobacco that is sold. We have the confidence of the buyers. One among the best auctioneers that Kentucky has. We have left no stone unturned to help you to secure the best price for your years work. Our doors will be open day and night.

The manager has been in direct communication with men at the head of the big manufacturers, and due to the fact that Covington Tobacco market is located within a radius of almost One Million people, we are large consumers of the manufacturers finished produce, and due to this fact they have assured us that Covington market will have the same protection as any other market in the burley belt. Some of the buyers have asked our house to furnish larger prize rooms.

Tobacco in this Northern district stands out on our floor, and practically the same type of tobacco if placed on the Central Kentucky market would sell as second grade. Due to the fact that it is of a different texture and type and will not prize with their type.

Ninety-eight per cent of twenty-five hundred tobacco growers who sold with us last year were satisfied, and we can and will help everyone of you.

Yours for good prices,

FOR YOUR CONSIDERATION How Did The Word "NEWS" Originate?

The word "News" which was created to describe what newspapers are supposed to print, came from the four letters of which have for ages been used as abbreviations of the directions of the compass. In this N stands for North, E for East, S for South and W for West, and when this is read North-East-West-South it coordinates with the above statement.

The earliest newspapers always printed this sign on the front pages of their paper in every issue. This was done to indicate that the paper printed all the happenings from four quarters of the globe.

Later on some enterprising newspaper men may have forgotten the original significance of the letters on the compass, arranged the letters N. E. W. S in a straight line at the head of the paper and that is how we read in the papers came to be known as news.

The Girl Who Knew Men

By VIRGINIA MILLER
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WPA Service

"THERE'S a job open!" the red-headed girl leaned far over the railing, which guarded the office proper to ask the woman firmly established on the pay envelope side of the railing.

"Yes, there's a position vacant," Miss Olson had to tell the truth, however much she disliked the redhead's green beret set saucily far back over her curls, her touched up lips and short tight little green checked dress.

"Then the job's mine," the girl grinned and gave the curls a pert toss. "I know men."

Miss Olson frowned at that I-know-men phrase. She critically inspected the card the girl had handed her. "I shall ask Mr. Adams whether he cares to see you," she said, disapproval edging her voice. She was still frowning as she crossed the office to Mr. Adams' desk and put the card before him.

"The employment agency has sent over this girl," she said. Her tone called one strike on the redhead before the youngster ever got a chance to swing.

At Miss Olson's approach Mr. Adams had hastily put aside the morning newspaper. "Oh, yes," he said. "Gosh, I hope I can get a good girl this morning. The—eh—the golf tournament at my club starts this afternoon."

"I am sure the agency will send in a more satisfactory applicant before the morning is over," Miss Olson called a second strike on the redhead. Mr. Adams took a squint at the sports page, sighed, and stuffed the paper carefully into his pocket. "Well, I'd better talk to this one now."

So Miss Olson had to swing the gate open to the saucy beret.

The redhead gave her a wink. "Watch my technique," she murmured. She walked jauntily.

"Good morning, sir," she said cheerily. "What a nice sunny office you have here!"

Mr. Adams said the office was very pleasant and thought to ask about her business experience.

"I've not had stenographic experience although I've done typing. But I've just completed ten weeks shorthand study at night school. So you can understand, this being my first secretarial position, that I must take great care choosing it," the girl said calmly. Her smile flashed. "I'm sure you're a good enough sport to realize how essential it is to my future that I take only a position in which I'll get broad experience."

Across at her desk, Miss Olson snorted. Softly, of course.

Mr. Adams looked considerably taken aback. Then he started to describe the work his secretary would be expected to do.

"Well, it sounds as if your position may be what I'm looking for," the red-headed girl said encouragingly.

At that sickening moment for Miss Olson, another girl from the employment agency arrived outside the railing.

This girl's eyes were shadowed with a terrible necessity. Miss Olson saw that necessity first. Then she saw that the plain black hat was pulled down on her head sensibly and that she used no lip stick. "I've got to have this position. I've got to," the girl said. Tears came to those dull, hungry eyes.

Miss Olson looked at the sensible outfit and the paintless face. Scarcely glancing at the card handed her, she swung the gate open and hurried the white-faced, dull-eyed girl to Mr. Adams' desk.

"The agency urges you to talk to this girl before you make your decision. She has all the qualifications you need," Miss Olson said determinedly.

"I've had some experience," the girl said nervously. "Oh, Mr. Adams, I've got to have this position. I've got to. I've an invalid mother."

She stood there, those dulled, unhappy eyes fixed on the young man.

Having called the third strike on the redhead, Miss Olson nodded to her to move to the other side of the railing. But the redhead was staring with wide, startled eyes at the other applicant, so that she did not notice Miss Olson. The woman shook her in her determination to get her out of the second girl's way.

Mr. Adams glanced from the second girl to the redhead. He squirmed uneasily.

The redhead shook off Miss Olson's hand and got to her feet. She straightened her shoulders and said with a fairly bright smile: "Sorry, I understand, though. Just the wrong approach on my part. And I thought I knew men."

Miss Olson marched the girl toward the gate.

"Gosh!" Mr. Adams exclaimed. "Gosh, redhead! Don't clear out. I'll—Miss Olson'll help the agency find another job for this girl. I want you for my secretary."

The redhead's hand closed on Miss Olson's arm. "I told you to watch my technique. I know men. They do like color and a cheerful grin. And they kinda like to do the hunting."

Suddenly her fingers tightened their hold. Her legs buckled and she swayed. Then she straightened and a grin spread over her face.

And Miss Olson, looking into hunger—cruel, ugly hunger, thinly but bravely coated with lip stick and rouge, and capped with a saucy green beret—said warmly, in tribute to the red-headed youngster's pluck in face of desperation: "You've made an excellent choice, Mr. Adams."

KENTUCKY FARM NEWS

In Smith Mills and Dixie communities, Henderson county farmers are having drainage ditches cleaned and made sanitary. Due to the need for malaria control and drainage work, the county received approximately $120,000 of the State WPA allotment.

The agricultural fair held in Christian county under the direction of Runyon Story, Negro farm agent, was the largest in several years. Tobacco, wheat, corn, hay, baked and canned foods clothing and rugs were displayed, and 20 booths showed live-at-home and school exhibits.

Many Powell county farmers will be in the market for korean lespezea seed next year. For the past few years, they have saved about 35,000 pounds of seed annually, but high water destroyed most of the crop along the Red river.

In Breathitt county, where homemakers are studying preparation of food for the semi-invalid and convalescent, tea trays are being made from orange crates. Covers and napkins are made from sugar-sacking, with pulled thread border and fringed edges.

Two hundred and forty-eight sheep, beef and dairy cattle and hogs were shown in the Nicholas county fair. Farm and garden products, poultry, 4-H club work and Farm Bureau work were displayed. About $680 were given as prizes.

Laying a total of 222 eggs, a pen of 10 hens owned by Dr. W. F. Asbury of Henry county was 18th among the 76 entries in the Georgia egg laying contest last month. Fifteen years of improved breeding has given Dr. Asbury one of the good White Leghorn flocks of the State.

TOBACCO ALLOTMENT

CARDS DISTRIBUTED

Boone County tobacco growers were busy the past week receiving their 1935 A-A-A tobacco sales allotment cards at the County Agt's office in Burlington. Eight hundred and sixty-five Boone county growers under A-A-A contracts will receive allotment cards to sell more than 1,400,000 pounds.

The growers are reporting one of the best crops in years and stripping is much farther advanced than usual for this season of the year.

Contract signers may sell all their 1935 crop this year. If excess tobacco is produced an additional allotment card may be secured at the County Agent's office for three cents per additional pound. The cost of the extra allotment card is to discourage the marketing of low grade tobacco.

SELL IN LEXINGTON THIS YEAR

The Lexington tobacco market, largest in the entire burley belt, is now open and ready to receive tobacco for the opening of the 1935-36 sales season, which starts here Monday, December 2.

Much could be said about the advantages in selling in Lexington—there is more room, more buyers, more competition—but the most important thing is that tobacco DOES bring more when sold in Lexington.

LAST YEAR LEXINGTON SOLD 60,339,118 POUNDS OF TOBACCO FOR AN AVERAGE OF $18.56

LAST YEAR ALL OTHER MARKETS SOLD 196,747-206 POUNDS FOR AN AVERAGE OF $16.44

For an additional $2.12 per hundred you will find that it pays to come a long ways to sell in Lexington. Just ask your neighbor who sells here.

LIBRARY

LEGISLATION PROPOSED BY KENTUCKY LIBRARY ASSOC.

The Kentucky Library Association at its meeting in Owensboro, October 11 and 12, 1935 announced its aims: (1) Improvement of library service of all kinds; (2) Extension of public library service to every county and section of Kentucky. Toward that goal its immediate undertaking is to introduce and have passed by the General Assembly of 1936 bills relating to the following urgent needs:

1. Regional libraries
To make public libraries possible economically in Kentucky, it is necessary to revise the present county library law in order to enable two or more counties to contract together to establish a regional public library. Library service will be maintained between the branches and stations throughout the counties contracting.

2. Book funds for the Kentucky Library Commission
During the depression the appropriation of the Kentucky Library Commission was cut to low that few activities could be conducted and few books could be bought. The book stock now needs to be built up with new reference material and popular books to attract additional readers. The traveling libraries for rural communities need to be replenished. Only by means of an additional appropriation from the state for books can the Kentucky Library Commission improve and extend its service. The work of the Commission is especially important now when almost all the counties have no local library service.

3. Libraries in cities of the second and third classes
It is proposed to revise the present law relating to libraries in cities of the second and third classes with special regard to financial support. The new law will enable libraries in these cities to obtain a more adequate tax levy to supplement the indefinite and unstable police court fines.

4. Certification
In the future when appointments are made to library positions, it seems well to have a law to certify libraries in order to guarantee that those in charge of our libraries hereafter shall be trained and qualified librarians. The law will automatically certify those who are now working in their present positions and will provide the means for advancement. The certification law will extend to those in full-time positions only and not to those in part-time positions.

5. Retirement
A law is desirable to permit libraries to provide for the retirement of libraries by sharing with their employees in the cost of retirement. Such a law will enable libraries to extend the benefits of the national library retirement system recently made available through the American Library Association.

The support of the citizens of the state in accomplishing these aims will help remedy the woeful lack of library opportunities in many of our communities and better the inadequate service existing in others.

BOONE CO. KIDS

AND CLYDE AND CARL GOING SOUTH — WILL MAKE FINAL APPEARANCE AT LIMABURG SATURDAY NIGHT

The Boone County Kids, an old time band, composed of Winfield Waters, violin, Red Penn, base, Buddy Spellen, guitar, Bernie Fink, guitar, and Harpo Kidwell, harmonica, and Clyde and Carl, two other well known WCKY radio artists, are leaving soon for the land of Dixie, where they have numerous engagements for the winter months.

The well known band which has won many contests against supposedly better bands throughout Northern Kentucky and Southern Ohio, will make the final appearance Saturday night at the Old Grist Mill, of Limaburg.

Don't forget the High School-Independent Basketball game Friday night.

A. O. Rouse, County Road Engineer, was a business visitor here Saturday.

BURLINGTON BOY REPRESENTS PAPER AT INTER-COLLEGIATE PRESS ASSOCIATION

Six members of the staff of the Eastern Progress, student newspaper of the Eastern Ky., State Teachers College, represented the college at the annual meeting of the Inter-collegiate Press Association held at Western Teachers College, Bowling Green, December 5 and 6.

Eastern's representative who attended the K. I. P. A. meet were Donald Michelson, Mt. Sterling and Morris Creech, Richmond, co-editors, and Allen McManis, Carrollton; Clifford Schulte, Bellevue; Charles Warner, Covington; and Harold Kelly Clore, Burlington.

INAUGURATION

OF STATE OFFICERS ATTENDED BY RECORD CROWD

A record crowd of 40,000 attended the inauguration of Albert B. "Happy" Chandler and his subordinate officers at Frankfort, Tuesday, despite the threatening weather and political strife which has held sway over Kentucky for the past several years.

Every section of the state was well represented at the inauguration and it was amid the shouts of these Chandler admirers that the young Governor in a soberly worded ten-minute address accepted the power of his office. The address was mainly concerning his campaign pledges which he merely renewed.

The new Governor's first official act was the appointment of Lee McClain, Bardonia, to be Adjutant General. He also named his own office staff, headed by W. W. Mulbury, his secretary.

As Chandler took the oath of office, he succeeded Ruby Laffoon, Madisonville Governor for the last four years. He carried with him into the office the outgoing Governor's pledge of "loyal support" of his administration, and Governor's Laffoon's plea that the public give to the new administration "heartly cooperation and the unselfish and loyal support of all Kentuckians."

Among the noted visitors were Postmaster-General Farley, Senator Joe Guffey and Governor Geo. H. Earle of Pennsylvania, Senator Harry Byrd of Virginia, Forbes Morgan, Secretary of the Democratic National Committee and many others.

The other unusual inaugural formalities were carried out in Chandler's own simple way and he is now ready to embark upon a four year term as Governor of the Commonwealth with the good will of the people as a sign of approval of his election and inauguration.

Misses Mary Kathryn Jorgens and Elsie Clore are working at the Gibson Art, of Cincinnati.

Lexington Market

SELLING MUCH OF BOONE COUNTY'S TOBACCO CROP

The tobacco market at Lexington which last year sold nearly a half million pounds of Boone county tobacco, seems destined to even better that market this season, judging from the number of growers who already have taken or signified their intention of taking their crops to that market this winter.

There were several Boone county consignments included in the sales at Lexington last week—the first of the season, during which 6,569,360 pounds of leaf were sold for $1,312,618.72, an average of $19.98.

Eight growers from this county received averages at Lexington that were high enough for them to warrant a place in the best crops list published every day by the Lexington newspapers. Those whose names appeared in that list are:

W. B. Combs, 678 pounds, $23.05; Oscar Chandler and Brooks, 4,678 pounds, $22.37; R. M. Holladay, 1,406, $22.10; E. Y. Randall, 826, $25.92; Mrs. Pauline Walton and Ernest Hensley, 1,164, $29.57; J. P. Sechrest and Geo. Danison, 1,564, $21.25; W. B. McCormick and Herman Caldwell, 800, $26.20; J. C. Calloway, 3,266, $22.92.

REPEAL CAMPAIGN

R. M. Dericin, executive secretary of the Kentucky Alcohol Beverage Wholesalers' Association, of Louisville, reported to Miss Mahan, secretary of state, that the organization has spent $2375 in its campaign for repeal.

OPERETTA

GIVEN BY THE LOCAL PARENT TEACHERS ASSOCIATION ADJUDGED BY MANY AS THE OUTSTANDING PROGRAM OF ITS KIND EVER GIVEN IN THIS TOWN—CAPACITY AUDIENCE ATTENDS

The Sunbonnet Girl, an operetta, given by the Parent-Teacher's Association of the Burlington School, before a capacity crowd at the local auditorium last Saturday night was as expected one of the outstanding and most unusual programs ever given in Burlington.

The select cast, which was chosen from the best talent of the county, and the beautiful music of an also selected orchestra combined with superbly direction of Mrs. Lillian Faber made this an occasion that will long be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be present.

The sponsors of this program wish to thank everyone who was connected in any manner to help make its success so great and they feel that it was giving the citizens of this community a production which is equal to some of the large theatrical productions.

$13,998 PRODUCTS PRODUCED BY 4-H CLUB MEMBERS

Boone County 4-H Club members completed 308 4-H Club projects this year valued at $13,998.50, according to record books presented by members. Ninety-four per cent or 285 of the 307 members enrolled completed their project work and turned in their record books according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

1935 is one of Boone County's best 4-H Club years in value of products produced and quality of work done when the handicaps are considered. The heavy demands of A-A-A and emergency work out the regular amount of time allotted to club work. This has been made up by the splendid cooperation and work done by local adult 4-H leaders. Plans are for 1936 to be a bigger and better 4-H Club year than 1935.

40,000 POUNDS TOBACCO PRODUCED 4-H CLUB MEMBERS SELL SATURDAY

Eighty-one Boone county 4-H Club members this year have produced approximately 40,000 pounds of excellent quality tobacco according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The majority of the members will sell their crops through the Third Annual Northern Kentucky 4-H Tobacco Sale and Show to be held at the Kenton Loose Leaf Warehouse in Covington Saturday, December 14th.

Boone county members last year took the majority of the premiums awarded. Approximately $300.00 in premium money will be awarded this year on the best crops and best baskets of the various grades. The champion club member of the show will receive a prize trip to the International Fat Stock Show at Chicago next year. The tobacco will be delivered Friday and sold Saturday morning. Members must have their record books to compete for prizes.

Don't forget the M. W. A. turkey supper Tuesday night at the local hall.

NEW AMENDMENT

ADDED TO KENTUCKY CONSTITUTION

As a result of the passage of the Old Age pension and the prohibition repeal law the Constitution of Kentucky has two new amendments.

Former Gov. Laffoon, whose term expired Tuesday, signed the proclamation, the final official act necessary to make the amendments effective, Wednesday, of last week. Sam H. Brown, first assistant attorney general, who had led the recent successful legal fight in defense of the constitutionality of the amendments was among the few to witness the signing.

Dry forces had sought a permanent injunction to prevent the amendments from being put into effect, but the Kentucky Court of Appeals upheld the legality of the amendments last Friday.

The alcohol control act passed by the last General Assembly will continue to be in force, despite the passage of the repeal amendment.

PARDONS

GIVEN TO FRED AGEE AND RUSSELL CLARKE BY GOVERNOR LAFFOON — 241 OTHER INMATES ALSO GIVEN FREEDOM

Fred Agee, who was sentenced to serve 15 years in the State Reformatory by the Boone Circuit Court in April, 1932, for bank robbery, and Russell Clarke, who was given 20 years for the same charge in August, 1931 were pardoned along with 241 other inmates of the State Reformatory by Gov. Laffoon, last Thursday.

The governor said he released the men because of overcrowding at the Reformatory, which makes it imperative to make room for newly sentenced convicts.

He made the pardons conditional upon their recipients conducting themselves as useful upright and law-abiding citizens.

Agee and Clark aided by Jackson, of Covington, robbed the Florence Bank in 1931 and escaped, but were traced down and lodged in the county jail at Burlington until conviction.

CONSTANCE STUDENT IN KAPPA DELTA PI

Lloyd W. Hankins, son of John L. Hankins, Constance, will be initiated into Kappa Delta Pi, national honorary educational fraternity at the University of Kentucky on Friday at the University Training School Library.

TRI-STATE TOBACCO NEWS

The following farmers of this county are well pleased with their tobacco returns at the Tri-State warehouse in Covington:
C. G. Jones, Burlington, 722 lbs., with an average of $29.90.
R. Napier, Verona, 800 lbs., with an average of $32.30.
E. B. Knox, Union, 378 lbs., with an average of $31.40.
Jos. A. Huey and Bert Powell, Union, 1754 lbs., with an average of $33.03.

The members of the Constance P. T. A. will meet at the school house Wednesday, Dec. 18th, at 2 p. m. After a short business session a Christmas party and an exchange of gifts will be a feature of the program. Also a lunch of coffee, sandwiches and cake will be served.

Mrs. F. D. McGlasson, publicity Chairman.
THOMAS

Mrs. Flossie Mae Thomas, 19, wife of Wm. G. Thomas, died at her home Thursday morning, Nov. 14, at 8 o'clock following an illness of several weeks duration. She had been a member of the Mt. Hebron Baptist church since childhood and will be greatly missed, leaving many warm friends to mourn her passing. Besides her husband she is survived by her father, William McQuerry. One sister Mrs. Sallie Lou Lamb, Danville, Ky., and 7 brothers, Luther McQuerry, of O. O. Carl McQuerry, Boone county, Frank McQuerry, Jessamine county, and Jack, Tom, Eddie and Robert McQuerry, of Garrard county.

Funeral services were conducted at the Mt. Hebron Baptist church, Friday-afternoon at 2 o'clock with the Rev. Roy M. Gabbert, pastor of the Lancaster Baptist church officiating. Interment followed in the church cemetery.

SEAL SALE

APPEARS TO BE RECORD BREAKING IN BOONE COUNTY

R. V. Lents, sales manager of the Kentucky Tuberculosis Association for Boone County reports that every school in the county is making a great showing in selling Tuberculosis Christmas Seals. Many schools have already ordered the second supply according to Mr. Lents. Judging the sales by present reports, Boone county will make a record sales this year.

If you don't have an opportunity to purchase some of these Christmas Seals write to Mr. Lents, Low, R. D. 2, and he will gladly mail you as many as you desire.

Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Norris, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Greenup, Mr. and Mrs. Manley Ryle and Mrs. Wallace Clore attended the funeral of Mrs. Alice Shinkle at Big Bone Baptist church Saturday morning.

Miss Eunice Willis, County Health Nurse, is spending a few days with friends in Burlington.

CIRCUIT COURT

OF BOONE COUNTY OPENED MONDAY—ONE OF LIGHTEST COURTS FOR SOME TIME

The December term of the Boone Circuit Court, which is one of the lightest in years, convened Monday morning with the formal rapping of the gavel. Judge Vallandigham was on the bench attending to his regular duties and Ward Yager was on hand at an early hour looking after the interests of the Commonwealth in his most capable manner born of a number of years experience in that capacity. Among the visiting attorneys were: Orle S. Ware, D. E. Castleman, O. M. Rogers, James Rogers, John Hoover, E. R. Rivard, John Crigler, Gregory Hughes, John L. Vest, Sidney Gaines, Chas. Riley, Bert King, E. H. Walton, A. R. Plummer, Judge J. M. Lassing and County Judge N. E. Riddell.

County Attorney B. H. Riley, and Walter Vest, of Walton, who are usually present at the Circuit Court terms were absent as both are recovering from appendicitis operations.

As there are no important cases on the docket and very few cases of any description it is believed that court will adjourn either Thursday or Friday.

For the first time in years there is no one in the local jail awaiting action of the Boone Circuit Court. J. T. Rosell, who was convicted in the Carroll County Circuit Court on a murder charge, is being held here for safe keeping, until action on an appeal is taken.

The list of those selected for jury service follows:

GRAND JURY—W. E. Jones, Joe Besterman, Frank Scott, Frank Seebree, J. W. Cloud, Russell Ryan, A. T. Knox, Lowell Tanner, Russell Finn, E. B. Maxwell, W. O. Rector and Edgar Graves (foreman).

PETIT JURY NO. 1—Chas. W. Craig, Wallace Rice, Emmett Kilgore, Huey Aylor, A. J. Ogden, Earl Acra, Ben McArthur, John Cave, F. R. Clore, Ed. Baker, Harvey Hicks, Geo. Loze.

PETIT JURY NO. 2—Wm. Hill, Paul Hafer, Haines Bruce, Chas. Hedges, Harry Boyer, Lillard Scott, Stanley Graves, Bernard Seebree, John Woods, J. G. Smith, Arthur Maurer, O. R. Russ.

Court was adjourned Monday afternoon until Wednesday morning in order that the officers, attorneys and jurymen could attend the inauguration of Gov. A. B. "Happy" Chandler. Just after the juries had been empaneled Judge John M. Lassing made a motion in court that was seconded by Hon. O. M. Rogers requesting Judge Vallandigham to enter the order adjourning court so all could attend the exercises in Frankfort, Tuesday. Judge Vallandigham readily sustained the motion and entered the order.

TURKEY SUPPER

To be given by the local M. W. A. lodge next Tuesday night at the lodge hall in Burlington. This entertainment is for members only and every member whether you have been attending or not are urged to be present. Come and bring all your fellow members, Tuesday night December 17th.

ENLISTMENT

QUOTA FOR DISTRICT INCREASED

Young men residing in Boone County may make application for enlistment in the Navy at the Cincinnati Navy Recruiting Station located in the Post Office Building, 5th and Main Streets any day except Sunday or holidays between the hours of 9 a. m. and 4 p. m., Lieutenant Carson R. Miller, the officer in charge, announced today.

The Naval Training Station at Great Lakes, Ill., has just completed a remodeling program and is now ready to receive recruits for training. Men enlisting at the Navy Recruiting Station in Cincinnati will be sent to this station for their first 12 weeks of preliminary training before being assigned to a ship or a Navy Service School.

Due to the opening of this station, the enlistment quotas for this district will be greatly increased and there will be many vacancies for young men over 17 and under 25 years of age who can pass the required physical and mental tests.

DENHARDT

RESIGNS AS ADJUTANT GENERAL OF KENTUCKY NATIONAL GUARD

Brig.-General Henry H. Denhardt, one of the Laffoon-Rh administration leaders, resigned his post as Adjutant General of Kentucky National Guards yesterday. Gen. Denhardt has offered his services in assisting the new appointee to get started in his new work.

In his letter of resignation, sent Governor Chandler, Gen. Denhardt said he would not fight to hold his authority as adjutant general of the National Guard until March 14, 1936, when his term legally expires.

He feels that it would not be right or patriotic for me to do anything to cause a continuation of the bitterness of strife which has torn Kentucky during the past year," Denhardt said in his letter.

Gen. Denhardt was one of Chandler's bitterest opponents during the primaries. He was indicted in Harlan county for bringing troops into the county before the primaries, but was pardoned by Gov. Laffoon.

Gen. Denhardt has promised as a true Kentuckian to give his support to the new administration. He stated that he would lose about $2,000 by resigning now.

Governor Laffoon was given words of praise by the General. He praised Laffoon for his courageous unselfish efforts to serve all the people of Kentucky.

COLLEY—CONNER

Word was received at Burlington Tuesday of the marriage of Miss Daisy June Colley, Ashland, Ky., to Harold Conner, St. Petersburg, Fla., at the latter place Saturday, December 8th. Mr. Conner is the owner and operator of one of the largest greyhound kennels in the county and at present is in Florida preparing to enter races there soon. The Recorder joins with Harold's many Boone county friends in wishing him and his new bride a happy married life.

GOOD WILL ON THE ROAD

The Holiday season is a peculiarly fitting time to emphasize the obligations of every motorist. It is of more than passive interest that the Yuletide closes that quarter of the year when automobile accidents, deaths and injuries are at an annual peak, according to the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters. How horrible is the thought that as we approach the days when the sentiment, "Good Will to All," is glorified throughout the land, the carnage of wrecks and broken bodies is strewn more than ever over the face of our country.

A great deal has been said about the necessity of courtesy in driving as an accident preventative measure. Driving at speeds reasonable for conditions, sharing the road, passing properly, using correct hand signals, avoiding all those actions which make driving dangerous and uncomfortable for other fellow drivers, are the dictates of courtesy and manners. So, too, are they dictates of the principle of the good neighbor. Good driving, with a real desire to safeguard the lives of those exposed to the consequences of that driving, is practical Christianity. It is a kind of practical Christianity that followers of all creeds can subscribe to as they join in the common rejoicing at this Christmas season.

The first concern of the churches of America is the saving of souls. By entering with whole hearted activity into the automobile safety movement, they can extend their activity to the saving of lives, without violating their first purpose. The blot upon a soul as a result of killing or maiming another through careless heedless action, is one not easily erased. The churches have the advantage of being able to appeal to a great section of the drivers of the country on occasions where they are most receptive to the idea of good will as a driving maxim. The good neighbor on the road could well serve as a theme for a sermon in every church at this time of the year.

So long as selfishness and stupid recklessness, so long as death and destruction exist on our streets and highways, the ideal of peace on earth, good will toward men, will command little more than lip service.

ON BEHALF OF YOUR POCKET BOOK

As everyone knows, there is often a great difference between the price a farmer gets for the food products he sells, and the price the ultimate consumer must pay.

A long list of charges is responsible for that difference. It costs money to transport food, to process and pack it, to carry on the vast machinery that operates between producer and consumer, and, finally, to sell it at retail.

Many of those costs are unavoidable and necessary. Some are not. And the great problem of food distribution is to eliminate those which are not, while at the same time effecting any possible reductions in the essential costs.

About fifteen years ago, when the nation was appalled by high post-war food costs, better distributing and selling methods were started. These methods managed to do away with a number of old "middleman" costs—they cut others. In less than a generation, they made constant and remarkable progress.

Today a similar situation obtains—food prices are rising, and there is danger that they will go beyond the point where the people can comfortably pay. The solution, then is the same as it was fifteen years ago. To advance as rapidly as possible the work of cutting costs between producer and consumer.

Few undertakings are so valuable to the American pocketbook—few deserve such widespread support from the great American public, which must pay the bill for wasteful and inefficient food distributing methods.

This has been an excellent winter so far for most any kind of farm work.

Editorial of the Week

READY PRINT OR HOME PRINT

Ready Print or Home Print? That is the question. We are continually confronted with the question as to whether our readers desire a certain amount of ready print, that is such columns as The Sunday School Lesson, What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks About, and Seen and Heard Around The National Capitol or whether they desire all home print. Some of our readers say that the dailies furnish a sufficient amount of feature writing and that the weeklies should print only local news. This possibly is so to a certain extent, but a number of our rural readers do not have a daily paper coming into their home and they are interested in knowing more about the affairs of the world as told in the above mentioned columns. On several occasions we have omitted practically all of the ready print columns and have filled them with county happenings, Kentucky farm notes, landscape notes, etc., and the response was letter after letter, phone calls, and even personal visits to the office asking why we omitted the special features.

We admit that a paper absolutely crammed with such news would be of little interest to our readers, but on the other hand to those of whom it does interest we try to gratify their wishes by using a limited amount.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS

A dictator cannot endure with a free press. This is a natural conclusion since every dictator has a subservient press. The press of Italy and the press of Germany do not dare to tell the truth. As long as the press of a nation is kept free the people have some chance of knowing the facts regarding their government.

The season of the year is approaching when the number of accidents will begin to show an increase. We have in mind especially the type of accidents that happen to those motorists who stroll in, to a business place and spit down the hot air furnace.

A culinary note in an exchange explains how pumpkin pie can be made better. As we look back upon our younger days we can recall the time when we did not believe it was possible to do anything that would make a pumpkin pie better.

The share the wealth movement is not new. It was started years ago by the fellows who made a practice of touching up all their friends for the loan of a five that they never expected to pay back.

The majority of farmers have just stocked their meat houses with a supply of freshly killed pork, and to play on the safe side it would probably be a good idea to nail all of the boards on tight and to put a reasonably strong lock on the door latch.

THE INTERNATIONAL SETTLEMENT

The city of Shanghai is made up of concessions of the British, Japanese, French, American and Russian immigrants. This is known as the International Settlement and they are like a small city which have their own police force and fire department.

North of Shanghai is the old walled city, which was built in 400 B. C. The International Settlement, Shanghai, is modern with large stores, banks, hotels, and curio shops dominating its streets.

The curio shops are of great interest to any visitor as their owners make by hand beautiful silk shawls, brocades and embroideries, laces, carved ivory and many other interesting and unusual articles, which they sell for small prices.

It is surprising how much time that one can spend in such a settlement amusing himself by inspecting and viewing the output of these shops. I have in my collection of keepsakes a number of these articles which I treasure highly.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Will Rogers' Memorial.

SANTA MONICA.—Where I sit writing this, I can see his home across the canyon. There's still sunlight on the top, but the folds in the friendly hills are turning purple.

The most typical humorist since Mark Twain, the most beloved compeer since Abraham Lincoln, the most popular private citizen since Benjamin Franklin, his fame is an everlasting rock. Why, then, a monument of our fashioning to one who was a national institution whilst he lived, who became a national tradition almost before the breath left his body?

Nevertheless it is fitting that on his birthday this country should launch a memorial. For to help perpetuate the bright glory of that name is an obligation we owe to ourselves—a testimony of gratitude for a man amongst us who poured out so freely the precious gifts of sanity and sweetness, generosity and gallantry, a philosophy that was kindly, a wit that was salty but never was sour. You gave us so much, Bill, we're just figuring on paying a little something back on account.

Signs of Normalcy.

WE MUST be headed for normalcy. I'm back on somebody's sucker list. As a charter member of the original mother lodge, I belong there. I'm a boob Ben Adhem whose name led all the rest.

Today I received, not a list of selected foreign bonds—that'll come later—but a prospectus about a gorgeous gold mining proposition with all the regular by-products guaranteed, such as quicksilver, lead, copper, molybdenum, and I think, amalgam fillings.

Sorry I can't invest in this new bonanza. But I'm saving up to go into an equally timely enterprise. It's a buggy-whip factory, and on the side we're going to turn out flintlock muskets for the United States army.

Selecting a Candidate.

I've found out who the forgotten man is. It's any Republican officeholder above the grade of assistant state geologist who hasn't been proposed by self or friends for next year's Presidential nomination.

On every side, disinterested patriots feverishly suggest some deathless name that nobody outside the immediate family ever heard of and, lo, a national figure whose fame doesn't cover as much territory as a milk route is in the running. Almost anybody who can read and write appears to be eligible, especially if he lithographs well, and, if he has also the firm yet clinging handshake, his stock goes right up.

The concern is for a candidate only. When it comes to a platform, the Democrats can lend them one which has been used hardly any, if at all.

Return to Prohibition.

ALL else aside, some of us contend it was two main underlying reasons why this country went "dry" the way it did go. One reason was brewers. The other was distillers.

If a person of dubious repute opened a saloon in a neighborhood already over-provided, where, in order to life, he must break the liquor laws, there was, too often, a type of brewer ready to put up for the license and a type of distiller to help out with the rest.

Basically, it was the inarticulate resentment of orderly people against such practices which plunged us into the chaotic legislative error miscalled prohibition.

Now, with that mistake so nearly cured, one hears it directly charged that certain producers of alcoholic drinks are greedily back at the same old tricks.

Well, the next time the people of this country vote liquor out—and there'll be a next time, unless the same men in the industry can curb the offenders within their own ranks—it'll be for keeps, no matter how deplorable the results in bootlegging and graft and crime and corruption.

You can tell a lunk-headed profiteer as far as you can see—but you can't tell him anything else.

Upholding the Constitution.

SO HEATED is the controversy over the Impaired Constitution that professional politicians are all agog, many going out of one severe gro right into another, accompanied by chills, fever and high blood pressure.

Everywhere you look, you see disputants, all lathered up with excitement, who wouldn't recognize that immortal document if they ran into it sitting in the middle of the big road, laying eggs.

I am offering a suitable prize—namely, Grimm's Fairy Tales in words of one syllable—to the first national committee, Democratic or Republican, who can tell offhand whether the Constitution starts off, "When in the course of human events," or, "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party."

Besides, I'd like to know myself. IRVIN S. COBB.

Lesson for December 15

EZRA TEACHING THE LAW OF GOD

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 7:10; Nehemiah 8:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee. Psalm 119:11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Giving Thanks for God's Book.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Giving Thanks for God's Book.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Studying the Bible Together.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Bible in National Life.

This lesson is a fine illustration of the rightful place of God's Word in the life of a nation. The only cure for national ills is a return to God and obedience to his Word.

I. The Teacher's Spiritual Condition (Ezra 7:10).

He prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, to do it, and to teach Israel the statutes and judgments.

II. The Word of God Read (Neh. 8:1-3).

1. The eager assembly (v. 1). The people gathered together and requested Ezra to bring the book of the law. God had touched their hearts, creating within them a yearning for his Word.

2. A representative assembly (v. 2). God's Word should be taught to all classes—men, women, and children. The Spirit of God can speak through his Word to the whole family sitting in the same pew.

3. An appreciative assembly (v. 3). So eager were they to know God's Word that they did not get tired, although the lesson lasted for five or six hours. When people realize that God is speaking through his Word they will give attention.

III. The People's Attitude Toward God's Word (vv. 4-6).

1. Due reverence shown (vv. 4, 5). When Ezra opened the law all the people stood up out of respect for God's Word.

2. They joined heartily in prayer (v. 6). As Ezra led them in prayer they united in saying, "Amen, Amen," bowing their faces to the ground.

IV. God's Word Being Interpreted (vv. 7, 8).

The attitude of the people toward God's Word largely depends upon the minister. Proper dignity and solemnity should be manifested by the minister when reading the Holy Scriptures.

1. He stood up where the people could see him (v. 5).

2. He read distinctly (v. 8). The manner in which many read the Scriptures is greatly to their discredit.

3. He caused the people to understand (v. 8). The supreme business of the minister and teacher is to make the Word of God so plain that old and young can understand. The explanation should be clear and definite.

V. The Effect of Applying God's Word to the Life of the People (vv. 9-18).

1. Conviction of sin (v. 9). The divine method of convicting men of their sin is to have God's Word applied by the Holy Spirit. The Word of God is quick and powerful (Heb. 4:12).

2. Weeping turned into joy (vv. 10-12). When sin has been perceived and confessed there is forgiveness. Continued mourning will not atone for past sins. Furthermore, it dishonors a pardoning God and even unites the one for present tasks. Joy has a salutary effect upon one's entire being. "The joy of the Lord is your strength."

3. Blessings were shared with others (vv. 10-12). True joy manifests itself in giving to others. Pure religion goes out to minister to the poor (James 1:27). Godliness is not content with having a good time alone.

4. The people obeyed. From the reading of the Scriptures they found that the feast of the tabernacles had long been neglected. They kept this sacred feast in a way that had not been since the days of Joshua.

5. They separated themselves from the ungodly (13:1-3). As soon as they had heard the Word of God they separated themselves from the mixed multitude.

6. The house of worship was cleared and order restored (13:4-14). No nation or people can be strong which neglects the worship of the true God.

7. The Sabbath was restored (13:15-22). Israel had long violated the Sabbath. To ignore the essential law of the Sabbath is national suicide. Unnumbered evils followed in the wake of the desecration of God's holy day.

8. God's law of marriage restored (13:23-31). Some of those who had intermarried with the heathen were brought face to face with their sin. They separated themselves from their ungodly companions. God's favor cannot be enjoyed by those who live in disobedience to his Word.

A Splendid Mystery

To me there is something thrilling and exciting in the thought that we are drifting forward into a splendid mystery—into something that no mortal eye hath yet seen, and no intelligence has yet declared.—E. H. Chapin.

NOTICE TOBACCO GROWERS

THE TRI-STATE LOOSE LEAF WAREHOUSE COMPANY, INC., OF COVINGTON, KENTUCKY, is now open and receiving tobacco. This house is owned by farmers. Our motto is to help you Mr. Farmer who has put twelve months of hard work in raising your crop. We can and will help you by properly grading and starting your tobacco near the price that it should be sold.

We led the Covington market last season both in pounds and average price. The manager and sales starter is one of the largest tobacco growers in Boone county and by nature is interested in helping you farmers secure the best price for your tobacco. Do not be led off to some other market and be a big expense. Sell your tobacco at home where you can unload and sell the same day. We can conscientiously say that ninety-eight percent of the tobacco growers who sold with our house last year were satisfied and are now our best boosters. Northern Kentucky has a good crop this year, your tobacco will stand out as No. 1 on our floor. Some warehouse men will try to make you believe where there are redriers the price is higher. That is all bunk. Any one who has had thirty-five years experience in the tobacco business knows better. Manufacturers are not trying to discriminate against any market. Before these buyers are sent out to different parts of the Burley belt they are given the same prices on the same grades. We have all the leading manufacture buyers on our market. We have the best stick graders that can be found. Our house stands behind every basket of tobacco that is sold. We have the confidence of the buyers. One among the best auctioneers that Kentucky has. We have left no stone unturned to help you to secure the best price for your years work. Our doors will be open day and night.

The manager has been in direct communication with men at the head of the big manufacturers, and due to the fact that Covington Tobacco market is located within a radius of almost One Million people, we are large consumers of the manufacturers finished produce, and due to this fact they have assured us that Covington market will have the same protection as any other market in the burley belt. Some of the buyers have asked our house to furnish larger prize rooms.

Tobacco in this Northern district stands out on our floor, and practically the same type of tobacco if placed on the Central Kentucky market would sell as second grade. Due to the fact that it is of a different texture and type and will not prize with their type.

Ninety-eight per cent of twenty-five hundred tobacco growers who sold with us last year were satisfied, and we can and will help everyone of you.

Yours for good prices,

Basketball Notes

The Burlington Tomcats and Kittens lost their games to New Haven last Friday night at the New Haven Gym. The girls game was an evenly matched contest which ended 21-19 in favor of the Union team. The Burlington boys, however, were no match for the surprisingly fast and accurate New Haven team, which is coached by Jas. Allen a former Walton High School star. The final score of this game was 37-20.

In what promises to be one of the outstanding games of the present season will be played on the Burlington court Friday night when the Tomcats of the local school put on their scratching togs to meet the local Independent team. A warm-up game will be played by the High School girls and the Independent girls.

Plans are under way for a Burlington Independent Basketball team entering the Lowe and Campbell Major League of Cincinnati under the name of D. R. Blythe's Lunchroom. The local team had a representative meeting at the organization meeting of the league officials and the team has been accepted into the league.

Florence divided a double header with Ludlow Friday night when the Nightengales defeated the Ludlow Independent girls 39-16 in a preliminary game to the regular scheduled boys game. The Ludlow team, which appears to be one of the outstanding in Northern Ky., defeated the Knights 42-18.

AGED LADY PASSES AWAY

Nannie Clore Hedges passed away at her home at Bullittsville, Dec. 6th, 1935, following an illness due to the infirmities of old age, at the age of 84 years, 11 months and 24 days. She was the daughter of the late Benjamin and Lucinda Clore. Her husband Wm. Hedges and 3 children, Maud, Paul and Clifford preceded her in death.

She united with the Sand Run Baptist church at an early age.

She leaves one brother Yancy Clore, one sister Mrs. Katie Rice, four nephews, one niece and a host of other relatives and friends to mourn her passing.

Funeral services were conducted at the Sand Run church Sunday afternoon by Rev. J. W. Campbell. She was laid to rest in the Sand Run cemetery by the side of her husband.

Pall-bearers were Gordon and Corey Laile, Bill Woods, Walton Rice, Charles and Wm. Clore.

Funeral directors Chambers and Grubbs.

The Master called and she went away.

Into that and of the unclouded day.

She's waiting there on that beautiful shore

Where the saints of God shall part no more.

When our lives are finished and God has spoken

Let us pray the circle will not be broken.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend our sincere thanks to the good neighbors and friends who so kindly helped us during our hour of trouble in the illness and death of our sister Nannie Hedges. We especially wish to thank Rev. Campbell for his consoling words, the singers for their beautiful songs, Dr. Nunneley for his services and undertakers Chambers & Grubbs for the splendid manner in which they conducted the funeral.

The Family.

OVER-BUILDING

At the rate cheap housing programs are being promoted by the aid of Government loans, in many parts of the country, it is likely that in a year or two we will be hearing a great deal about "over-building, just as was the case ten or twelve years ago.

There would be no shortage of the people of the U. S. would show the thrift that exists in other parts of the world where houses and buildings are preserved and used fifty and a hundred years. A house that is twenty years old, to us is called out of date, but it isn't—that is just in the head.

THE FARMERS OF TOMORROW

One of the more interesting phases of farm cooperative work lies in the encouragement and knowledge given young farm people.

Contests are held for livestock and crops raised by these moulding farmers. Instruction is given them in scientific farming, marketing and distributing. There is an opportunity that few of their forebears had.

The result of this is to better the outlook for the agriculture of the future—and to make it inevitable that the farmer of tomorrow will be a better crop scientist, a better business man, and more valuable citizen, than the farmer of yesterday.

DEFENSIVE RECORD

The Ashland Tom Cats, which have for years had one of the outstanding High School football teams, added another feat to their number by playing their entire football schedule without being scored upon until the last game. Their final game, Thanksgiving day, with Erie, Pa., was the only contest in which an opponent scored and this was only a safety. The seasons total points are: Ashland 378, Opponents 2.

An Open Letter To TOBACCO GROWERS

Eighteen years ago the Kenton House was opened for the sale of tobacco belonging to farmers who lived in the surrounding territory. Since then the policy has always been to get every nickel for the farmer that his tobacco will bring.

Covington is the logical market for farmers in Northern Kentucky & Southern Ohio and Indiana. We believe in doing a good job for the farmer in this territory and will not go after tobacco that belongs to another market, nor will we make misleading statements to get a farmer away from another market. We want you, MR. FARMER, who live near our market to bring your tobacco to Covington. Kenton House would like to sell your tobacco if you like us, BUT if you like the other house better that will be our loss but we are glad you came to Covington just the same. We know the folks at the other house; they are a bunch of good fellows who we know will do everything they can to prove to you that Covington is as good a market as you will find anywhere.

Bring your tobacco to Covington, Kenton House is ready to prove we have real tobacco men who know how to get the most out of your crops.

SELL IN LEXINGTON THIS YEAR

The Lexington tobacco market, largest in the entire burley belt, is now open and ready to receive tobacco for the opening of the 1935-36 sales season, which starts here Monday, December 2.

Much could be said about the advantages in selling in Lexington—there is more room, more buyers, more competition—but the most important thing is that tobacco DOES bring more when sold in Lexington.

LAST YEAR LEXINGTON SOLD 60,339,118 POUNDS OF TOBACCO FOR AN AVERAGE OF $18.56
 LAST YEAR ALL OTHER MARKETS SOLD 196,747-206 POUNDS FOR AN AVERAGE OF $16.44

For an additional $2.12 per hundred you will find that it pays to come a long ways to sell in Lexington. Just ask your neighbor who sells here.

FROM THE CRADLE TO THE GRAVE—TAXES
Here are two stanzas from a verse that has been making the rounds recently:

"When you light the evening lamp
You pay a tax.
When you buy a postage stamp
You pay a tax.
When you buy the baby clothes,
When you read the morning news,
When you buy a pair of shoes,
You pay a tax....."

"When you buy an ice cream cone
You pay a tax.
For the water that you drink
You pay a tax.
When you buy a loaf of bread,
When the doctor says you're dead,
When the final prayers are said,
You pay a tax."

Miss Betty Brashear was visiting in Cincinnati over last week-end.

Mrs. Elmer Reeves entertained Thursday in honor of her father's 59th birthday. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hayes and family and Mrs. Ermine Kenton, of Covington.

BIG MOTORING WINTER

During the last summer, according to figures supplied by the American Automobile Association, 37 million people went touring, and spent four billion dollars for gasoline, oil, food, shelter and other necessities.

In a recent address to company field representatives, John D. Collins, sales manager of the Tide Water Oil Company, called attention to the fact that last spring he predicted that he would have the biggest motoring summer in our history, and made the further prediction that the coming winter will be the biggest motoring winter on record.

Among the reasons given by Mr. Collins for this belief is that business is experiencing a real revival and people have more money to spend on new cars, or in bringing into service old cars which have been laid up for economic reasons. But, he adds:

"The chief reason, however, is the winter resisting ability of the new cars. Equipped with modern gasoline and a proper grade of winter oil, they start easily in the coldest weather. They are skillfully heated and air conditioned. Modern tires and tread provide better traction on slippery surfaces. Improved windshields and wipers give constant clear vision. A little care in having the car put in perfect shape for cold weather driving will carry the motorist thru the next four months comfortably and economically. The result will be a great increase in winter driving this year."

SCRIPTURE VERSES

And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid. Luke 2:—8-9.

And the angel said unto them, Fear not, for, behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. Luke 2: 10.

For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. Luke 2: 11.

And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us. Luke 2: 15.

Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem.

COPPIN'S

The John R. Coppin Co. Madison at Seventh Covington, Ky.

Mother nature robes herself
In her snowy gown of white,
Father Winter scatters frost
That glistens with a sparkling light.

Old December lags along
With reluctant footsteps slow,
Until Miss Christmas comes at last
With the jolliest hours we know.

Santa Claus, the bountiful,
Helps her in his lavish way.
December, Christmas, Santa Claus.
O, what a merry, merry day.

Long ago the Christmas star
Led the wise men from afar
Till its golden rays shone down
Upon the homes of Bethlehem town

Christmas star, still let thy ray
Shine within our hearts today.
Bringing us the old refrain
Peace on earth, good will to men.

SAFE TOYS URGED

As the Christmas season approaches, a timely warning against dangerous toys is sounded by Dr. Morris Fishbein, the well known health authority, who declares that with the almost unlimited numbers of safe toys available it is entirely unnecessary to provide any other kind for the child's amusement.

For babies, he recommends toys that have reasonably smooth surfaces to prevent the collection of dirt, and they should be washable. Dolls and toy animals with much hair collect dirt and germs, and are therefore dangerous for very small children.

Toys which have sharp protruding edges or corners which may cut the flesh are also to be guarded against. Those which shoot projectiles that may inflict wounds are generally unsafe. Particular consideration should be given to safeguarding children's eyes from danger.

Aside from their value as playthings, well selected toys may have a great effect on the child's development. In this category come building blocks, Erector sets and other toys which may aid in interesting the child in practical mechanics. For larger boys the desirability of sets of tools is evident, but in the hands of very small children they are only implements of destruction.

It might be added that electric trains and a vast number of novel mechanical toys afford father almost as much amusement as they give the kids.

Mother of 11 and grandmother of 12, Mrs. Lillian Gist, 80, of California, is studying for the degree of Ph. D.

Mrs. Gertrude Pellengrino of Owosso, Mich., suing for a divorce, alleged that her husband had thrown her bodily out of the house at least 83 times.

When Theodore Emicle, 18, of Camden, N. J., pleaded guilty of stealing a car to take his girl for a ride. Judge Neutze ordered the youth's father to administer a good spanking to his son.

While digging a grave in a cemetery at Rockford, Ill., August Johnson fell dead.

A good luck pin owned by Mrs. Mary Hancock of Maryland disappears and turns up again. Found in a vacuum cleaner; came back with the laundry; and last was found in a chicken gizzard they had prepared for dinner.

C. R. Crimble, of Brooklyn, who is 100 years old, says one of his favorite diversions is a midnight meal of cheese and crackers and a mug of beer.

Glen Lentz, who was elected last spring to the office of city councilman in Brown City, Mich., has been arrested on a charge of chicken theft.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Smith, of White Plains, N. Y., have agreed to pay their son's alimony of $15 a week to his estranged wife.

While traveling to the funeral of her mother, Mrs. H. Waddell of Brockton, Ill., was killed by a train which struck the car in which she was riding.

Miss Ethel Gardner, of Leeds, Eng., scantily clothed, took a sun bath on a ledge high above the street, and the fire department was called out to "rescue her."

Benjamin Kass, of Newark, N. J., 43 years old, has undergone 65 operations.

KENNETH FOSTER hurried through the crowded streets. Everybody looked so happy, so eager, so good-natured. He wondered why he felt so out of tune with them all.

From counter to counter he went. He wanted to compare values, to get the best price on everything he bought. He was going to do his Christmas shopping in a sensible way, the way it really ought to be done.

Passing through the art department his eyes fell on a beautiful piece of pottery. Unconsciously he stopped and admired its exquisite art. A sudden thought flashed through his mind. "Wouldn't mother love something like this? Wouldn't she get a thrill out of showing it to her friends?"

Quickly his resolution to buy nothing but practical gifts vanished into thin air. He would buy the piece for mother. For the rest of the family, and others, he would get the gifts he had planned, but mother must have something to bring that light into her eyes that he loved to see. He was quite sure this lovely pottery would turn the trick. He could almost hear her say, "Oh, Kenneth, I've wanted something like this all my life!"

The purchase thrilled him with a strange satisfaction. He knew that he wouldn't have got the same joy out of buying something ordinary. He wasn't going to sneer any more at people buying "gee-gaws." Christmas seemed to call for something different. There should be practical gifts, too; no Christmas tree was complete without handkerchiefs, sweaters, hose and gloves, and such things, but there should be other things, too. . . . Man did not live by bread alone, Kenneth was finding out; other things were necessary.

Suddenly his face broke into a grin. That's the very thing he would do. He would buy every last one of the family something practical, but he would also buy them something that he felt they would love to have: some bit of beauty or frivolity that they would not otherwise get.

The money that he was spending had come to him in a letter from his grandfather a few days before. "Buy Christmas gifts for the family with this," the old man had written. "It is quite a sum for a young fellow to spend alone, but I am sure that you will do it wisely. And I want your report of what you bought after the holidays are over."

Kenneth had felt sure that his grandfather would want him to buy sensible things, but now, he felt differently. Something inside of him seemed to say that the way he was going to spend the money now was exactly as his grandfather wanted him to. What a letter he would have to write—surely he could put all the new-found joy that he was experiencing into every line.

For now Kenneth was really in tune with the spirit of Christmas. There was not a shopper on the streets as happy as he was. Every counter seemed to have taken on new interest; shopping was really a pleasure, the biggest thrill that he had known in a long time.

He hurried to the book counter. Jane was going to have those leather-bound volumes of essays that she had wanted for so long. And Jimmie—Jimmie was going to get that motion picture machine he had been talking about. Gee, he could see Jimmie's face on Christmas morning; wouldn't he get a thrill out of showing the thing to his friends. And dad, well, dad was going to get a new set of golf clubs, a brand new bag of drivers, mashies, and putters! And grandfather was going to get a letter about the shopping trip and its results that would lift him right out of his chair!

And suddenly there with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men. Luke 2: 1-14.

And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds. Luke 2: 17-18.

"Come, Let Us Adore Him," Happy Christmas Thought

THERE is a magical pause, a mysterious something in the air, an awakening of man's best and sweetest instincts as the Yuletide carols ring out the hallowed words: "Peace on earth, good will toward men." A pause when even the most sullen, forbidding, hard-hearted person feels an urge of the soul within him, to join in the merry festival of Christmas.

Then, too, there is magic in red holly berries, gray green branches of bewitching mistletoe, and the perfume of woody evergreens, melting wax and the burning log. How mysteriously they recall sweet thoughts of long ago to the elders! How they fill the hearts of playful children with joyous delight!

Christmas is the significance of childhood, for almost two thousand years ago the Christ Child brought the redeeming message of love to the world. Love that keeps the little flame of hope burning; love that gives patience and courage to endure the problems of life; love that prompts the giving and receiving of gifts.

When Wise Men of the East, men of profound learning, saw a brilliant star and followed it, they found this little messenger of love in his rude and humble resting place, and they laid their most precious gifts before him.

These gifts were highly symbolical. Gold to a King, the King of Love and Humanity. Frankincense to a Divinity, the God of human needs. Myrrh for a man, and for the sorrow that redeems. Thus they recognized in a little Child, the King, the Divine and the Man.

As we commemorate Christ's birth each Yuletide, there is a radiant warmth and spirit of love in the giving and receiving of gifts; we pay homage and reverence to our King, our God and our Redeemer.—Agnes Myers.

MANY TYPES OF HOLLY

HOLLY, so popular as a Christmas decoration, is most abundant along the bottom lands of eastern Texas and southern Arkansas. There are about 175 species of holly found throughout the world, the largest being the American holly which attains a height of 50 feet. The red-berried holly is most common, although some species bear yellow berries and others black.

Ancient German Christmas: Belief
Germans of ancient times believed that crumbs of bread made at Christmas, and which fell on the ground, would grow into little star flowers with miraculous healing powers.

Santa Claus as Usual
"Santa Claus is comin' around as usual in December," said Uncle Eben, "tryin' to bring along enough good cheer to beat de tax collector."

Non-Christians and Christmas
Non-Christians frequently join in the social observance of the day. To them, it simply has no religious significance.

His First Christmas

by Earle Hooker Eaton

RING up the Pole and telephone
Without a moment's pause,
Or by the wireless make it known
To dear old Santa Claus,
That Papa's Boy and Mama's Joy,
And Sister's Precious Mite,
While glad bells clang will gaily hang
His stocking up tonight!

"Ting-ling! Ting-ling! Hello, hello!
Is that you Santa, dear?
Be sure your reindeer hear your 'Whod!'
When you are passing here.
What's that? You'll come and bring a drum.
A jumping-jack and ball,
And other toys for little boys?
Dear Saint, you're best of all!"

'Tis Christmas morn, and to his shop
Old Santa homeward flies;
'Tis five o'clock, but open pop
The baby's roguish eyes.
We're dead for sleep, but out we creep,
And dress at once to get
What Santa kind, has left behind
For Toddekins, our pet.

From Pole to Pole there's surely not
A babe more pleased than he,
And how he crows, the happy tot,
And gurgles in his glee.
The jumping-jack, the ducks that quack,
The drum, the horns, the ball,
The chicks that peep, the horse, the sheep,
He tries to eat them all!

On this his first glad Christmas lark,
The toys with blocks he pelts,
He makes old Noah wish the Ark
Had landed somewhere else!
A soldier blue he breaks in two,
A puncture gives the drum,
He fills the air with legs and hair,
And then—he sucks his thumb!

The Sand-Man's surely come to town,
And soft is mummy's lap;
Clear up the wreck and snuggle down,
'Tis time to take a nap.
Then rock-a-bye, close each blue eye,
Rest, my darling, rest!
(He's fast asleep, with baby sheep Hugged tight against his breast!)

Mistletoe, a Tree Parasite

Despite its popularity as a Christmas green, there is little worry about conserving the country's supply of mistletoe. For this attractive plant, with its shiny dark leaves and waxy white berries, grows as a parasite high on the branches of trees and does considerable damage to its host trees. Science has revealed that the mistletoe seeds are carried from tree to tree by birds.

Christmas Warning

"De selfish man," said Uncle Eben, "mustn't be surprised if de only way he can be sure of a 'Merry Christmas' is by talkin' it into a phonograph record."

At Christmas play and make good cheer,
For Christmas comes but once a year.

SEWER SYSTEM

ASSURED ERLANGER—BY SALE OF $40,000 WORTH OF BONDS—DISPOSAL PLANT ALSO TO BE CONSTRUCTED

The city of Erlanger will have a sewer system and disposal plant in the near future, it was learned Friday. The construction of the system was assured Thursday night when the town trustees sold $40,000 worth of bonds, voted at the November election, to Hirsch & Co. and Fox Elnhorn, Cincinnati. The bonds were sold on a four per cent basis with a premium of $460, making the net cost 3.95 per cent.

The assurance of the system was completed immediately after the bonds were sold and contracts for the construction work were given to Coldseat Brothers Corporation, Dearborn, Michigan. Work is expected to start soon, according to Russell Victor, Town Attorney.

More than 100 P. W. A. workers will be employed on the construction of the system for at least six months. The entire project is to cost $137,000, of which $42,000 is a grant. The remainder will be raised by special assessment.

BOONE COUNTY RELIEF CONDITIONS

At present there are 103 families within the bounds of Boone county who are receiving relief as compared with 254 families who were receiving relief two years ago. Of these 103 families there are 51 unworkable families which were cared for the past month by an appropriation of the state made possible by Gov. Laffoon. As yet a solution for the care of these families in the future has not been solved.

There are three WPA projects in the county which employ a number of the relief workers, however, a number of others are unable to work on these projects as they live too great a distance to travel daily.

Stanley Clore was a pleasant caller here Tuesday afternoon.

The local merchants are well supplied with Christmas supplies and welcome you to visit them.

NEW DEAL

FAVORED IN KENTUCKY RESULTS OF LITERARY DIGEST POLL INDICATE

Kentucky ranks high among seven southern states that have shown their staunch support of New Deal policies in the Literary Digest Poll. As the poll continues more than half the nation is represented in the vote. Results have been received from twenty-six states. Of 642,711 votes a total of 42.67 per cent is registered for the New Deal and 57.24 against it.

The figures show Kentucky's total votes to be 17,064 of which 10,186 or 59.69 per cent for President Roosevelt's policies and 6978 or 40.31 per cent against the Chief Executive's administration.

This small number of votes cast in the Literary Digest poll vote is not a sufficient amount to get an accurate account of the popularity of the New Deal policies but votes are being mailed in enormous numbers and it is believed that a fairly accurate prediction can be made later.

REV. H. C. RUNYAN

DIES OF HEART ATTACK EARLY FRIDAY—HAD PREACHED 34 YEARS AT LATONIA CHRISTIAN CHURCH—LARGE CROWD ATTENDS FUNERAL

Rev. H. C. Runyan, pastor of the Latonia Christian church and one of the most prominent leaders in social and civic affairs of Northern Kentucky for 34 years, died suddenly of heart attack at his home early Friday at the age of 62 years. He had been ill for almost a year but not seriously enough to keep him from his many duties.

Thursday Rev. Runyan married two couples and preached a funeral service for Miss Minnie Lawrence, of Covington. He was to marry two couples and preach another funeral service Friday, and it was at this funeral that Rev. Runyan asked Henry Linneman, funeral director, to take charge as he felt ill.

From the standpoint of service Rev. Runyan was Covington's oldest minister. His church celebrated its 34th anniversary of his pastorate this fall and during this time his congregation had grown from 22 members to 1300.

During Rev. Runyan's many years of serving Northern Kentuckians he preached hundreds of funeral services and married more than 4,000 couples. He was a member and active worker in numerous organizations as well as being an honorary member of several organizations.

Surviving Rev. Runyan are his widow, Mrs. Ida May Runyan, a son, Huston Runyan, three grandchildren, Rebecca, Robert and Louise Runyan, all of Covington, and a sister, Nola Barnhart, Pittsburg. Rev. Runyan was born in Lancaster, Ohio, in 1873, and moved to Ludlow at an early age where he worked his way through the Ludlow schools and then he graduated from Transylvania College, Lexington, and the Ohio Military Institute, Cincinnati.

Memorial services of the combined Bible School and church membership of Rev. Runyan's church was conducted at 10:30 a. m., Sunday morning. Funeral services were held Monday.

MAKES SPLENDID RECORD IN TESTING BOONE CO. HERDS

Dr. Kenneth Ryle, Veterinarian, of Burlington, made a splendid record the past year in eliminating Bang's disease from Boone county herds. Four hundred and eighty-three herds and approximately 5,500 head of cattle were tested. Eleven and four tenths per cent of these animals reacted to the test and were sold for slaughter.

There are 11,812 cattle in Boone county, according to the 1935 census. Fifty-eight additional herds were tested in 1934 making a total of 541 herds to-date or approximately 55 per cent of all cattle of the county have been tested.

The Bang's disease elimination program is voluntary among dairy men and cattle producers. This disease represents the greatest single disease loss among Boone-co. cattle because of lowered milk flow, lowered vitality of animals and loss of calves. Recently health officials have discovered large numbers of cases of undulant or Malta fever present in people who drink milk from affected animals.

Every dairyman and preferably every cattle producer should clean up his herd while he can secure free testing service and receive pay for all animals that react. Those who are interested in having their herds tested should call Dr. Ryle at Burlington or may leave word at the County Agent's Office.

CONSTANCE BOY ELECTED VICE PRESIDENT OF JUNIOR CLASS AT UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY

The elections were under the supervision of the Men's Student Council, and the officers were elected by those students recommended by the deans of the various colleges in the University.

L. T. Utz, of Florence, former sheriff of Boone county, was in the county seat, Tuesday.

THEY AREN'T WRONG

Sixty-three million American citizens can't be wrong, said an insurance writer recently.

That is the number of people in this country who own life insurance policies. For their protection, and for the protection of their dependents, some $80,000,000 of insurance contracts have been written.

Even in these days of astronomical figures, when we speak of a billion as easily as we spoke of a million several years ago, eighty billion dollars is a lot of money. And the importance of that vast sum cannot be entirely expressed in terms of money. It means that millions of men and women have worked hard, have paid their own way in the world and have managed to put something aside against the future. It means that through their wisdom and foresight they have created estates, assured education for their children, guaranteed themselves financially independent old age. It means that self-reliance, first and greatest of American virtues, still exists.

Sixty-three million of our citizens have bought life insurance policies calling for the eventual payment of $80,000,000,000. That's something worth remembering.

"GETTIN' ALONG" WITHOUT THE RAILROAD?

Eighteen months ago a railroad abandoned its branch line between Sioux City, Iowa, and Wynot, Nebraska, a distance of about fifty miles. The abandonment was made necessary by truck competition, which has caused the railroad to carry on operations on the branch line at a substantial loss for some time.

The trucking concerns serving the area assured interested townspeople and farmers that they could entirely fill any transportation need. This claim was taken into consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission in permitting the abandonment.

Here, according to the Minneapolis Grain and Feed Review, are some of the results:

First, grain shipped from the affected area to Sioux City, thence to be sent east, was carried by railroads at 3 cents a bushel. Today the rate is 10 cents a bushel.

In the days of the railroad, coal was laid down in the farthest town on the branch line for 20 cents a ton. Today the truck rate to close-in-points is $2.00 a ton.

Real estate values in the railroadless area are at new lows. Town homes that cost $4,000 cannot find buyers at $500. Farm values have dropped from 50 to 75 per cent.

The branch line railroad paid $28,000 each year in taxes to local units of government. That sum has now been shifted to the remaining taxpayers.

This is no argument against trucks, in their proper field. It simply illustrates the fact that those who think an area can "get along without the railroad," don't know what they're talking about.

Editorial of the Week

AGRICULTURE'S BIG PROBLEM

During the last two years, a tremendous change has occurred in the agricultural situation in the United States. From a food exporting nation, we have become a food importing nation. Where we used to have heavy surpluses of such basic crops as grain, dairy products, lard, meats, nuts and others, which could be shipped abroad, we now suffer shortages and must bring in foreign farm products to fill our needs.

Various reasons are behind this. Without arguing the merits of the AAA, its crop restriction policy paved the way for scarcity of crops. And the great drought, coming on top of crop restriction and destruction, completed the job. Thus a substantial part of the American consuming market was at least temporarily lost to the American farmer, to the benefit of the foreign farmer.

This situation has put a big job up to the American farmer. More than ever before, he must seek to make supply of agricultural products meet the domestic demand. More than ever before, he must try to scientifically develop and stabilize his markets. In this work, the farmer-owned and controlled agricultural cooperatives will play a pre-eminent part—they alone give the farmer a permanent, non-political marketing machine with which to do the job.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS

If there is one single group upon which the President has been counting on next year in the election it is organized labor. Its present membership is approximately 4,000,000—these voting in anything like a unit would be potent. The administration has done everything possible to placate this group. Lewis openly threatened a strike and forced support of the Guffey coal bill, and he got it.

A recent compilation shows that there are 26 states in the union which have paid out more in processing taxes than the farmers have received in checks.

The cheaper a product can be produced, the cheaper it can be sold; the lower the selling price, the larger the number of people who can buy and use it.

There are a number of Boone county families that are financially unable to enjoy the Holiday happiness and spirit—through no fault of their own. These people have feeling, imagination appreciation as do those who are planning an elaborate Christmas celebration—"Do unto others as you would that they....."

If you think business is not better than it was last year—ask your merchants. All concerns are doing a much larger business than last year.

WHAT NEVER TO DO

Editor's Note.—In looking through the old files of The Recorder I came across a piece of interesting philosophy which was written by the late W. L. Riddell, at that time editor of the paper.

Never be ashamed to work—even if you have to work some other fellow.

Never talk too much—a stiff lower jaw is as useful as a stiff upper lip.

Never judge a woman's cooking by the cake she sends to a church social.

Never buy a thermometer in the summer time, they are always lower in the winter.

Never threaten to kiss a pretty girl—always keep her pardon afterwards.

Never make two bites of a cherry—you might cut a worm into.

Never allow yourself to get the big head—it will cost you too much for hats.

Never strike a man below the belt—unless you are aiming at his pocket book.

Never turn over a new leaf—unless you have something sensible to write on the page.

Never hang your head even if you are guilty—the sheriff will attend to the hanging.

Never marry for money—but always for love, if a girl has money though try to love her.

Never marry a girl who is not industrious—you might want her to support you some time.

Never wear a tight corset—if you must be squeezed let some man do it.

Never steal your neighbor's good name—even if yours is wore out.

Never let your wife wear the trousers—buy her bloomers.

Never judge a man by the clothes he wears—form your estimate by the wearing apparel of his wife.

Never marry a girl who thinks she may learn to love you—a little learning is a dangerous thing.

Never marry a large hearted man—he has a capacity for loving too many women at the same time.

Never carry a cane unless you are crippled—for if you are not physically you are mentally.

Never play cards with women—as they always make you-pneumatically tired.

Never tell a hair-raising tale to a football player—always spring it on a bald-headed man.

Never kiss a girl in a crowd—she prefers it done in private.

Never be a clam—if you must, be anything of a kind, be a turtle; then you will have a little snap about you.

FOR YOUR CONSIDERATION

1. A good Christmas for your neighbor as well as for yourself.
2. Make few resolutions for the new year and stick to them.
3. Remember your loved ones on Christmas. A small remembrance will go a long way.
4. Watch your fires—a spark in a defective flue may leave you homeless.
5. Mail your Christmas "pack," ages and letters early and help balance the postman's work because there will be some who naturally wait until the last.
6. Review your year's work and see just what accomplishments you made then set a goal for 1936.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Parole Boards at Large

Oxnard, Calif.—Did it ever occur to you this might be a happier, or, anyhow, a safer land for the rest of us to live in if those in high places were just a bit fussier about the criminals they let out and the aliens they let in? Apparently almost any known radical from overseas can drop in without being registered or finger-printed or naturalized or anything, and make himself at home even to the extent of trying openly to undermine our government.

Irvin S. Cobb

Whereas, if all these violent foreign-born reds who lack citizenship papers were laid end to end, it would indeed be a lovely sight, especially if each one had a fly in his hand. As for the average chronic offender against the laws—well, on his way into the penitentiary, he's likely to meet himself coming out, with release papers in his pocket and hope in his heart. For him a sentence is just a pleasant week-end back among the boys at the old manse.

Here today and gone tomorrow—that's the grand idea. Might I make so bold as to suggest there would be more habitual criminals staying in prison if we had fewer parole boards going at large?

Old-Fashioned Ideas

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL makes a statement on the heels of a similar statement by the British foreign secretary, and, if you dig down through the diplomatic spinach under which such utterances are always buried, you'll find that neither nation is deeply tickled over the plan of Japan to gobble up North China by what is called politely an "autonomy movement"—But if that wasn't its fashionable name it could pass anywhere for an armed invasion. Unless you're a statesman, you wouldn't be able to notice the difference.

For some days the impression has been getting around that the Chinese weren't so hot over the idea, either. Well, the rabbit that's about to be absorbed by the python rarely does show any real enthusiasm.

Here's the curious thing, though—apparently both Mr. Hull and his English brother still labor under the whimsical belief that a treaty by a stronger nation guaranteeing the integrity of a weaker nation is meant to be kept. How quaintly old-fashioned.

Prison Petulance.

THAT on the same day three jail-breaks should occur at places as widely separated as Boston in Massachusetts, Nashville in Tennessee and Muskogee in Oklahoma is only to be accounted for as proof of a growing wave of dissatisfaction with prison life on the part of the boys.

How much better we manage in some states I might name where it would seem a boarder has merely to mention to the parole board that he's getting bored with the accommodations and craves to go and sin some more. "Well, so long warden," says the departing one. "Hold my mail that comes and try to keep my old room for me—the one with the southern exposure and the radio set. It's got good-by, just au revoir."

But no, those chaps who blasted their way out got so irritable they just couldn't wait. It all goes to show that petulance never pays in this world. Kindly be patient, fellows, and, sooner or later, the sentimentalist will perfect a plan to turn practically everybody loose immediately after conviction, thus curing the present unavoidable annoyance of a round trip to the hoosegow.

Joint Debates on Religion.

A CONTROVERSIAL gentleman, who thinks he read between the lines of one of these squibs a hidden meaning which I certainly never meant to put there, writes in, challenging me to a joint debate on socio-religious grounds, whatever they are. Much obliged, but the answer, briefly and in a word, is no.

So far as I've observed, the only person who ever wins a joint debate is the one who takes no part in it.

Furthermore, government statistics show that the sum total of results wherein a listener at a religious argument became converted on the spot from one side to the other consists of the case of a gentleman named Erasmus K. Doowhittle, residing near Wolf Tail, Indian territory, in the year 1889; and he switched right back again at the next change of the moon, being kind of feeble-minded to start with.

A Laugh on Berlin.

WOULDN'T it seem sort of put the laugh on somebody if we sent a lot of Jewish athletes—and there are many splendid ones scattered around—to Berlin on our Olympic team, and our team mopped up?

Everybody in Hollywood turned out for a party to H. G. Wells. I think they thought he was a visiting producer.

Sure sign of returning prosperity—women have started in again, marrying the Midvian boys.

SALES SET NEW NOVEMBER RECORD—MANY USED CARS ALSO BEING BOUGHT

Retail sales by Chevrolet dealers in the United States for November totalled 91,959. This figure not only sets a new record for all Novembers in the history of the Chevrolet Motor Company, but also exceeds the best total sales for any month in Chevrolet history following the introduction of new models.

W. E. Holler, vice president and general sales manager, announcing the record-breaking sales of newly introduced 1936 models, declared that the buying wave has affected not only new cars but used cars, of which Chevrolet dealers sold 111,450 in November. This is the highest November record for used car sales ever reported by Chevrolet.

The largest previous November new car record was 64,973, in 1926. The new record of 91,959 is more than double the November new car sales of 1929, the year in which Chevrolet's highest 12-month sales record was established.

The best previous introductory month sales record was in January, 1928, when 59,646 sales were recorded.

Despite the extraordinary demand for new models, Mr. Holler declared, the end of the month found Chevrolet dealers well supplied with the 1936 cars. To maintain the supply, so as to assure prompt deliveries through the remainder of the year, the December production schedule has been set to produce 100,000 cars during the month.

Warren Flick, of Bellevue, was in Burlington a short while Monday night.

Herman "Hap" Eaton, a former employee of The Recorder, was a friendly caller to our office Wednesday. "Hap" is now employed by the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Joe Huey, of Union, was a business visitor in Burlington Friday.

John Lambert spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Paul Rhue and family.

Hubert Brady, of near Burlington, was mingling with friends in town, Monday.

Earl Sullivan and wife spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Nichols and family.

Dick Ligon was among the early Christmas shoppers in town, Monday.

Mrs. Pearl Kelly, of Florence, has been quite ill for the past week, but according to the latest reports she is improving.

The local school will dismiss Friday evening for the holidays and will not start again until the 6th day of the new year.

Daniel Bullock, formerly of Hebron, has associated himself with the Catherman Funeral Home of Ludlow. They will be known as Bullock and Catherman, funeral directors.

Washington county farmers have threshed an average of 150 pounds of Korean lespedeza seed to the acre. Unfavorable weather at the time of threshing reduced the crop for the county, which has been estimated at 400,000 pounds.

W. B. Rogers, of Bellevue, received an average of $35.15 on a 2,592 pound crop of tobacco at Carrollton, Wednesday. Seven baskets of Mr. Rogers' tobacco averaged 38c a pound.

Several from here attended the funeral of Rev. H. C. Runyan, Sunday. Rev. Runyan was well known in this community as he was connected with the commencement exercises of the local school several times in the past and has preached many funeral services here.

Three hunters from Newport who were hunting in front of the home of W. W. Craddock one day last week misjudged the direction of the house and shot at a rabbit which was directly in line with the Craddock home. The shot broke several windows and barely missed Mrs. Craddock who was at work in the house. The sudden noise and scare caused Mrs. Craddock to faint.

Alvin Franks, of the Burlington-Florence pike, who has been quite ill with pneumonia, is some better. We recognize the untiring efforts of the local school children in their successful campaign of selling Christmas seals.

Elmer Jarrell, of Bellevue, was in Burlington a while Friday. Mr. Jarrell was in high spirits over the returns of his tobacco crop which he sold at the Big Burley house in Carrollton. 2300 pounds averaged him $31.73.

Only Sally Ann, a two-act comedy, given by the local colored school Saturday night was attended by a large crowd.

An orchestra composed of Boone county Adult Education Classes will furnish music for a Community Charity Benefit at Lloyd Auditorium, Erlanger, Thursday night Dec. 19th, at 8:15. Twenty young students from Hebron and Florence will play between acts under the direction of Lillian G. Faber.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Riley, of Augusta, Ky., were called to this county when Mr. Riley's aunt, Mrs. O. N. Scott, of Petersburg, passed away, Saturday night. They arrived Monday afternoon, but were unable to remain as Mr. Riley's duties as a steamboat pilot forced him to return.

The Burlington High School basketball teams will meet the Hamilton teams Friday night at the local gym. Hamilton defeated Burlington earlier in the season and the Tom Cats and Kittens will be out for revenge, so come out and boost your teams.

Patriarch Camp No. 12004 of Burlington entertained its members with a Turkey supper at their hall on Tuesday evening, December 17. The evening was enjoyed by all present. Round table discussion followed the delicious meal. Quite a few presents were furnished by the State Manager, J. M. Clifford, who was unable to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Lubert, Milwaukee "newly weds," were arrested and fined $100 and costs for driving while intoxicated.

James Lee McNeely, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest McNeely, of Grant, who is a senior at Western Kentucky Teachers College, Bowling Green, made a pleasant call in Burlington, Wednesday. ## Basketball Notes

HEBRON

The seemingly unbeatable Hebron Cardinals, which appear to be one of the strongest teams of the county, added another decisive victory to their unblemished record Friday night, December 13, when they defeated the New Haven quintet to the tune of 29 to 13. The first quarter indicated that the game would be evenly matched but the Hebron lads opened fire thereafter and were never in danger again. The New Haven team which is composed of mostly unseasoned material should be given credit for their courageous efforts and clean style of play.

The Hebron girls were less fortunate as they were defeated by the New Haven girls 17-16, in a close well played game.

The next games on the Hebron schedule are with Hamilton, Jan. 10th.

BURLINGTON

In an interesting and well matched game the Burlington Tomcats were defeated by the Burlington Independent team Friday night by the score of 20 to 27. The Kiltens however were more fortunate as they defeated the local independent girls.

Burlington will play Hamilton at the local court Friday night, Dec. 20th.

MRS. CORDELIA SCOTT

Mrs. Mary Cordelia Scott, Petersburg, wife of Mr. O. N. Scott, passed away early Sunday morning at her home after a lingering illness of several months at the age of 70 years, 5 months and 7 days.

Mrs. Scott united with the Bellevue Baptist church at an early age and remained an active member there until she and Mr. Scott moved to Owenton and then to Petersburg where she likewise moved her membership, respectively. She was a devoted wife and a good neighbor and will be greatly missed by all who knew her.

She is survived by her husband, O. N. Scott; three brothers, W. B. Arnold, Hugh Arnold, both of Bellevue, and A. F. Arnold, of Indiana; an adopted son, Elsa Scott, Louisville, and a host of other relatives. Her four sisters have preceded her to the grave.

Funeral services were conducted at the Petersburg Baptist church with Rev. Dunaway officiating and being assisted by Rev. Smith, of the Bellevue Baptist church. Interment followed at the Petersburg cemetery.

BEAVER LICK

The death of R. H. C. Runyan brings sadness to many hearts. He had been the pastor of the Christian church here for more than four years and leaves many friends in this section who mourn his passing.

Wardleene, the small daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ward Sleet, suffered a broken leg at her home here last Wednesday. Dr. Bedinger was called, and after an examination of the limb advised she be taken to a hospital where X-Ray pictures could be made to determine the extent of her injuries. Raymond Roter took her to Bethesda Hospital in his car. The limb was set and placed in a cast and she was returned back home Friday. She is getting along nicely but will have to lie in bed for eight weeks.

It seems that the bridges on the highways are not wide enough for the Saturday night autoists, as two bridges between Idlewild and Petersburg were hit Saturday night. ## BOONE COUNTY FARMERS AAA PROGRAM

Boone county farmers in 1935 have received $90,674.35 benefit payments for their cooperation in the AAA programs, according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The above represents benefit payments that have passed through the County Agent's office since December 1 of last year.

Tobacco growers have received $63,390.00. Corn and Hog growers $26,313.08 and wheat growers $971.27. The benefit payments are for the final 1934 compliance on AAA contracts and first payments for 1935 compliance. There are 865 AAA tobacco contracts, 189 AAA Corn-Hog and 17 wheat contracts in effect in Boone county during 1935.

Hebron School News

Jingle bells! Jingle bells!
Jingle all the way
This is just one of the selections which the "Rhythm Band" of the Hebron School will render on Friday, Dec. 20. This is a new organization, which consists of 36 members of the lower grades. There will be instrumental solos as well as numbers by the entire band. We are sure that this scene of the younger students with their red and white capes and hats, will be a sensation.

Besides the band there will be other parts to the program. All in all, we know that you will enjoy the entire program. We are inviting everyone to attend this annual event, Friday afternoon, 2:40 E. S. T.

Those of the sixth grade who made an average of B or above for the third month were: Marcella Bradford, Anna Lou Ralston, Harry Lee Aylor, Nathaniel Jackson, Betty Williams, Osceola Williams, and Russell Conrad.

Also in the sixth grade there are plenty of live-wires when it comes to selling Christmas seals. Anna Lou Ralston has sold three hundred and ninety-five, while Betty Williams and Lewis Hossman have sold over one hundred. With the support of their fellow-classesmen they have sold over twelve hundred and have hopes of reaching the goal of 2,000.

In the seventh and eighth grades there are two students with the average of A for the entire term so far. They are Aubry Long and M. rry Yates. Keep up the good work, girls.

The High School will present its Christmas program on Friday evening, Dec. 20th at 8 o'clock E. S. T. The play "Long Ago in Old Judea" will be presented by students selected from the various rooms with the Glee Club rendering the carols. An invitation is extended to all who wish to attend.

Since this is the last time this year that the school will have any news, we wish everyone who may read this A Very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.
